Somerset st., North Plainfield.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy and sell first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I claim no secret process, but am satisfied to base a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shops, and feel sure from doing the larger portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material at Right Prices is a binding agreement for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same grade of work cheaper than I can.

Hoping to be favored with your patronage, I am yours respectfully,

BURGLARS SUSPECTS HELD

Their Side of the Case was Not Heard by Recorder Thomas, who Committed Them to the County Jail Without Bail.

After more or less delay the hearing in the case of the State against Dennis Murray and John Neuman, charged with suspicion of being responsible for the burglaries committed in Prideville, North Plainfield, last Friday morning between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock, when the homes of Marshal Kliner and John Ryman were entered and relieved of several valuable articles, was held Saturday afternoon before Recorder Thomas, of the borough. The men were held for the Grand Jury.

The arrests occasioned considerable interest among the friends of the two men, and in consequence a great crowd gathered. But there was disappointment for them as no one but those directly interested were allowed to be present.

The case was called promptly at 4 o'clock. Judge DeMeza and his brother, William DeMeza, appeared for Murray and Neuman, while for the State Councilmen T. J. Carey and George T. Rogers were present, besides a number of witnesses for both plaintiffs and defendants. At the beginning the recorder informed the counsel that according to law he had no jurisdiction to try the case, and he would only ascertain if there was sufficient evidence to hold the defendants for the Grand Jury. The counsel for the defendants recognized the law, but held that they had a right to demand justice in that as much as the court would not allow them to place their witnesses on the stand it certainly ought to release the prisoners unless there was a sufficient amount of evidence to hold them.

George W. Kliner, son of the marshal, was the first witness called, and he told what he knew of the circumstances surrounding the case. He was at home when the burglaries were committed and it was his goods that were stolen from his room. He testified to having found a front window open and also to seeing foot-prints about the house. He traced the steps and learned that they led to the shed where he discovered Murray and Neuman asleep. He then notified his father who returned home as soon as possible.

Marshal Kliner was the next witness and he related what he knew. He said that his son came after him and that after reporting at the station house when going off duty he returned to his home and found the two men asleep in the shed in the rear of his property. He called them out, but at the time he did not know either one of them. Incidentally he felt about their clothes but did not find the stolen articles. For the time being he placed the men under arrest and walked as far as Wilson avenue with them. At the latter street all three stopped and talked a few minutes. They then returned to the marshal's home when the foot prints were measured. They seemed to tally exactly. After that the men were allowed to go and they came to Plainfield.

John Ryman was next placed on the stand. He was one of the losers as a result of the burglaries. All he could tell was that the foot-prints seemed to tally with the shoes worn by the defendants, and he found these foot-prints about his house. David Allen also testified that an attempt had been made to enter his home, but the effort was not successful. He also found foot-prints the same as discovered by the other witnesses.

At this point a rest was taken and Judge DeMeza, for the counsel, made a strong plea for their clients. He stated that as yet no evidence had been produced whereby the two men could be held, and he rehearsed the case to prove his statements. He asked the recorder to give them the privilege of placing a few witnesses on the stand to prove that these two men had nothing to do with the burglaries. The recorder refused, however, and said that he had no authority to try the case or to extend such privilege. It was his duty to ascertain if the suspicion was sufficient to hold the men on the evidence produced. This he decided had been proved, and he therefore held the men for the Grand Jury. As such a case is not bailable in a Justice court the men were committed to the county jail at Somerville, and they were taken to that place Saturday night by Constable Hansen.

To Furnish Hotel Music.

P. Ludwig Conde, the well known musician of this city, has accepted an offer from Manager Charles E. Leland, of the Windsor Hotel, Fifth avenue, New York, to furnish music and conduct the orchestra for the Hotel Chilwold, Lake Massaweple, in the Adirondacks for the season. This hotel is one of the leading society resorts in the Adirondacks during the summer months and is every year thronged with guests from New York and surrounding large cities. Besides the concert that is given in the dining hall every evening, hops and informal dances are frequent.

THE BURGLAR AT LAST?

NOTED CROOK WHO MAY HAVE ROBBED FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

Patrick Flannigan Arrested in Ohio, Charged With Being Concerned in the Robbery of the Yonkers Bank.

After over two years from the time the First National Bank robbery took place in this city, the police have made a capture of a notorious thief who they believe was concerned in it. He is Patrick Flannigan, best known in the world of crooks as "Little Patsey." Flannigan was arrested in Elyria, O., Friday, charged with being one of the men who robbed the Yonkers Saving Bank on April 12th last.

It is said that ever since the robbery of the First National Bank was enacted on April 22d, 1895, when $22,675 was got away with, the Pinkerton detectives have been working to ferret out the burglars. Time and again they have followed up all kinds of clews, but always without capturing their man.

Though it was never possible to determine just how many men were concerned in the operation that relieved the First National Bank of the above sum of money, the detectives believe that six skilled burglars were in the deal.

Flannigan was only twenty-two years old at the time the crime was committed, and it is believed that it was he who did the sneak act by carrying the money out of the bank vault by some hocus pocus. Since then he has been concerned in several robberies.

The events leading up to the arrest of Flannigan are most interesting. At the time of the Yonkers sensation no one seemed able to give anything like an intelligent description of the men in the job. Lyman Cobb, the aged cashier of the bank, was so bewildered by the affair, that he was able to give the detectives little aid. A few days after the robbery, however, he recalled quite distinctly the faces of the men who had held him up. He visited the detective agency in New York and inspected the pictures of many noted bank thieves. One after another was passed by the aged cashier, until his eyes rested upon a photograph of "Little Patsey."

Flannigan kept out of the way for several weeks. It is believed that he came back to New York soon after the robbery with "Wally" Connors. If so, he did not stay long. He soon went west, and was traced to Elyria, his old home.

Flannigan in addition to his nick name of "Little Patsey," is known also as Parker, John Moran and "Patsey" Harrington.

FOOTED IT ON A FAIR DAY.

ANNUAL MAY WALK OF THE GESANG AND TURN VEREIN SOCIETY.

The Objective Point Was at Mr. Krause's Farm on Johnston's Drive Where a Highly Enjoyable Day Was Spent by the Party

The annual May day walk of the Gesang and Turn Verein was held Sunday. The members and their wives and friends left the city about 5 o'clock, the objective point being the farm on Johnson's drive owned Mr. Krausse, of this city. The Plainfield delegation was joined by a delegation of about twenty members of the bicycle section of the Newark Turners. In all there were over one hundred people in the party.

All sorts of games were indulged in by the merry party. In the morning an attempt was made to play a game of base ball, but the ground was too wet and it had to be given up. In the afternoon a tug-of-war was enjoyed between a team from the home society and a picked team from the visitors. The result was a tie. A feature was the presence of the Scandinavian Glee Club and some excellent music was rendered. There were solos by Joseph Martin, Charles Dresselt, and selections by the singing section of the home society and the visitors.

Of course, the refreshments was a highly important feature and everybody was treated to the best the market affords. It was about 5 o'clock when the start for home was made and all was testified to having spent a pleasant day.

Scholars Show Their Work.

The Fifth Grade A. and B. classes of the North Plainfield Public High School gave an entertainment and exhibit Thursday afternoon which was very creditable. The programme consisted of recitations by Nettie Zimmer, Irving Harned, Grace Gaddis, Emma Powers, John Carney, Flossie Demarest, Eva Titus, Anna Bodine, William Brown, Mabelle Parlee, and songs by Miss Atlanta Nischwitz, Belle DeMott, Clyde Slater, and a piano solo by Clyde Slater. The music was arranged by Miss Sydenham, while Miss Tandem and Miss McCain were in charge as teachers of the classes. The platform was prettily decorated with flowers and palms.

TRINITY NEEDS ROOM.

PLAN FOR THE ENLARGEMENT OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL QUARTERS.

H. E. Gayle Suggests That the Church Proper Be Elevated Seven Feet and the Improvement Built Beneath It.

For a long time the need of more church room has been urgently felt by the church workers and attendants of Trinity Reformed church, and the lack of ample facilities has, in a way, often times deterred them from progressing further in their efforts to extend the gospel. This has been especially so of the Sunday-school, which is now the second in size of attendance in the city, as the room allotted to its use is filled to overflowing. While, of course, none who desire to enter the school are turned away, it is a fact that the officers are unable to invite those who do not now attend a Sunday-school, simply because there is not room to quarter them in.

At a meeting of the consistory of the church last Thursday at the home of Elder Geo. VanEmburgh, the matter of providing more room was taken up and a plan that seems entirely feasible, discussed. H. E. Gayle, the well-known contractor, who is a member of the consistory, offered a plan that would seem to remedy the trouble if put into operation.

It was to elevate the present building seven feet, and then beneath it construct a Sunday-school and lecture room that would be the size of the present auditorium floor, whereas, the present basement is only one-half the size of the floor surface of the church. The improvement, he proposes, would be divided into seven class rooms, ladies' parlors and other rooms needed in church work. The elevation of the church proper would make the new room two feet below the surface of the ground, thus making only three or four steps to get inside. There will be entrances on either side of the church instead of on one side as is now the case.

The present basement would be utilized as a storeroom and cellar for the heating apparatus.

If the improvements are made the whole edifice will probably be renovated, redecorated and new carpets laid, so as to appear as bright and handsome as a new building.

The whole matter of the improvements has been referred to G. L. VanEmburgh, H. E. Gayle and E. E. Anthony, and they will report at a future meeting of the consistory.

AN AFTERNOON RUNAWAY.

A Horse Belonging to Henry De Mott Ran Through Crowded Business Streets

A lively runaway occurred on Park and North avenues, Friday afternoon. The horse attached to Henry DeMott's express wagon was going down North avenue in the direction of Park avenue, when the wagon started up an unusual effort of the horse, struck against his hind feet. The horse, frightened by the contact, started to run. Alonzo Smith was driving and managed to guide the horse into Park avenue when he was thrown into the body of the wagon by a sudden bounce. The horse ran up Park avenue narrowly missing the vehicles with which the street was thronged. The frightened animal turned up Fifth street and ran for some distance before being stopped. No damage was done.

UNION'S GRAND JURY.

Brings in the Smallest Number of Indictments Known.

The Union County Grand Jury finished its labors for the May term Friday. The outcome was the smallest number of indictments that has ever been found at any term since the county was formed, and also the lowest in the magnitude of complaints considered.

The most serious of the lot was a case of breaking and entering, and nearly all the other indictments are assault and battery cases.

The Grand Jury brought in a presentment against Patrick Faughnan, William J. Corbett and Percy Van Houten for constructing an ancient Wahoo fence on the subway at Elizabeth, thereby causing a pond of putrid water to form.

The Grinder was ordered to abate the nuisance immediately.

PRINCETON GRADUATES ORGANIZE.

The Princeton Club of Union County Formed at Elizabeth Last Night.

A number of the members of the alumni of Princeton University, living in Union County, held a smoker at Elizabeth, last Thursday. The smoker was followed by a meeting at which the Princeton Club of Union County was regularly organized. The object of the meeting had been to get the old college men together and talk over an organization. It met with the hearty approval of all who were present and the organization was made at once. Justice McGee, of Elizabeth, was elected president; Dr. Ellis W. Hedges, of Plainfield, vice-president; and Dr. Frederick Bailey, of Elizabeth, secretary and treasurer. The trustees from Plainfield chosen were Leonidas Dennis and Dr. William H. Murray. Hon. A. D. Atwater and Judge Cross were chosen from Elizabeth.

CLAWSON GAVE ADVICE.

WROTE TO HIS RELATIVES TO LIVE AS THE BIBLE TAUGHT

The Whole Tone of His Letters Was to Avoid Living in Ignorance of the Scripture—He Seemed to Be Willing to Die.

Elmer Clawson, who was executed at Somerville last Wednesday, wrote the following letters to the persons named in them:

Somerville, N. J., May 11th, 1897.

My Dear Loving Mother—As this will be my last letter to you, I bid you farewell. How often I have regretted the good advice given me when now I see my folly. I hope it will be a lesson to my brothers and associates.

The time is fast approaching when I am soon to meet my God and my leader to eternal rest, and I am ready in body and soul; only too anxious for the hour to arrive. I hope it's God's will that I shall meet you there.

May His blessings rest upon you and father and my brothers and sisters.

We will soon understand it all. Your life and mine will soon be over. Thanks be to God Who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

It is my last wish, that you teach my brothers and sisters to love God and keep His commandments, and not follow the life I led here on this earth. It is sincerely wish that God's blessing will rest upon Mrs. Hodgotts, and her dear little children.

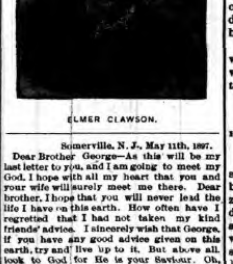
May God's blessing rest upon Sheriff Wyckoff and the entire force.

May God's blessing rest upon Johnny Amerman, for they have been very kind to me, and also upon Mr. Steele and Jimmy Meehan, for it is beyond my power to thank them enough.

Farewell, dear mother, until we meet again.

Elmer Clawson.

P. S.—On Christ the solid rock I stand, all other ground is sinking sand.



ELMER CLAWSON.

Somerville, N. J., May 11th, 1897.

Dear Brother George—As this will be my last letter to you, and I am going to meet my God, I hope with all my heart that you and your wife will surely meet me there. Dear brother, I hope that you will never lead the life I have on this earth. How often have I regretted that I had not taken my kind friends' advice. I sincerely wish that George, if you have any good advice given on the earth, try and live up to it. But above all look to God for He is your Saviour. Oh, George, what a comfort He has been to me. If I had only given myself to Him before, I would not have to suffer for this case. I find it's very easy, George, all you have to do is to put your trust in God and do what is right. It is my wish, George, that you live a straightforward, upright life. May God's blessing rest upon you and your family. Hoping that we will all meet in Heaven.

Farewell until we meet again.

Elmer Clawson.

Somerville, N. J., May 11th, 1897.

Dear Brother Charley—As the time is fast approaching when I will have to leave this world, I can feel that I am going to a better world, and my sincere wish is that I may meet you there. But, dear brother, you have a long ladder to climb, and if you will only climb it, you will surely get there. It is very easy if you only believe. Put your trust in God and do what is right. Go to church and Sunday-school and pray for God to help you. Read good books and associate in good company; serve God and keep His commandments.

Dear brother, don't put off until tomorrow what you can do today, for if you reach the top round of the ladder, you want to improve each shining hour, for you have a great work to do. It is very easy. All you have to do is to trust in God and do what is right.

Hoping I will meet you in Heaven, I bid you a farewell.

Elmer Clawson.

P. S.—Drop the anchor, furl the sail. I am safe within the vale.

Wednesday morning, Clawson dictated the following letter to Sheriff Wyckoff:

Somerville, N. J., May 12th, 1897.

W. H. H. Wyckoff:

My Dear Friend—I want you to say to all of my young friends that they must remember this Sunday, before they drink alone, and never be found in bad company, for I am sure that these have been the folly of my life. And now, young friends, take warning, for in me can see the folly of both. I am a happy boy now and want to meet you all in Heaven.

Sincerely yours,

Elmer Clawson.

RECEPTION TO DRUMMERS

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Terry Acted as Pleasant Hosts Last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Terry, Jr., of Manning avenue, gave a pleasant reception last Friday to the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, of which Mr. Terry is a member. About 8 o'clock the corps marched from their rooms to the home of Mr. Terry, and popular music was discoursed on the way over. When they reached their destination they were given a hearty welcome to the new home. All formalities were dispensed with and everybody went in for a good time.

During the evening there were vocal solos by Frank Manchester, Edward Vail and Mr. Clark; banjo solos by Willard Force and James Stryker, and sleight-of-hand performances by Horance Adams. Every number was well received and in many instances encores were given. After this part of the programme all present were invited to adjourn to the dining room where a sumptuous repast was in waiting. While the inner man was being filled there was considerable and good time in general. At a late hour the guests departed for home all wishing Mr. and Mrs. Terry many happy days and prosperity.

HORSES SUNDAY RUN.

WITHOUT A GUIDING REIN THEY WRECKED THE CARRIAGE.

Just as the bells were ringing for church, Sunday morning, a team, with a carriage dragging at their heels, rushed down Franklin place on a mad gallop, and only came to a standstill after crashing over an iron fence and colliding with a tree.

The team was the handsome pair of sorrels owned by Francis Wood, of Franklin place. The coachman had just harnessed them and was preparing to take the family to church, when he remembered that he had left something in the barn and ran back after it. When his back was turned they started first on a walk, then a trot and at last on a gallop.

They came out the driveway and went across the street on a run. They jumped the curb and carried the closed carriage on to the sidewalk. Frightened by the noise, the team plunged down the sidewalk in the direction of Putnam avenue, barely missing the trees at the side and scattering the pedestrians who were going to church.

The horses continued on their mad career, directly toward the iron fence that surrounds the residence and lawn of B. O. Bowers. They crossed Putnam avenue, jumping both curbs and then took the fence, clearing it together. The heavy carriage struck the fence with a loud crash and two of the wooden posts gave way while the iron rails were splintered by the shock. The carriage was not injured and the horses continued on their way across the lawn, bringing up against a tree. The horses passed on either side of the tree and slightly damaged the carriage and took the bark off the tree.

The frightened animals stopped and were held by Mr. Bower's coachman, who had seen the runaway and hurried to the scene of action.

HE WAS HEIR TO RICHES.

Huff Died Before Receiving $4,000,000 Left Him.

Lawyer Robert Carey's office, Davidson building, Jersey City, has been besieged in the past few days by citizens of Rahway and Plainfield, who during the years 1893 loaned money and sold property to one John Huff, who awoke one morning to find himself sole heir to a fortune of $4,000,000 left by a Californian.

The story is that Charles B. Easthoff, who bequeathed the estate to Huff, in 1876, came on from San Francisco, Cal., in company with his father to see the Centennial Exposition. The father was taken ill at Plainfield where he was attended by Dr. Gerard. Chas. Easthoff, who was then a lad of 12 years, formed a strong attachment for Huff, who was at that time employed by Dr. Gerard. They soon became fast friends, and later when old Mr. Easthoff had recovered and was about to leave for the West he gave $500 to Huff.

A few years later both Mr. and Mrs. Easthoff died. Charles, the son, was the only heir. In his will his father gave all his property to his son, with the condition attached thereto that none of the money should be given to his only living relative, an uncle, James Easthoff. Young Easthoff occasionally visited Huff.

After his death lawyers wrote Huff apprising him of his good fortune, at time advising him to keep quiet and not disclose to any one his windfall. This Huff did until 1893, when the news leaked out. The uncle then came on and protested the will, on the grounds of "lack of capacity" and "undue influence."

The case is still in litigation.

Huff, expecting that there would be no trouble in getting his money, bought a house from J. T. Vail, Plainfield real-estate dealer, for $13,000, agreeing to pay for it when he got his money.

He formerly boarded with Mrs. Neighbor, on East Front street, Plainfield, she agreeing to wait for payment until Huff received his millions.

Huff, according to Mrs. Neighbor, received only enough money up to the time of his death to pay his expenses to and from Philadelphia during the trial of the contest. At one time, she asserts, the executors drew up a check for $25,000 for Huff, but through the interference of the uncle some technicality was raised which prevented Huff from cashing it.

—The Bound Brook Chronicle names Senator Charles J. Reed, of Somerset, for the Republican nomination for Congressman from the Somerville district. As it is nearly two years before the people will elect a member of Congress in that district we can see no reason why The Chronicle should not amuse itself by flattering the Senator. When the time comes perhaps the name of the district's nominee may be Reed, or it may be Jones, Smith or Brown—or even Mason!—Flemington Democrat.

COULD NOT PROVE THEFT.

BROUGHT FROM SOUTH JERSEY AND TURNED LOOSE WITHOUT A CENT.

One man in South Jersey has lost his good opinion of Plainfield, his former home. He was suddenly charged with robbing a former friend, brought to Plainfield, but as there was no evidence against him, he was turned loose during a rain storm without a cent of money to get home. But for the kindness of his former employer, who loaned him sufficient funds to get a ticket, he might be here yet.

Sometime ago, John Simpson, who was employed as coachman for Marshall Bagin, of Clinton avenue, lost over $100, which he claimed had been removed from the trunk in his room. It happened that soon after its disappearance, a man who was employed at another house in the vicinity as coachman, left his position and went to the southern part of the state. Simpson laid the theft to the departed one and was on the lookout for him.

It was finally learned that the man they wanted was at Penn's Grove, Salem county, where he was employed as coachman by a prominent resident of that community. Constable Mattox went there to see about it and the man was willing to come here and explain that he was not implicated in the theft. Mattox made another trip there, yesterday afternoon, after conferring with Simpson, and late in the afternoon brought the man here.

The alleged theft was committed in Middlesex county, just across the line, but the man was brought before Justice Nash, to whose office also came Simpson.

The Justice absolutely refused to have anything to do with the matter, and after he learned that the only evidence was that the man had happened to leave town at the same time that the money left Simpson's trunk, he ordered them all away and declared the entire affair an outrage.

Finding that they could not hold the man, he was allowed loose to shift for himself, and, as the case was a failure, the outlook was not a pleasant one. He had been brought here by the constable who had paid his fare at the expense of Simpson, but he had no money to take him home. The constable and Simpson had no money for him, they said, and so he tramped out Clinton avenue to see his former employer, and managed to borrow enough to take him back to Penn's Grove again.

A VICIOUS PRISONER.

PIVEROTTA TRIED TO BRAIN A DEPUTY SHERIFF WITH A BOWL

Raised Such a Disturbance By Howling in His Cell That Nearby Residents Made a Complaint About the Hideous Noise.

The most troublesome prisoner in the Somerset county jail at present is Guiseppe Piverotta, the Italian who was convicted of atrocious assault with intent to kill. It will be remembered that he assaulted his wife and left her for dead, with her head fearfully cut and lacerated. He was convicted and is now waiting for sentence.

Piverotta is a large Italian with a bad temper. He has been confined with the other prisoners and allowed during the day to have the use of the main corridor with them. At night, of course, he is locked in his cell.

One night this week he became excited over no apparent reason and howled and sung throughout the evening. The people who live in the vicinity of the jail became so annoyed at his continued disturbance that they came to Deputy-Sheriff Theodore Barkalow and complained. Barkalow went to the cell door to stop, if possible, the noise.

"Get into your hole and stop this noise," he called at the prisoner who was executing an Italian war dance of the latest approved character. A howl of rage was the only reply and then the Italian within the cell let fly a large earthen bowl at the barred cell let in the cell door. The bowl crashed against the bars and broke into a thousand pieces, while the Deputy-Sheriff stepped about in a lively manner not expected of one of his years. A tin cup followed and then came a long string of imprecations. The prisoner finally quieted down and disturbed the neighborhood no longer.

The other day this same prisoner informed the Deputy-Sheriff that he wanted to go home to Raritan to see his "wife" and get a white shirt. The Deputy vouchsafed the reply that the next new shirt the prisoner received would be a striped one of the livery of the State prison at Trenton.

An Exchange of Pupils.

Rev. A. P. Peeke, pastor of the Reformed church at East Millstone, exchanged pulpits with Rev. C. Schenck, Ph. D., of Trinity Reformed church, this city, Sunday morning and evening. Mr. Peeke was greeted with a good sized congregation at both services and delivered his discourses very acceptably.

WORK OF THE Y. M C. A.

PRESIDENT MURRAY'S ANNUAL REVIEW OF ASSOCIATION'S EFFORTS.

The Record Has Been a Good One During the Ten Years That He Has Been at the Head of This Institution.

Ten years ago this month you first asked me to be your President and each year you have renewed your request. They have been ten good years to me, and I rejoice that this opportunity of service has come to me. Looking back over these years we cannot see that any great change has taken place in our Association. For this we should be truly grateful, for to this fact is due in no large measure whatever of success we have had. It is the steady, persistent, often monotonous, doing of each little duty, day by day, month by month, and year by year, that is bound to triumph. It is keeping everlastingly at it that brings success.

Of course our membership has changed greatly but the controlling ideas and methods of work are the same tonight as they were ten years ago. We have not hesitated to adopt new methods—when they seem better than the old, but we were fortunate in coming very early in our existence to see just what the work of the Young Men's Christian Association should be. During these ten years we have had the same general secretary though during the same period every Association in the State has changed its general secretary. We ought to be glad that a man so well equipped as Mr. Murray has continued with us so long. May we not during the next ten years rally more heartily to support and show by our deeds that we appreciate his self-sacrifice in behalf of our young men?

Many of those who were on our Board of Directors ten years ago are there now, two or three of them men who thirty years ago helped organize the Association and who through times of depression and exaltation have had an abiding faith in this work. This, too, is cause for thankfulness.

It is not strange that our record has been a good one, and our friends will pardon a little boasting tonight. Nor should it cause surprise to know that during these years the people of Plainfield have contributed $32,886 for our current expenses and have given us this well-equipped building costing $85,000. The acquisition of this permanent home has been, perhaps, the most noteworthy event of the decade.

It was just ten years ago that we began to agitate the building question, and a committee was appointed on February 2d, 1888. The first call for subscriptions was made in May, 1889. In 1890, the extension of Watchung avenue began to trouble us, and for a while we ceased our efforts. Work was actually begun April 3d, 1893, and the corner stone was laid on June 20th of the same year. After tedious delays the building was finished in 1895, and we moved in on the 12th day of February in that year.

And now for the tenth time I render my report for the year just closing. Our religious work has, as ever, been kept to the front. We deem this our most important department. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God," applies to the Young Men's Christian Association as well as to individuals, and were it not it would manifest influence which this Association is exerting upon the spiritual lives of young men of Plainfield, I am confident that many of us who are giving our time, energy and money to this work would seek other fields of labor. It will be a sad day for this Association when she turns away her great double opportunity of leading sinners to Christ and of teaching Christian men their duty to their non Christian fellowmen. I am, I believe, as familiar as anyone with this Association, and I can not see that there is any present danger of this apostacy. God grant that there may never be. Our Gospel meetings were never stronger, and the amount of personal work being done was never greater. Fifty men's meetings were held during the past year with an average attendance of 78. In these meetings we have reason to believe that men have been converted, and as a result we know of some who have united with the churches of the city.

Three Bible classes have been maintained with a fairly good attendance. It may be indative of the position the Bible holds among us to remember that one of these classes was taught by the general secretary, one by the physical director and the other by the president. For a part of the year a boy's Bible class was conducted by the assistant secretary.

Under the efficient supervision of Mr. Haywood our physical department has been a success. During the year, 195 men held memberships entitling them to the use of the gymnasium, 66 of whom had the $8 membership, showing that this is the attractive part of our building. The average monthly attendance at the classes has been as follows: Boys, 25; business men's, 14; men's evening class, 17; a total average attendance of 56. As a member of the business men's class, which meets at 5:30 p. m. three days every week, I want to commend it. Eighty-five physical examinations were made by the physical director.

In addition to class work, basketball teams have been organized and have played many games. Volley ball has also been introduced and a number of gymnastic exhibitions have been given by our own members and by men from other Associations. A bowling alley has been maintained. Out door numerous bicycle runs have been had, and cycle clubs from other Associations have been entertained. Baseball and football received considerable attention, but the results were far from good.

Along social lines we have done what we could. We began the year with a supper for committeemen, and called them together again later in the year to enjoy an outing and the hospitality of one of our sustaining members. At the building we had our usual open house on New Year's Day, and have had several social gatherings since. The reading room and parlor have been attractive places for young men. One of our citizens has recently given us a fine book case and a number of good books. It would be acceptable to us if others would send in books which perhaps they have no further use for, but which are not yet out of date.

Our entertainments have been well attended and seem to have met a need. We have furnished seven evenings of music, recitations, lectures, etc., free to our members and at a small cost to others. It is pleasant to record that one of the best of these was an illustrated lecture on travel by one of our own directors.

More and more our building is proving its usefulness, as a centre of religious and philanthropic effort. Entirely outside our organization, the Primary Teachers' Union, the Managers of Children's Home, Local Y. P. S. C. E., the pastors of the city, the King's Daughters, Dr. Stearn's Bible Class and the Chinese Sunday-school have been given free use of parts of the building, and many charitable organizations have been glad for a small fee to have the use of our hall in which to hold money-making entertainments for themselves.

During the Christian Endeavor Convention our building was the headquarters. A branch of the Plainfield Public Library has recently been established here.

We have been able, as in former years, to render assistance on many occasions to other associations not as strong as our own. It is gratifying to know that others look upon us as setting a good example of what a Young Men's Christian Association should be and come to us for help. We were well represented at the District and State Conventions, as well as at the Northfield Conference for Bible study.

Some idea of the size of our missionary work can be gathered from the fact that our people gave during the year nearly $1,900 to Young Men's Christian Association work outside of Plainfield.

One of our most important departments is our educational work. We have maintained seven classes in which eighty-two men have been enrolled. This work will be fully reported by the chairman of this committee.

Our fiscal year ends December 31st, but the treasurer reports $5,777.46 spent this year. It is encouraging to know that we closed last year without going into debt. Our budget for the present year is $6,563, of which $730 is interest on our debts of $12,000 on the building. But we are now trying to raise this money with a good prospect of success. We estimate that we should receive from membership fees $2,600, from rents $1,080, from smaller subscriptions $400 and that we shall have $2,782 to raise by subscriptions. It is right that we should give our members twice as much as they pay for, for we want them to feel that they are not merely members of a club, getting just what they pay for but workers in a Christian association of young men and under obligations to the association.

Many other features of our work could be mentioned, but this report is already to long. In closing, therefore, will you not permit me to make a few suggestions of ways in which you can help this work for young men?

First: We need more Bible Study among our members, not only here, but at home. We will only be strong as we become filled with the word.

Second: I wonder how many of our members pray daily for those of us who are charged with the management of the affairs of the Association, and for those who can give the money we need to carry on our work. May I not make this special request of you, that this year you will pray earnestly to the great Leader of our work with these two things in minds.

Third: Can you not give more time and money to this work this year than you have during the past? The work needs you and many of you need the work.

Mr. Bass and family, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday in Plainfield with relatives.

THREE DECADES OF LIFE

Y. M. C. A. MEMBERS HELD THEIR ANNUAL MEETING LAST NIGHT.

All Reports Showed the Affairs of the Association to be in a Thrifty Condition—W. D. Murray Chosen President Again.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield has passed through the third decade of its existance, and now stands a flourishing institution. This same Association has now been continued for another year under the charge of the same men who have made it so successful in the past. For the last ten years the same man has stood at the head of the Association and done much to aid its growth. He has again been selected to preside over the Association.

The annual meeting of the Association was held in the hall last evening. Previous to the meeting, a bountiful dinner was given to the members of the various committees in the small hall. There was a fair attendance at the meeting.

The meeting was called to order by the president, W. D. Murray, and then Rev. J. O. McKelvey led in Scripture reading and prayer. A. B. Beers, recording secretary, read the minutes of the last annual meeting. A nominating committee, composed Nelson Runyon, J. A. Powlison, George Fuller, A. C. Maclay, R. H. Radford and O. W. Dunham, was appointed at 9:31 to retire to one of the small rooms to make the nominations.

President Murray then introduced an amendment to the constitution which had been suggested and approved by the Board of Directors. The substance of it was the changing of the date of the annual meeting from the second Thursday in May to the third Thursday in January. The president explained that the financial year of the association ended with the calendar year and that it seemed best to have the association year end at about the same time. The amendment was unanimously carried.

The report of the educational committee was called for and then made by the chairman of the committee, Stephen Cahoone. He reported on the different courses now under way. The second year of the course in mechanical drawing has been completed, he reported, and it has been found to be of excellent use. A number of the young men employed in the different shops in the city have taken advantage of it and although several have given up, it merely shows how rigorous the course is and that it is necessary to work to complete it.

In the stenographic department, six young men have completed the course this year. Bookkeeping with its auxiliary studies has been taken up by a number of pupils under competent instructors. The German class has been somewhat handicapped by the change in teachers, but the new teacher, Rev. Mr. Hauser, is making good progress with the class. The attendance for the year has been eleven. The Spanish class has been continued with an average attendance of four.

In the reading room, he reported, there are forty-one publications on file. There is also a Bible reference library of 131 volumes. The old library, he reported as almost useless, but that a distributing depot of the Public Library had been established at the building, so that the members could get such books as they wanted from that collection. This report was received and placed on file.

H. O. Newman, the treasurer of the association, read his report, which was as follows:

President Murray made a report taking in the various work accomplished in the different lines by the association. The report will be found in full in another column.

Physical Director C. E. A. Heywood was called upon for a few remarks regarding the work of the physical department and to emphasize the President's remarks concerning it. Mr. Haywood read the result of two examinations, one before the training in the gymnasium and one after, showing the all-around development attained. The only demension not increased, he explained, was that of the head which was just the same size. He also explained how the Christian influences were quietly brought to bear on the boys working in the gymnasium.

After Mr. Haywood's remarks, President Murray announced that arrangements had been made with Mr. Haywood to have him remain for another year. The statement was received with applause.

Mr. Murray said that one of the greatest attractions of the association was the assistant secretary and he called on Assistant Secretary F. G. Bristol for a few remarks on the advantages and pleasures of the Northfield encampment. Mr. Bristol's remarks were well received.

The membership committee had two announcements to make. H. M. Maxson gave them in the absence of the chairman of that committee. One was that every member who secures three new members will be credited with a free membership, which can be kept or transferred to another, and that one-third of all the value of the new memberships brought in will be credited to the account of the member bringing them, to be used to pay for his own membership or who else he designates.

The other announcement was that all members who have the $2 membership shall be entitled to all the gymnasium, swimming pool, and wheel room privileges between June 1st and September 15th.

The report of the nominating committee was called for. Nelson Runyon, chairman of the committee, nominated the following: President, William D. Murray; vice-president, E. L. Bonny; recording secretary, A. B. Beers; corresponding secretary, John Valiant; treasurer, H. O. Newman; directors, Ernest R. Ackerman, Geo. H. Batchelor, Stephen Cahoone, Geo. S. Clay, George M. Rittenhouse, James W. Jackson, Curtis M. Thorpe, A. C. La Boyteaux, Henry M. Maxson, Nelson Runyon, R. H. Radford, George A. Strong, George A. Chapman. They were all unanimously elected on one ballot.

Roger F. Murray introduced a resolution thanking the proprietors and reporters of the daily papers for their kindness and courtesy in extending the use of their columns to the association. That motion was unanimously carried. Another vote of thanks was given to J. Wesley Johnson for his gift of six dozen knives for use in the culinary department of the association. The meeting then adjourned.

The dinner that was served in the early part of the evening was under the charge of the following committee: Mrs. J. W. Gavett, Mrs. Frank T. Clauson, Mrs. William D. Murray, Mrs. Roger F. Murray, Mrs. S. R. Struthers, Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. J. H. Manning, Miss Carrie Dewey, and Miss Ella Osborne.

HELD FOR THE GRAND JURY.

Golanski to Answer to the Charge of Felonious Assault.

The case of Mrs. Kiedy Zaremba against Valentine Golanski, charged with felonious assault on two different occasion, was tried Thursday afternoon before Justice Mosher. Judge DeMeza represented the plaintiff and William Sweeney appeared for W. K. McClure, counsel for the defendant. Judge DeMeza employed the services of a court interpreter, for the woman was unable to talk English. She told the Court, through the interpreter, that on two different occasions Golanski entered her house and assaulted her.

Justice Mosher held the man for the Grand Jury in the sum of $200. No objection whatever was made on the part of the defendant and he had nothing to say.

Leveling the Bridge Approach.

The people of Plainfield who have had occasion to feel grateful for the temporary foot-bridge erected on Watchung avenue over the brook, will be pleased to learn that J. Fred MacDonald, the grocer, intends to have the uneven ground about the bridge made even and he will also have a bridge placed across the raceway on a line with the sidewalk passing the Y. M. C. A. building so that people can walk in a straight line from Front street to the borough or vice versa. At present persons going that way are obliged to walk over uneven ground and go a considerable distance around to reach the new bridge.

Streets to be Repaired.

There has been considerable interest expressed as to what streets are to be repaired this spring after Central avenue is finished. It is the intention of the street committee of the Council to have Front street, both east and west, put in good condition. The committee wish to have it re-macadamized from Clinton avenue to Farragut road, if the appropriation to that department will stand it. Last year, the committee promised to put Crescent and Putnam avenues in good condition but as the appropriation was insufficient to last through the year, that work had to lay over for another year. The committee will turn their attention to those thoroughfares very soon.

Handsome Residence to be Built.

David C. Smalley, the North avenue butcher, has purchased a fine building lot on East Front street, near the residence of Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, and will erect a handsome dwelling house on it. The plans for the residence have already been drawn and it will be erected this summer.

ELY-BEEKMAN NUPTIALS

MARRIAGE CEREMONY PERFORMED BY REV. J. A. M'KELVEY.

A Pretty Home Wedding Celebrated on West Fourth Street—Miss Kittie May Beekman Becomes Mrs. Louis C. Ely.

One of the prettiest weddings of the season was that of last Thursday when Miss Kittie May Beekman, daughter of Mrs. Drucilla Beekman and Louis C. Ely, both of West Fourth street, were united in marriage by Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel.

The bride and groom were attended by Miss May Moulton, as maid of honor, and Edward Beekman, brother of the bride, as best man. The bride was richly gowned in white cashmere trimmed with white satin ribbon and silk lace. The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock in the presence of the nearest relatives. Following congratulations, a wedding supper was served.

The groom is a valued employee of A. M. Griffin for whom he has worked for some time past. The bride is a most estimable young woman and the couple have a host of friends who extend their west wishes for a successful and happy journey through life. They will reside at No. 434 West Fourth street.

The many presents received were both useful and costly, and they were the admiration of all present. Mr. and Mrs. Ely will at once go to housekeeping. After all had enjoyed a supper the remainder of the evening was passed in sociability and at a late hour the guests departed for their homes.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

A PLAINFIELD BELLE MARRIED WITHOUT CHANGING HER NAME.

Miss Sophie L. Maltby Becomes the Wife of Wilbert S. Maltby, the Noted Trick Bicycle Rider—Guests Who Were There.

A quiet home wedding was celebrated last Thursday at 7 o'clock at the home of Charles B. Maltby, of Sherman avenue, when his daughter, Miss Sophie L. Maltby, and Wilbert S. Maltby, son of E. C. Maltby, of Wallingford, Conn., were united in marriage by Rev. J. Pemberton Taylor, of this city, in the presence of the immediate relatives.

The house was prettily decorated with choice flowers and plants. The bride was gowned in a black traveling costume and both she and the groom were unattended.

Following the ceremony congratulations were showered on the happy couple, after which a wedding supper was served by Max Wiertz, of this city.

The groom is the well-known fancy and trick bicycle rider and is now the senior member of the hardware firm of Maltby, Henley Company, of New York.

During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Maltby left by the Royal Blue Line train for the south. They will go to Old Point Comfort, where they will remain for several weeks. On their return they will reside at the home of the bride for a while.

Burgess, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Green, Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Heyniger, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Maltby, of Plainfield.

MARSHAL SMALLEY RESIGNED.

Would Not Stand Trial on the Charges Preferred Against Him.

Marshal Walter Smalley, of the borough, against whom charges were preferred, has tendered his resignation which has been accepted by the License and Marshal Committee. The marshal was watched at different times and it was learned that they were never able to find him, and on one occasion Chief Marshal Wilson searched for him with the same result. About 9 o'clock in the morning the officer was seen coming out of his house, and instead of making a trip about his territory to see that everything was all right, he walked to the station house, reported, and went home. This, it is understood, is only one of the many such performances; and he has been closely watched by his superior officers who came to the conclusion that the man was not doing his duty.

The Boy Was Penitent.

Louis Golstein, a young lad living on West Front street, was arraigned before Justice Mosher Thursday on a charge made by George Fisher who claimed that the boy broke his bicycle. Goldstein said that he knocked the wheel over and broke three spokes, but he cried so hard and felt so penitent that the Justice discharged him on the promise that the wheel should be repaired at his expense. Mrs. Goldstein was in court and she promised to have the wheel fixed.

J. F. HUBBARD DIRECTOR

A PLAINFIELDER AGAIN CHOSEN TO PRESIDE OVER FREEHOLDERS.

County Collector Wood Explains That the Finances of the County are in Excellent Shape—Other Business Transacted.

There are no new members in the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county, which organized for the new year at 11 o'clock Thursday morning. All members were present, excepting Freeholder Huiskamper. Freeholders Ehrlich and Farrell, of Rahway, who were recently re-elected were reworn, immediately upon the assembly of the Board. J. Frank Hubbard was re-elected Director by a unanimous vote, and he was escorted to the chair by Freeholders Clark and Boll.

Director Hubbard briefly thanked his associates for the renewed expression of confidence.

He said he appreciated the honor fully, and that he would endea vor to do all in his power to assist the m in the conduct of the business for the year, feeling assured of the co-operation which he had had in the past.

The salary of the County Collector was fixed at $1,800 per annum, and E. M. Wood was re-elected for a term of three years. The election was unanimous, Clerk Eyno casting the ballot on motion of Freeholder Clark.

Mr. Wood expressed his gratitude for the renewed mark of esteem. He said it was the sixth time he had received the honor, and it was gratifying to him to know that he had the esteem and confidence of his associates. He was first elected collector in 1887, and he said that the disbursements that year aggregated $380,000. This past year the disbursements were $450,000, an increase of $70,000 in ten years, or an average of $7,000 per year, but as against this increase there has been an increase of the amount for state school fund, over which the board has no control. This increase is to over $4,000 per year, so that the actual increase for current expenses has been only $2,000. This was a matter for which the public should be grateful to the freeholders.

In addition to this, Mr. Wood said that a fact existed at the close of the year that never before existed in the history of the county. There was standing to the credit of each committee a balance. In all previous years it was necessary to transfer from one account to another, but so such action was necessary this year, and it was proof of the extremely careful and economical administration of county affairs for the year.

The salary of the county road inspector was fixed at $60 per month, and Inspector James Finck was reappointed.

Plainfield—Courier-News and Daily Press.

Rahway—Advocate and Union-Democrat.

Summit—Record and Herald.

Westfield—Standard and Leader.

The standing committees were all reappointed by Director Hubbard, and a special committee comprising Freeholders Tier, Ogden, Robinson, Boll and Clark, was appointed to report on the cost and advisability of building two line bridges over Green brook in Plainfield.

County Physician Westcott submitted his annual report, showing that he had given certificates of death in 105 cases. The number of cases of death from natural causes were 49, and as the result of accident, as follows:

Railroads, 30; other casualties, 7; drowning, 6; burning, 3; heat, 2. Five of the fatal accidents were to people unknown.

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS.

The new Somerset County Board of Freeholders met at Somerville Thursday and elected officers for the ensuing term. The officers are as follows: Director, Wm J. Logan; Collector, E. B. Allen; Counsel, J. A. Brech.

The Board made provision for the Watchung avenue and Sycamore avenue bridges in their appropriations. They are now prepared to co-operate with the Union County Board in the erection of the two bridges in this city and the borough. No other business of any importance was transacted.

Those comprising the new board for the term of 1897-8 are: Bernards—J. F. Ballentine, D.; Bedminster—O. H. Terry, D.; Branchburg—E. B. Hoagland, D.; Bridgewater—W. J. Logan, D.; Franklin—C. G. VanCleef, R.; Hillsborough—S. B. Everett, D.; Montgomery—E. V. Cruser, D.; North Plainfield—Agustus Mobus, D.; N. P. Borough—L. E. Barkalow, R.; Warren—Joel Coddington, D.; new members, Dem. 8, Rep. 2.

Arthur Mosher, of New York, was the guest of Plainfield relatives over Sunday.

OVER THE GREAT DIVIDE.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE ISAAC D. TITSWORTH HELD YESTERDAY.

His Life and Characteristics Reviewed and Commented Upon to His Credit by Those Prominent Among Seventh-day Baptists.

The funeral services of the late Isaac D. Titsworth were held Tuesday afternoon from the house at 2:30 and from the Seventh-day Baptist church at 3 o'clock. At the house prayer was offered by Rev. F. E. Peterson. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends at the church and the services were very impressive. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Peterson, was in charge, and after a vocal selection by a quartette, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, of this city, A. H. Burdick and Miss Lizzie Boice, of New Market, the Scripture lesson was read by Mr. Peterson. This was followed with a short sermon by Dr. O. U. Whitford, of Westerly, R. I., who was for years a member of Mr. Titsworth's family. Dr. Whitford took for his text Psalm 116: 15—"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Following the sermon Dr. Whitford read a biographical sketch of the deceased.

The next speaker was the Rev. Dr. A. B. Lewis, of this city, who spoke concerning Mr. Titsworth's relation to the Seventh-day Baptist Tract Society and the publication interests of the denomination.

Rev. Dr. A. E. Main, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, this city, was the next speaker, and his remarks were along the line of Mr. Titsworth's relation to the Missionary Society of the denomination, of which society he was a life member.

The last speaker was Rev. L. E. Livermore, of this city. His address was in regard to the deceased's relation to the New Market church during Mr. Livermore's pastorate of twelve years. He spoke of Mr. Titsworth's intimate knowledge of the history of the church for the past 192 years of its existence, and said that there were now seven pastors living who were pastors during Mr. Titsworth's connection with the church, and that there were seven other pastors who preceded the seven now living. Mr. Livermore mentioned a few characteristics of the departed. First his Christian life, second his loyalty to God, and third his public spirit as shown in counsels and material help in the affairs of town, county, State and Nation, and his benevolence, especially in general interests. He was a warm supporter of the denominational and public schools and a promoter of temperance and other reforms.

The services closed with a prayer by Dr. Whitford and another selection by the quartette.

The pall-bearers were four sons of the deceased as follows: Rev. Adoniram Judson Titsworth, of Milwaukee; Prof. A. A. Titsworth, of Rutgers College; Thomas Titsworth and Louis Titsworth, of Dunellen. Interment was in Hillside cemetery, this city.

"CINDERELLA" BY THE CHILDREN

Several of the children in the auxiliary to the Town Improvement Association will give "Cinderella" at the house of George H. Goddard, Esq., 205 East Ninth street, Friday afternoon, May 28th, at 3:30 o'clock. The proceeds will go to the Children's Home. In the autumn these same children intend giving "Beauty and the Beast," to raise money for the new city park, that they may have a bed for flowers, or own some part which shall be their especial care. All interested in the efforts of these little ones are asked to show it by attending the play and tale on Friday.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo O., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. GREAT FETE IT WILL BE a due regard for accuracy will permit. What we now present in this sketchy form will be supplemented from day to day by definite statements, and by the reports from official sources with which we shall be favored.

The people of Plainfield are rapidly learning to look beyond the mere fact that we are to have a new sort of show on the first Saturday in June. They are learning that a new public spirit is forming and organizing, which, ere long, will draw into its ranks all classes and conditions of people; which will arouse interest not only in public affairs, but in the improvement of private homes. Merely to outline what is implied by the growth of such a spirit would fill many columns. In vital importance it ranks with the spirit which supports public schools and charitable institutions. It will meet and answer the grudging question, What are these things worth in dollars and cents? and will prove that monies invested under its control and inspiration can and will pay great returns. Just now, however, hard work will do more for Plainfield's fete than will much philosophy.

SQUIRE MAD AT SHERIFF.

MR. KIRK'S EDICTS ABOUT THE COUNTY BUILDINGS DENOUNCED.

A Cranford Justice Who Run Amuck of the Sheriff's Orders for Conduct in Court and Corridor Became Very Much Agitated.

Sheriff Kirk has issued an order which threatens to bring down on his head the wrath of all the Dogberries of Union County. The Sheriff last week decided that no one should be allowed inside the bar inclosure during the sessions of the county court except lawyers and representatives of the press. This shut out from this favorite lounging spot Police Justices and Justices of the Peace, who, with some veteran professional jurymen, used to stroll inside and appropriate some of the best seats within the railing, to the annoyance of the lawyers who had cases to try in the court.

Squire William W. Mendell, of Cranford, was the first one to violate the Sheriff's new edict. The Justice, who is one of the founders of Cranford, came to Elizabeth on Friday to settle a case in the District Court. He had a tilt there with Judge Atwater, who threatened him with arrest for contempt of Court. The angry squire defied the Judge and left the court in high dudgeon. He repaired to the County Court, still boiling within from the indignity put upon him.

When he reached the court he sauntered up the aisle to take his usual seat inside the bar inclosure, but was rudely held up by Constable James White, of Springfield, who had been placed on guard at the wicket by Sheriff Kirk, to see that no interlopers passed through. The astonished Justice demanded to know what the officer meant and Constable White curtly told him of the Sheriff's order. The irate Justice fumed at this outrage to his feeling and said he would go and give the Sheriff a piece of his mind.

The Squire went out to the Sheriff's office, but Mr. Kirk was not there, so pulling out a Havana and lighting it, the Justice began pacing up and down the corridor, cooling his heels until the Sheriff should return. Another new order of the Sheriff is that there shall be no smoking or lounging in the Courthouse corridor and Constable James Carey, whose duty is to see that this is obeyed, stepped up to Mr. Mendell and told him he would have to stop smoking or loafing in the corridor and must get out of the building or else go into the courtroom lobby and sit down.

This was the last straw, and the Justice fairly exploded with rage. He informed the Constable that he had smoked in that corridor before the officer was made a citizen and that he had been attending court before half the fellows now employed in it were born. His angry protests were unavailing, however, as the Constable insisted on his retirement and Squire Mendell left the Courthouse in a furious passion, bitterly denouncing the Sheriff and the new order of things.

A Busy Place.

One of the busiest places in town these fine days is the great store of White's. It would be difficult to find a store that has a better selected stock of seasonable goods than this one. Every department is overflowing with the very latest in dress goods, silks, millinery, ladies' suits, shirt waists, etc. The reputation of this store for the great bargains it offers every day is too well known to speak of, but you will find it to your advantage to go there.

HE LEFT WELL-DRESSED.

SEVERAL MERCHANTS FLIM FLAMMED BY A COACHMAN.

He Was Employed by T. B. Penton, Where He Had the Goods Sent—Promised to be Around and Pay for Them—He Left Town.

John Kelly, up to last Saturday evening, was coachman for Thomas Penton, of Rockview avenue. He attended to his duties with care and appeared to be the model of a coachman. He was quiet and well-appearing and made a favorable impression on all who saw him.

Last Saturday afternoon, Kelly came down town and visited the rooms of Sternberg & Co., clothiers. He bought a $14 suit and ordered it sent to the house where he said that he would pay for it. He also went to the store of James D. Blair, on Park avenue, and purchased a $3 hat, which he also requested might be sent to the house. He said that he would pay for it there. Then he went to the gents' furnishing goods store of Eugene A. Laing, of Park avenue, and bought $8 worth of shirts and socks. These were to be paid for also on their arrival at the Penton residence.

About five o'clock, all the goods arrived at the house and Kelly was there to receive them. He explained to the three boys that brought the three packages that he had not received his pay, but that Mr. Penton would give him the necessary cash at the dinner hour and that he would come down town at 6:30 o'clock and settle all of the accounts. The three boys departed satisfied.

The time came but not John Kelly. Arthur Jennings, the young clerk in Blair's store who had sold Kelly the hat, became anxious and went over to Mr. Penton's to see what had become of Kelly and the hat. In response to his inquiries, he was informed that Kelly had left the employ of Mr. Penton and had left town a short time before. The hat was supposed to have accompanied him. Also the suit and the rest of his purchases.

From that time nothing has been seen or heard of Kelly although many inquiries have been made for him by the interested parties.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

The Occasion was the Passing of Her Eighth Birthday—She Made a Pleasant Hostess for Here Many Young Friends.

One of the most charming events of the season among the young folks of Plainfield was the celebration by Miss Edith Litchfield Terhune, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Terhune, of Sandford avenue, of her eighth birthday anniversary, which took place last Monda between the hours of 7 and 9:30 p. m., when she entertained a number of her friends.

The beautiful home was decorated with taste, the prevailing color being pink. In the dining room there was a profusion of cut roses and carnations prettily festooned about the table.

The young hostess did the honors in receiving her guests and she was assisted by her brother, Master Harold L. Terhune. The former was richly gowned in white.

All of the young ladies appeared in evening dress and the scene was a most attractive one. The guests indulged in the playing of games, which helped to pass the time all too quickly for the young people. One of the exciting features was the drawing of favors from a Jack Horner pie. The favors were hidden and to them were attached silken ribbon. The pink was for the young ladies, while the white was for the boys. Everyone secured a favor, so that none were disappointed.

The serving of a dainty and pleasing supper added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion, after which the guests indulged in dancing. The ease and grace displayed in the part of the programme was highly pleasing to the older guests present.

Miss Edith Terhune was the recipient of many pretty and useful reminders of the celebration. When the hour arrived for departure the guests as well as the hostess expressed regrets that they were obliged to separate. The guests were the Misses Edith Leslie, Martha Codington, Mamie Dunham, Carrie Moore, Irene Dunham, Mollie Slocum, Ruth Murphey, Enna Martin, Linda Cave; Masters Douglas Murphey, Chauncey Murphey, Leslie Slocum, Leslie Leland, Erwin Leland, Albert Codington, Robert Longman, Charles Nightingale, Louis Slocum, Frank Howard. Other guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Peter Schuits, Mr. and Mrs. Nightingale and Mrs. Murphey.

A VISIT TO THE VATICAN

A PLAINFIELDER WHO ATTENDED SERVICE CONDUCTED BY THE POPE.

It was Very Impressive, and Though the Pope Looked Aged and Feeble He Displayed Wonderful Vitality.

The following letter was written by a well-known Plainfield gentlemen who is travelling in Italy:

"By postal card I told you that I was at the Pope's mass in the Sistine chapel on Thursday. Tickets are very hard to obtain but we secured a couple. We arose at 6 o'clock and as soon as we had swallowed our coffee and rolls were driven over to the Vatican in the evening dress. By going early we managed to secure good places, though the chapel was quite crowded. To enter we had to show our tickets about half a dozen times to the gorgeous soldiers of the Swiss guard who stood with their long spears across each doorway.

A little after 8 o'clock a long procession of priests marched in followed by some of the Swiss guard with their plumes and helmets and spears. Then came the Pope way up in the air in his sedan chair born by twenty or twenty-five robed footmen. He is an old man of eighty-seven, very bent and quite thin, but otherwise he looks like the pictures which one sees. He was dressed principally in white silk and satin covered with gold and on his head was a white silk skull cap. As he came in everyone knelt before him while in the most benign and complacent manner he stretched out his hands and gave blessings right and left. As he reached the altar he was lifted down and the chair was backed out of the chapel while the guards stood around on each side of the altar and every few feet down the aisle.

"All the time the choir in a little gallery on one side was singing most beautifully. Marecche, the man soprano, could be heard even above the choir boys. There was no organ but all the sound seemed to come as from one instrument. It far surpassed the music in St. Peter's on Easter. As the Pope knelt before the altar there commenced a curious process of disrobing. His attendants took off robe after robe, shawl after shawl from his back and when he was divested of this apparel, they dressed him up again about sixteen deep with another set of robes and white shawls taken from the altar.

"Then the Pope read mass and his voice was quite distinct. As was the usual thing, he kissed the books, breathed on the tapers, bowed and kneeled repeatedly. Then he went to one side and knelt while an archbishop conducted a second mass. This was unusual but it gave us the opportunity of hearing more music. When the second mass was over the Pope was disrobed and robed again and carried out smiling and blessing as before. Before he went however he held an audience and many people were presented kneeling very reverently before him and kissing the gloved part of his hand. Altogether the service was as interesting as anything I have seen since I left home and I would not have missed it for a great deal. The service was really very beautiful and symmetrical and the audience very devout while the presence of so many of the clergy and the guard made it still more imposing. It was 10 o'clock before it was all over."

TRINITY'S IMPROVEMENTS.

C nsistory Committee Have Discussed the Matter.

Messrs Anthony, Gayle and Vanemburgh, the committee appointed by the consistory of Trinity Reformed church to report the feasibility and advisability of providing a new Sunday-school room under the church, held a meeting last Tuesday and will make known the result of their deliberations at a special meeting of the consistory to be held at an early date. The committee would not divulge the result of the meeting, further than to say that the proposed plan as outlined in last Saturday's Press was a feasible one, and they intend to so report to the Consistory of the church and leave that body to go ahead with the building or not as they may decide.

PRETTIEST GIRL CONTEST.

A South Plainfield Lassie Who Has Many Admirers

A very novel affair was held in Higgins' Hall, South Plainfield, Monday evening, when a contest was arranged for the purpose of ascertaining who the prettiest girl in town is. There were over two hundred young women in the contest and during the early part of the evening great excitement was occasioned by the voting, and toward the close everybody became interested. The result of the contest was that Miss Mamie Gerry received the highest number of votes and was declared to be the prettiest young woman in town. Miss Brantingham was second and Miss Julia Heenen was third.

Those who acted as judges were Thomas Brantingham, Thomas Terrill and Edward Campbell. After the contest dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

THIEVES GOT A BIG HAUL.

A WESTFIELD MAN LOSES $110 IN CASH.

The Burglars Were Evidently the Same Ones Who Were Discovered Operating in McManus' Hotel—Mr. Simpson's Victim.

Burglars entered the residence of Wm. Simpson, on Sussex street, Westfield, about 3 o'clock Monday morning, and carried off a quantity of silverware, $110 in money, two pairs of gold eye-glasses and a gold watch and chain.

The thieves were evidently the same ones who entered a house on Walnut street at about the same time, as described in Monday's Press. They gained entrance through a parlor window by sliding back a catch. All the clothing was removed from the sleeping rooms upstairs and carried to the parlor, where it was leisurely looked over. From Mr. Simpson's trousers $110 in cash was taken. Bureaus and closets throughout the house were also ransacked and everything containing gold or silver that the thieves could lay hands on was taken. A peculiar circumstance about the robbery was that although the burglars did their work leisurely and thoroughly, invading every part of the house, none of the inmates were awakened by their operations.

Mr. Simpson was suffering with a severe headache when he awoke about 7 o'clock Monday morning, which leads him to believe he was chloroformed. The suspicious silence during the night of a very large watch dog that is kept on the premises, gives some plausibility to the chloroform theory.

WANTED—TEAM AND MAN

A FARM HAND DEPARTS WITH MONGREL TEAM OF HIS EMPLOYER.

The Police Notified to Arrest One Peter Brighton For Stealing a Team Composed of a Horse and Mule.

A horse, a mule and Peter Brighton are wandering at large about the country. James Brown, of Oak Tree, wants the horse and the mule and he would not mind getting hold of Brighton. The police of the nighboring cities are also looking for Brighton and the meagrel team. Brighton is wanted on the charge of horse stealing.

James Brown has a farm about one mile from the Oak Tree station on the Lehigh Valley Railroad. Three weeks ago he employed Brighton as a farm hand. The man appeared to be a good worker and to be honest. Friday morning Brown sent his hired man to the station after some freight that he was expecting and gave the money to Brighton to pay the charges. Brighton had the horse and mule harnessed up to a box wagon and drove down to the station. He left the house at 9 o'clock. He was seen at the depot later, but drove past. Neither he nor the team returned.

At first Brown thought there had been a delay in the arrival of the freight; then he thought of an accident, but now he believes that Brighton has skipped with the team, wagon and money.

Brighton wore a light fedora hat, dark coat and brown trousers. He is six feet high and of dark complexion. The police in the neighboring towns have been notified of his disappearance.

Leggett's Refreshing Soda.

What is more refreshing than a glass of good soda? Leggett, the Front street druggist, has established a reputation for serving the best soda and its popularity has been marked this summer. Especially is this true of the people who attend the entertainments given at the Y. M. C. A. building. After the entertainments Mr. Leggett's place is thronged with people who thoroughly enjoy his soda. This was the case last evening when a large proportion of those at the hall stopped at the drug store and indulged in the refreshing beverage to be found at this place.

VOORHEES' PLAN FAILED

ATTEMPT MADE TO REORGANIZE THE HIGHER COURTS.

After a Hot Fight and an Adverse Opinion by the Attorney-General the Plan Failed to Succeed—Typewriter's Error Corrected

The special session of the Legislature began at noon and ended a few minutes past 7 o'clock, Tuesday. The only business transacted was the passage of a new bill providing for a special election on September 28th to vote on the three amendments adopted at the regular session. The delay in getting the bill through earlier was caused by an attempt on the part of the friends of the Voorhees plan to reorganize the higher courts to get the rejected Voorhees amendment through Tuesday. They got together Tuesday morning, and after a count found that they had a majority of the Republicans, and asked Leader Derousse to call a caucus. This Mr. Derousse objected to doing, as he believed the House had no power to act on the amendment now, having rejected it in regular session. The friends of the amendment insisted, and threatened to call a caucus by petition, and Leader Derousse gave way.

The caucus lasted nearly two hours, and decided by a vote of 28 to 25 in favor of attempting to pass the amendment, but with the understanding that it was not to be made a caucus measure. Then the friends of the biennial sessions amendment brought that before the caucus, which refused, by a vote of 25 to 28, to indorse it. In the meantime the Senate had passed the new Election bill and taken a recess. When the bill was received in the House action was postponed until the Voorhees amendments had been disposed of. Mr. Demarest, of Hudson county, presented the amendments and moved their adoption, whereupon they were antagonized by Messrs. Gledhill, Lloyd and Goldenhorn, and advocated by Roll, Demarest and Klink. After a long discussion the House voted 38 to 18 to refer the matter to the Attorney-General for an opinion on the right of the House to again act on the once rejected amendments.

At 6 o'clock the House reconvened at 6 o'clock and received an opinion from Attorney-General Grey, in which he held that having once rejected the amendments, the House was without power to again consider them. The friends of the Voorhees amendments had enough votes to pass them before the opinion was read, but the majority melted away after it was read, and Mr. Gledhill's motion to indefinitely postpone the amendments was adopted by a large vote without division, and after passing the Senate election bill the members of the House marched over to the Senate chamber and the Legislature was once more adjourned without day.

The election bill passed will save over $50,000 to the various counties, so that the error made in the bill passed in the regular session was not a costly one. Under the original bill three registration days and an election were provided for, and the election officers were to receive $5 a day for each registration day and $10 for election day. The new bill requires but a single registration day, and the pay of the election officers is fixed at $8 for all their work in connection with the election.

A large delegation of teachers was on hand, having received assurances that if any new legislation was adopted their amendment to the teachers' pension fund law would be considered. It failed to become a law because the Governor found sixteen serious mistakes in the engrossed copy and was compelled to veto it. The hopes of the visiting teachers were high during the day, but the opinion of the Attorney-General shut them out.

Memorial Day Enthusiasm.

A meeting of Winfield Scott Post, No. 72, G. A. R., was held last Tuesday when all arrangements were completed for the celebration of Memorial Day. There was a very large attendance of comrades at the meeting and the interest taken and enthusiasm manifested was remarked. Each one feels as though the celebration this year ought to be the best of any previous years and they are all striving to make it so.

A Subscription Dance.

An informal subscription dance has been arranged by a committee of the Junior members of the Park Club for Friday evening, to be held at the club house. The patronesses will be Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Mrs. S. A. Crulkshank, Mrs. Pfeiffer and Mrs. J. P. Taylor. The committee in charge of the dance is composed of E. Maxwell Honeyman, J. P. Welles Taylor and Arthur Murphy.

Lewis Schneider is confined to his home suffering with chills and fever.

NOW GOES TO THE COURTS

TROLLEY MATTERS IN BOUND BROOK BECOME MORE TANGLED.

New York and Philadelphia Traction Company Say They Will Proceed Under an Old Charter—Supreme Court Writ Served.

It now looks as if the trolley situation at Bound Brook can only be untangled by the courts. During the past week the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company have unloaded ties along Talmage avenue, and made other preparations prior to beginning work, although they have not as yet been granted any franchise by the present Council. Accordingly, a large lobby was present at the regular meeting of the Council Tuesday and an exciting meeting was expected.

After the routine business was disposed of Alvah A. Clark, attorney for the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, arose and declared the determination of his company to begin the laying of ties, rails and other necessary fixtures of an electric road, as they considered the franchise granted in 1894 to the Central New Jersey Traction Company, and by that company assigned to the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company, to be valid and in full force.

He also declared this to be a sufficient notice to all, who thought otherwise, so that if the aforesaid work should be interfered with, the matter could be taken into court. The representatives of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company then withdrew and the balance of the meeting was taken up with the second reading of the ordinance of the New Brunswick Traction Company, which was finally accepted and passed with a few minor changes.

Just before adjournment a writ ordering the various papers, etc., in the case to be brought before Chief Justice Magie was served by Counsellor Voorhees of the New Brunswick Traction Company. This will act as an injunction and will stop all work until settled. Council then adjourned until Friday evening, when an interesting session is expected.

Many Little People are Now in Training for Their Pretty Play—The Gypsy Camp to be an Interesting Spot at that Time.

"Merrie England," with its May parties, will surely be brought to mind when, a little later in the calendar, June 5th, the children will wind the May pole on the beautiful lawn of Johnston Park, where the ladies of the Town Improvement Association will hold the largest fete ever planned in this section of the country. Mrs. Louis G. Timpson has charge of the following little ones, who are training for their pretty play which will be given at 4 o'clock: Misses Eleanor Waring, Helen Timpson, Anna Garragues, Ruth Fredericks, Elizabeth McGee, Esther Joy, Ruth Van Vliet, Louise Saunders, Jean Saunders, Alice Titus, Katharine Titus, Margaret Lowe, Margaret Drayton, Anna Fisk, Dorothy Fisk, Madeline Reed, Frederica Mead and Masters Johnston Male, Morris Timpson and Ogden Rogers.

At 5 o'clock, Mrs. Wm. G. Patten will conduct the winding of the May pole by the following young girls: Misses Eva Brown, Margaret Van Deventer, Frances Van Deventer, Gennie Derrik, Jennie Dunham, Marie Finch, Charlotte Finch, Marjory Fleming, Dorothy Fleming, Elsie Goddard, Maida Hyde, Ethel Kinnie, Percy Love, Grace Miller, Grace Peck, Wilhelmina Patton, Trottie Smith, Florence Taylor, Mildred Thayer and Grace Wilcox.

Mrs. William L. Saunders is in charge of the gypsy performers who, we are bound to believe, will be more attractive than even the flapjacks and fortune telling that are features of the gypsy encampment. The gypsy queens will be Misses Katharyn Reinhart, Annie Murphy, Elizabeth Hull, Mary Hull, Mabel Van Deventer, Hallie Van Deventer, Mary Tracy, Marion Henderson, Grace Barlow, Alice Barlow, Adelaide Ball, Dottie Long and Messrs. Special attention is called to the 10 cent tickets for children under ten years of age. These can be procured at the homes of Mrs. Wm. L. Patten, 122 West Fifth street, and Mrs. Louis G. Timpson, 117 East Sixth street, also at the gate and of the members of the Children's Auxiliary.

WANTED CACK'S BLOOD.

A HOT TIME AMONG THE COLORED POPULATION TUESDAY.

A Plainfield Swagger Goes in Red Color at a Dance and Had to Leave Suddenly—His Friend in Trouble, Too.

There was a hot time in New Brunswick Tuesday, all right. In fact, it grew so warm, that Wm. Carter, the famous colored crap shooter of this city, departed for parts unknown, and his friend, Matthew Blair, tried to hide his identity under the seat of Captain Hand's stage, while, a mob of New Brunswick's indignant colored gentry called for his blood outside. Carter hasn't been seen since, and Blair has turned several shades lighter from fright.

Some of the New Brunswick waiters planned a ball for last Tuesday and their dusky friends from far and near assembled to do honor to the occasion. The ball was held in Zimmerman's hall. A party of Plainfielders went from here by Hand's stage early in the evening. Just as the party prepared to start, Wm. Carter, who is better known to fame by the title of "Cack," came along and wanted to go with them. Sam Conway wanted to go also, but as neither had the necessary funds, they footed it to New Brunswick behind the stage.

Now "Cack" has been in New Brunswick before. The people of that city have been treated to a view of that famous walk of his that is a record breaker there. The Brunswick people tell hard tales of Carter's last visit before last Tuesday. They say that he came over and tried to own the town. He slapped one of New Brunswick's dusky belles in the face and made himself generally obnoxious.

The dance was in full sway when the Plainfield delegation arrived and soon they were lost in the crowd. There was a prize waltz, which was the event of the evening. The couples followed each other in gliding about the room in languishing fashion until the judges decided that Mrs Hattie Wilson, of Plainfield, and Tom Jackson, of New Brunswick, were "hot stuff" and ought to have the prize.

Then the tongues of the New Brunswick maids began to wag. Then they saw "Cack" step forth in all his dark glory as' recounting some of his youthful exploits in the past. It is even said that he drew forth a black jack with which he announced he could do all New Brunswick with one hand, but that is mere rumor. As "Cack" swaggered across the room, a lank darkey informed him that he wasn't wanted. Then came more words and then came the dusky hosts of the New Brunswickites, in dress suits and high collars, who fell upon the unlucky crap thrower with both feet, as the saying is.

"Cack" shook off his assailants and jumped for the door. Matthew Blair saw the fun and started to the rescue of his fellow-citizen. He wished he hadn't. "Cack" cleared three steps at a time and ran for the street with thirty howling darkeys in the rear calling for blood and vengence. "Cack" vanished into the New Brunswickian darkness, which is several shades darker than that of Egypt, and disappeared from the view of friends and foes. It is supposed that he is running yet.

Blair retired to a corner to watch but the eagle-eyed revengers spotted him and suggested that he would do as well as Carter. A policeman objected to so many men murdering one victim and begged them to desist. Blair lit out for the stage with the crowd in pursuit. He left his hat behind. Under the obscurity of the stage seat he hid, locking the door behind him. But he had been seen and it was only after great persuasion that the New Brunswick men departed. Blair waited in the stage for the rest of the party, who arrived in Plainfield at about 5 o'clock. The only trace of "Cack" was his hat, which was divided into souvenirs by the New Brunswick belles.

Graduation of Professional Nurses.

The people of Plainfield and vicinity are cordially invited to attend the graduation exercises of the Muhlenberg Hospital Training School, to be held in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Thursday, evening, May 27th, at 8 o'clock. The exercises will comprise the granting of diplomas, interesting addresses and appropriate music. A large attendance will be gratefully appreciated by the young women graduates—arrayed in full professional uniform—and by their personal friends, and also by the hospital governors and officials.

Held Holiday Considered.

The coal and lumber dealers are considering the closing of their yards at 12 o'clock on Saturdays during the summer season. It is expected that the movement will be inaugurated on Saturday next, thus giving the employes from Saturday noon to Tuesday morning.

"FALLING STAR" THERE

A REAL INDIAN WOMAN AT A TRINITY CHURCH AFFAIR.

The Indian Tea Given by the Young Ladies Mission Band Was a Great Success—Participants and the Festivities.

The unusual attraction of a real live Indian woman, combined with the many other pleasing features of the Indian tea, filled the lecture rooms of the Trinity Reformed church to overflowing, last Tuesday, and showed that the proposed enlargement of the room is greatly needed. The Indian tea was the first effort of the Young Ladies Mission Band of the church which was only recently formed, but the success of the tea showed the society to be a very enterprising one.

The first sight to greet the eyes of the visitor was a young Indian brave—David Wyckoff is his name when in citizens clothes—who collected the tickets in true Indian style. Then the room with its gay decorations of American flags and Indian tepees came into view. Around the room flitted brown skinned Indian maidens and charming "Americas," gowned in the national colors, serving the cream and cake.

Right near the entrance was a curiosity that attracted considerable attention. It was a miniature tepee, made by the Indian boys at the Carlyle Indian School, and was a perfect representation. The small opening on the top, the only means of ventilation that the real tepee has, was used to receive the contributions of the visitors for the missionary cause. The tepee was placed on a table covered with sod, on which stood two Indian dolls and a toy pack horse.

In the centre of the room, under a large American flag, stood the tea table, at which "Falling Star," a member of the Abenaka tribe, who is now in New York posing for an artist. She was introduced to the many guests by Mrs. Frank E. Woodruff, and they found "Falling Star" a quiet woman of great intelligence, who was able to converse fluently on the leading topics of the day. At the same table were Miss Minnie Arnold, costumed as an Indian, and Misses Emma Grace Novius in the National colors.

A tepee, made of real Navahjo blankets, had been erected in a corner, and here Miss Emma Gillem and Mrs. Bertha Richards, dressed in Inian costume, sold baskets of Indian make. The tepee was quite a curiosity while hanging on its sides were a diamond rattle snake's skin and the skin of a fox of rare kind.

A tripod of three sticks supported an old-fashioned kettle in another corner, where the kettle boys, Harry W. Marshall, as an Indian maiden, and Mrs. Will F. Williams, as an American, served lemonade.

The cake table was thoroughly American in style and decoration. So were those in charge, Miss Etta Krymer and Miss Minnie Williams.

Small tables were arranged through the room and the visitors were invited to seat themselves and buy ice cream and cake. Miss Grace Emmons and Miss Maud Van Dyke were the Indian waitresses, while America's colors were prominently displayed by the others. Miss Edna DeVere, Miss Jennie Ross, Miss Adelaide Baxter, and Miss Cora Laire, Miss Laura Emmons presided at the cashier's table. Fred Bowden had charge of the serving of the ice cream.

While the sale of the different articles continued all the evening, a programme formed a pleasing diversion. There were several selections by a male quartette, composed of Robert M. Clark, Edward O. Clark, Wm. Holmes and S. T. Barnes. A vocal duet was given by Miss Etta Krymer and Miss Florence Kline, Miss Lillian A. Force acting as accompanist. F. S. Cutter sang a bass solo, Miss Emma Line gave a recitation and Miss Krymer a vocal solo. All the numbers were well rendered and received a hearty round of applause.

The object of the entertainment was to raise funds for the support of the church's missionary, Rev. Frank H. Wright, in Oklahoma. Pictures of that missionary, his mission and some of his converts were shown. The tea was given under the direction of two committees. The programme committee consisted of Miss Lillian A. Force, chairman; Miss Minnie Arnold, Miss Grace Nevius and Mrs. Frank E. Woodruff. The entertainment committee consisted of Miss Etta Krymer and Miss Laura Emmons. The two committees united to decorate and arrange the room, in which they were given valuable assistance by Corra Byno.

Special Council Meeting.

A special meeting of the Common Council will be held Friday evening for the purpose of taking action towards the enforcement of the Martin Act.

CITY NEEDS A SPRINKLER

STREET COMMITTEE TO ASK THE COUNCIL TO BUY ONE.

At Present the City Has to Hire One and it is Not Considered a Paying Investment—Other Street Work Considered.

The committee on streets and sewers held a meeting last Tuesday and considered many important matter. One thing decided upon to ask the Council for at the next meeting is a street sprinkler. At the present time the committee is obliged to hire one and this they do not think is a paying scheme. The members talked over the progress being made on the streets and formulated plans to continue the same. It was also decided to keep the steam roller running as much as possible and not to have such a large gang of men on the streets. Street Cleaner McFadden and his side-partner will be kept busy as formerly, but they will not direct their efforts to the centre of the city. It was noted that the business men in the city allow papers, etc., to be thrown about the streets, and the committee decided that these same streets are not to be cleaned but once a week, no matter how much paper is thrown out. They think that there are other parts of the city where people pay as much tax and sometimes more, and the streets in front of their property will be looked after.

The committee have adopted a system for the repair of the streets and this plan is being carried out. It provides for the repair of roads in order and in this way the whole city will be reached.

SURPRISED THE STATE.

Westfield Disorderly House Keepers Pleaded Guilty.

It was expected that the trials of the Westfield tavern keepers, charged with keeping disorderly houses by selling illegally and on Sundays, would begin in the court of general quarter sessions Tuesday morning and occupy two days.

The defendants were Wm. Clark and Nunzito Vidiani, the "big fat woman," as she is known in Westfield. Prosecutor Marsh and Wm. Imbs, Jr., had subpoenaed for the State a large number of witnesses, most of whom were Italians. Both defendants were in court and surprised the prosecutor by withdrawing their former pleas of not guilty. They pleaded guilty and the date of sentence was fixed for Saturday.

The woman's bondsman surrendered her and she was taken back to the county jail. Clark renewed his surety for appearance on Saturday.

The trials being thus declared off, the petit jurors were not needed, and they were discharged until Monday, June 7th, when several cases are on the calendar for trial.

Falsely Accused.

Miss Agusta Hanson, aged 19 years, was arrested Tuesday on the complaint of Yetell Misicks, of Plainfield avenue. The latter charged that the young woman stole one dollar from his room. The defendant was arrested by Constable Rockafellow and taken before Justice Mosher. The evidence was insufficient, however, to hold the girl and she was released. Mrs. Volkman, the Park avenue florist, was present at the time the case was brought up, and she took an interest in the girl, and engaged her as a servant at her home.

Protest Against a Trolley Franchise

Gideon E. Ludlow and Frank Woodruff, representing the Union County Board of Agriculture, appeared before the Township Committee of Cranford, Monday night, and protested against the granting of a trolley franchise over the county road. The reasons given for opposing the trolley were that it unnecessary, and that the road cost $10,000 a mile. On behalf of the Town Committee, Chairman Hunt said there was no probability of the committee acting favorably on the application for a franchise.

THE PLAINS TERRORIZED.

DARING BURGLARIES COMMITTED EARLY MORNING.

Two Men Arrested Suspected of Having Done the Work—Held on a Disorderly Charge—The Places Which Were Entered.

The quiet town of Scotch Plains was startled last Tuesday by five daring burglaries which took place in rapid succession in the heart of the village between 1 and 2 a. m.

The cracksmen entered the home of Freeholder John Robinson, on Forest avenue, and carried away about $60 in money, a silver watch, a pair of diamond ear-rings belonging to Miss Robinson, a diamond shirt stud and a pair of gold eyeglasses.

At the home of Alexander Macauley, on Bartle avenue, entrance was accomplished through a front parlor window. The family slept soundly and knew nothing of the mischief that was done until this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Macauley awoke and found their clothing missing. A search revealed it scattered about the lower part of the house. A pocket book containing $6 was taken from Mrs. Macauley's dress, and was found on the floor rifled of its contents. A pair of gold eyeglasses with a chain attached, 50 cents in change and a silver watch were also taken.

At the house of George Randolph, on Grand street, the front parlor window was pried open and $6 in money was taken from the pockets of Mr. Randolph's trousers. Bureaus and closets were also ransacked, but little of value was taken.

Mrs. Louis Morel, of Springfield avenue, was awakened at 1:30 o'clock by the noise of someone in her room. A man, who was examining the contents of the bureau, turned at that moment and walked into the hall, where he stood for a brief time, giving the frightened woman a side view of his face. She awoke her husband, but the burglar ran quickly downstairs and escaped through an open window. In this house they secured $2.

The thieves also entered the house of N. O. Chapin, on Stanbury avenue, and that Judge George R. Nicholas, on Park avenue, but were frightened off without securing any booty. It was said that at the latter house a daughter of Judge Nicholas was awakened and saw the intruders.

When a Press reporter called at the house no member of the family was at home and no information could be secured.

The barn of Frank Allen was also visited and a quantity of harness stolen.

Freeholder Robinson is of the opinion that he and his family were chloroformed by the burglars, as they did not hear the slightest noise, although the invaders worked very freely. When the news of the burglaries spread this morning, Constable Wm. Trainor and Deputy Tom Emery remembered having seen a couple of suspicious looking men loitering about the town Tuesday and at night. The citizens complained that these men had been guilty of disorderly conduct after nightfall, and the two officers started in a carriage after the men, who had left town about 9 o'clock. They were overtaken and arrested about two miles out of town on the Washington Valley road.

Detectives Keron, of Elizabeth, and Marsh, of Westfield, were telegraphed for, and at 12:30 o'clock they arrived and cross questioned and searched the prisoners. The suspected men gave the names of James Simmons and John Clark, and both claimed to belong in Elizabethport. Mrs. Morel who caught sight of one of the burglars Tuesday, was called to take a look at the men, but she was not able to identify either one positively.

She describes the man whom she saw as being about five feet eight inches tall, of a dark complexion, and wearing black clothes and a black derby hat. The search conducted by the detectives did not reveal any stolen articles in the men's possession. The formal examination and hearing was conducted by Justice of the Peace Clark in the parlors of Emery's Hotel. A complaint of disorderly conduct was preferred against the suspected men by Wm. H. Turton, a storekeeper.

After hearing the testimony the Justice sentenced the men to pay a fine of $20 or spend 60 days in the county jail. As they were unable to furnish the money they were sent to Elizabeth in the care of constables. Both prisoners are known to Detective Keron, and have "done time" in the county jail.

A MARVELLOUS ESCAPE.

Alexander the III Stood in Constant Fear of Being Assassinated.

Alexander III. of Russia was incessantly haunted by the fear of assassination, and he had good cause to feel anxious. On several occasions his life was saved by what seemed the direct intervention of supernatural power. Once, says a contemporary, his life was preserved by the second thought, itself an inspiration, of an officer of the Czar's body guard. Shortly after General Gourko had been called from Odessa to act as military governor of St. Petersburg, a policeman, posted at the door of the Nevsky Prospect, caught sight early one morning of an equipage coming up the thoroughfares at a trot. It bore armorial devices familiar to everybody. It was driven by a coachman recognized as a servant of Prefect Gourko, and on each side rode the regular escort of mounted Cossacks. General Gourko and his escort—for the guardian of the peace had easily recognized and hastily saluted his chief, the new prefect of police—made their way to the massive White Palace, and the General alighted and rang. To the doorkeeper—an officer of the bodyguard—he briefly stated the object of his visit; he desired an immediate conference with the Czar. The hour was early, but his business brooked no delay, for it concerned the safety of Alexander himself. The janitor was at first inexorable, expostulating that his imperial master had been in bed only an hour; but at last he yielded. Up the broad staircase they went together, pausing in their ascent only when they had reached a landing giving access to one of the capacious saloons. At this point General Gourko was instructed to wait. At this point, too, the Czar's guardian seems to have repented of his decision. Closely scrutinising the prefect of police, and preceding in the direction of the emperor's sleeping apartments, he did not arouse the Czar at all. What he did was to ascend to the guard room and despatch a messenger, during the absence of the Czar calmly slept on. A quarter of an hour later the messenger returned. He had been sent to General Gourko's residence, and he brought back the information that the prefect of police was at least a month in bed. The early visitor, therefore, was an imposter. He was something more, for from his pockets, after he had been seized and pinioned, was drawn forth a six-barrelled revolver and a two-edged hunting knife. The Czar's life had been saved, yet it had hung for a few minutes in the balance. The made-up Gourko—the prefect of police imitated down to the minutest details of hair, complexion and wig—might have deceived himself. Not a whit less perfect was the art which had reproduced the Gourko coach and escort. Only the sham prefect was secured, however; his confederates escaped.

Milton's Wives and Daughters.

Of Milton's three wives and his relations with them, enough has been written. It was a hard thing to be Milton's wife or Milton's daughter. He was stern, he was austere, he was self-centered; his impeccable strength was purchased by a sublime and monotonous egotism—which is the name they give to selfishness in poets. Very still must have been the life of his girls in that Puritan house, reading to the inwrapped Puritan father from languages they did not understand, and, taking down from his lips poetry they understood still less. Milton found them undutiful. Poor little "undutiful" daughters! Fathers had terrible conceptions of duty in those days.—From the Academy.

How Should She Know.

Mr. M., a Reuben Square gentleman, has a telephone in his new house, and he instructed a newly engaged Irish maid servant how to reply in case there should come a call over the wire during the absence of Mr. M. and his wife. One day there came such a call, and Norah went to the telephone.

"Well, sor?" said Norah, with her mouth to the speaking tube.

"Who's that?" came over the wire in a masculine voice.

"It's me, sor."

"And who is me?"

"How the divil should I know who ye are?" retorted Norah.—Harper's Bazaar.

ASSUMED NAMES OF ROYALTY.

They Travel Incognito—Prince of Wales is Earl of Chester.

President Faure's recent interview with Queen Victoria at a French railroad station was a breach of the strict etiquette of royal incognitos, as the Queen on her travels is the Countess of Balmoral, and can be recognized officially only by that title. A similar break with tradition was made last year by King Leopold II of Belgium, while in Paris, in acknowledging the cheers of the crowd for the King of the Belgians and accepting dinner invitations, inasmuch as he had gone to Paris as the Count of Ravenstein and returned to Brussels under the same name. The Prince of Wales has never been in Paris; it is the Earl of Chester who is the hero of all the naughty adventures ascribed to Albert Edward.

One of the first monarchs to use an assumed name on his travels was the Emperor Joseph II, who appeared in Paris in 1777 as Count Falkenstein; Paul I of Russia, while Crown Prince, visited the city under the style of Comte du Nord. Louis XVIII in exile called himself Comte de Lille, Charles X, after he was driven out, Comte de Morles and Louis Philippe Comte de Neuilly. The Duc de Bordeaux, "Henry X," lived all his life under the name of Comte de Chambord. Joseph Bonaparte took the name of Comte de Survilliers when in exile, Hortense Beauharnais, when no longer Queen of Holland, called herself Duchesse de Saint Leu.

In spite of their assumed names, persons who come in contact with these royal travellers are expected to treat them as though the incognito did not exist. In Switzerland alone has the disguise been taken seriously. The late King William III of Holland was once treated like a private person at Geneva, and came near being taken to the police station. One summer evening he undertook to promenade on a hotel piazza without any clothes on; and the subsequent legal proceedings were stopped only on his promising that he would leave Geneva at once. He never returned to the city.—Philadelphia Ledger.

PIKE'S PEAK'S GREAT TUNNEL

To be Completed in Seven Years and Cost $20,000,000.

Two parties of workmen have begun work in Colorado the longest railroad tunnel ever attempted to construct. The main bore will be [illegible] and, connecting with [illegible] secondary tunnels with a [illegible] of thirty miles. So, it seems, the task has been put under way which will obviate the [illegible] of climbing over the [illegible] and [illegible] foot of this vast [illegible] under Pike's Peak [illegible] mountains that tower on each [illegible]. The starting point of the main tunnel is at the foot of the mountain [illegible] up to Pike's Peak, near the town of Colorado City. The point is but a short distance from the railroads which span the country between Colorado Springs and Manitou. Two gangs of men, as stated, are working on the tunnel, one at each end. Just at present they are making progress at the rate of 30 feet a day. It is believed that the mammoth task they have undertaken will be completed in seven years.

The main tunnel will pass directly under the cone of Pike's Peak at a depth of nearly 7,000 feet, and 2,700 feet beneath the town of Victor. Its average depth from the surface will be 2,800 feet, and it is designed to test the mineral deposits of the territory at these great depths. Thirty miles of lateral tunnels branching off from these will pass underneath all the Cripple Creek district at an average depth of 2,800 feet. Cripple Creek, Victor, Gillette, the various small towns and a thousand mines are to be made tributary to this vast system of subterranean passages.

Under present circumstances the distance—the shortest way—from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek is fifty miles. By way of the tunnel the two cities will be only sixteen miles apart.

A feature of the transportation system of the tunnel is that electric locomotives will be the power before the freight trains. The tunnel will, of course, be lighted by electricity.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

QUEEN AND PRIMA-DONNA.

Tact Shown by Jenny Lind When the Situation was Embarrassing.

There is a pretty story told of Queen Victoria and Jenny Lind. It belongs to the year 1848, and shows how the modesty of two women, the Queen of England and the queen of song, prevented a momentary awkwardness which the gentle tact of the singer overcame. It was on the night when Jenny Lind was to sing at Her Majesty's Theatre that the Queen made her first public appearance after the memorable Quarter day. For the great artiste, too, this was a first appearance, for it was the beginning of a season at a place where, the year before, she had won unparalleled fame. It happened that the Queen entered the royal box at the same moment that the prima-donna stepped upon the stage. Instantly a tumult of acclamation burst from every corner of the theatre. Jenny Lind modestly retired to the back of the stage, waiting till the demonstration of loyalty to the throne was complete. Then the Queen, refusing to appropriate to herself that which she imagined to be intended for the artiste, made no acknowledgment. The cheering continued, increased, grew overwhelming, and still the Queen acknowledgment from either the stage or the royal box. At length, when the situation became embarrassing, Jenny Lind, with ready tact, ran forward to the footlights and sang "God Save the Queen," which was caught up at the end of the solo by the orchestra, chorus, and audience. The Queen then came to the front of her box and bowed, and the opera was resumed.

Big Profits From the Porcupine.

Porcupine quills are a necessary of life to anglers, for they make excellent floats for bottom-fishing. Also scores of penholders are made from the black and white spikes, and many kinds of ornamental screens and fans are picked out of bits of these quills.

Something like two million porcupine quills reach Britain every year, and they chiefly come from India, also a few from Spain. The animal has to be hunted and killed before the quills can be obtained, and many hundreds of porcupines are slain for this purpose every year. The quills are carefully extracted and dried, packed in crates, and shipped away to Europe, where they are used for all manner of things in the way of fishing and ornamentation. A porcupine is always worth killing, for every "spike-pig" carries ten shillings worth of quills on his fretful back.

The Prince not Nervous.

Nervousness is a thing with which the Prince of Wales is but little afflicted. Once at a scientific carnival while Dr. Playfair was showing the Prince and his party round, they came to a big vat of chemicals, which were fuming and fusing away in a very forbidding fashion. The Prince seemed much interested in this. Dr. Playfair asked the Prince to dip his fingers in the liquid. There was a titter and some dismay among those who heard; but the Prince, nothing loth, hooked the doctor straight in the face, put his hand into the blessing caldron, and found the liquid as cold as ice. The explanation was that some chemicals, when they boil, give out cold instead of heat.—Tid-Bits.

A HERMIT'S LOVE FOR JENNY LIND.

His Life Ruined by the Practical Joke of Some Young Lovers.

Jenny Lind is dead, but in a filthy hovel on the road from Glasco, Ulster County, to the Hudson River, at Ulster Landing, lives a lasting remembrance of her in a poor mad hermit who lost his mind through a practical joke, which aroused in him a violent love for the great singer.

Early in the fifties, when Jenny Lind was creating a mad furor here by her wonderful singing, there lived in Kingston, N. Y., a young carpenter named Tobias Van Steenberg. He never had a very strong mind, but was a good and steady workman, thrifty and prosperous. He had accumulated several hundred dollars in the savings bank, and had built himself a good house. He was not the sort of a man to make an enemy, but he was a good deal of a favorite with all as a jester could hope to find. Several young lawyers in Kingston had noted Van-Steenber's peculiarities.

One day he was seen looking earnestly at a cheap cut of Jenny Lind in one of the windows. It took but a few young lawyers saw an opportunity for another practical joke, so they began to talk to him about Jenny Lind, and soon made him think she was in love with him. They afterward managed to have letters sent to him from Noel York having a ball to visit the United States every year at a value of $80 per ton, most of it coming from Italy. In the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee boneset, pennyroyal and thorn apple leaves are cultivated, as well as mandrake, black root and black cohosh, all of which are used in patent medicines. California and Cape Cod are the homes of hehehound, which makes a cough medicine.

This country raises a greater variety of herbs and roots than any other, producing those that grow in cold and hot climates, as well as those that thrive on dry mountain tops and in the humid valleys. Burdock, angelica and bayberry are some of these roots, and others are pokeroot, unicorn root, cascarilla, cramp bark, thyme and pigeon berry.—New York Journal.

WANTED TO BE ACTORS.

A Sample of Queer Notes Received by Stage Professionals.

A note addressed to Boniface Tree read to a Strand magazine reporter the other day ran as follows:

"Veneered Sir: I wish to go on the stage, and I would like to join your valuable theatre. I have been a bricklayer for five years, having failed in this business I have decided to take on acting, it being easier work. I am not young, but am six foot tall without any boots. I have studied Bell's system of elocution and am fond of late hours."

The incident which this suggests was told by a friend who was playing Rosalind at the time here in Boston, and playing it, as she fairied, rather acceptably. As she entered her dressing room at the theatre one night, a note was handed to her which read in this wise:

"Dere lady I worked for a dentist but I have spoiled so many of his teeth saying over your part in the play that now I can say it just as well as you do, and I want to try it to-night. Come and see if I can't for the dentist says he cannot have me say more and I must pay for his teeth; and so I must go on the stage and I will be here at 7 o'clock."

The exchange was not made.—From Time and The Hour.

Princeton's Gain.

Mr. Laurence Hutton has given his famous collection of masks to Princeton University. There are over seventy masks in the lot, nearly all of them of very noted personages. It is the only notable collection of the sort in existence, and Mr. Hutton has been adding to it for the last thirty years. The story of its beginning is that one day, as long ago as the civil war, while Mr. Hutton was still a clerk in a New York store, he was standing in a book shop when a boy came in with a death mask of Franklin, and asked to the proprietor of the shop for fifty cents. Mr. Hutton identified the mask as one of Franklin, and assisted in the transaction. Mr. Hutton followed the boy out, learned that he had found the mask in an ash barrel, and that there were more. Next he located the barrel, and found in it six masks, which turned out to be another mask of Franklin, others of Wordsworth, Scott and Cromwell, and casts from the skulls of Robert Burns and Robert Bruce. So the collection began.—Harper's Weekly.

The Temple Were Premature.

During the rebellion the 19th Maine acquired a reputation for foraging the country so thoroughly that they were said to have starved the confederacy out. One day they were sweeping along dining on the fat of the land as usual. Another troop was ahead, and hewed their way through the rock Gen. Hancock. As the general was passing one plantation the proprietor came out and hailed his party.

"General," said he, "I want some sort of safeguard. The troops that have just gone by stole my pigs, lifted my hen roosts and emptied my cellar."

"I am very sorry," said Hancock.

"Yes," continued the old man, "they stole everything but my hope of immortality. Thank God, none of them can steal that."

"Don't be too sure of that," retorted the general; "the 19th Maine is coming next."—San Francisco Argonaut.

QUEER HERBS GROWN HERE.

Absinthe Now Made in American and Michigan Sage Worth $140 a Ton.

The manufacture of genuine French absinthe is the latest American industry. This is guaranteed to be the real stuff, straight from the boulevards.

It is made from the common wormwood which is found in many old New England gardens, and from which a thick oil is distilled. It has been found by an examination of custom house exports that sixty years ago large quantities of this American wormwood were exported from New York and Vermont to France, where it was used in making absinthe.

But so large has the home consumption now grown that we now use all the wormwood for our own production, as well as five times as much, which is imported from France and Germany. The American wormwood is regarded as the best in the world.

Another expensive herb which is grown here is saffron, which is worth from $6 to $8 per pound. Until quite recently the chief supply of saffron came from Vermont, but a severe drought having cut it short in that State, it has been found in Michigan there are vast fields of peppermint, which is cultivated carefully and sells for a high price. Another medicinal herb grown in Michigan is sage, which will sold at 140 per ton, in addition to which 100 tons of sage are shipped to the United States every year at a value of $80 per ton, most of it coming from Italy.

In the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee boneset, pennyroyal and thorn apple leaves are cultivated, as well as mandrake, black root and black cohosh, all of which are used in patent medicines. California and Cape Cod are the homes of hehehound, which makes a cough medicine.

Bicycle Skates a Wonder.

An ingenious and practical machine is now manufactured, which is a combination of the bicycle and the roller skate. The skater carries on each foot something that is very much like a miniature bicycle.

A bicycle skate consists of a steel platform connected by a system of forks, with two wheels about six inches in diameter, one in front of the foot and the other behind. The foot of the skater is about six inches from the ground. The wheels being at the extremities of the platform the base on which the two feet rests is very long, and the point of support is made as strong as possible.

The wheels are fitted with ball bearings and tires of hollow rubber. Pneumatic tires have been discarded as not strong enough.

The bicycle skates were invented in England and have already been used extensively in that country and in France. A proficient rider can easily travel from ten to fifteen miles an hour.

It is claimed for the skates that they give the riders the advantages of bicycle riding and walking at the same time. With them a man can go as fast as he would on a bicycle when riding for pleasure. When he comes to a place where a bicycle would not do he can take off his skates and carry them with him. Thus he may climb a mountain, get over a fence or walk in a wood without inconvenience when out with his skates.—New York Journal.

A Sparrow's Ride in a Fly Wheel.

Birds have all sorts of queer adventures, but perhaps what was the oddest one of recent days is that which befell a sparrow at Anderson, Ind. It flew into a mill where the machinery, and, getting too near, a small wheel was sucked in. The workmen noticed it go into the wheel, but knowing that the cylinder was revolving at a speed of 130 revolutions a minute, took it for granted that the bird had been killed. When the factory shut down at noon the men were astonished to hear a gentle chirp from the wheel, and lo, there was the sparrow as well as ever. They found that the bird had clung to the strengthening rod of the wheel and there in a state of dazed condition. They picked him up and put him on a table, and thence, after collecting his wits, the little bird flew to freedom. The wheel in which the bird rode made 21,000 revolutions while it was going, and so the tiny feathered creature travelled seventy-three and eight-tenths miles in the embrace of a fly wheel.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Valuable Invention.

An inventor recently went to the British War Office with an explosive that he said would destroy any army against which it was directed. "It is the most powerful explosive the world ever saw," said the inventor, "and I propose to put up a balloon over an army that would attack us, setting the fuse so that it might send the moment the balloon floated over the army of the enemy." "That is all very good, indeed," said the Secretary of War, interrupting him, "except that a current of air should carry your explosive over our army—what then?" "Well," said the inventor, laying his hand on the right honorable gentleman's arm, "I tell you what it is, my friend—our army would run away just as fast and run like the very dickens."—New York Tribune.

Banana Leaves.

Banana-leaves serve many purposes, for of them are made tough paper, from the thinnest tissue to thickest cardboard, clothing, hats and brushes, mats and hammocks. Millions of pounds of banana fibre, unnamed Manila "hemp," are each year brought to the United States to be taken to Europe, and spun into cordage from the fineness of silk up through the size of twine to the biggest of mammoth ropes, and many a dainty handkerchief and bit of fine lace has been woven from the fibres of banana-leaves by the deft fingers of the women of South America and of the far East.

One Way to Grow Rich.

A very rich Frenchman called "Pere" Chapalier made his fortune by utilising the stale bread of Paris, not only that which came directly from households but also that found among the garbage of the city. Chapalier was a manufacturer of bread crumbs. He pulverised the stale bread collected by a multitude of agents, and either sold the crumbs to restaurants for kitchen use or remanufactured and baked them in the form of loaves for the poor.—New York Sun.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

A FEW GRAPHIC INSTANCES OF THE SUFFERINGS ENCOUNTERED.

Great Britain's Responsibility. What has Become of the $20,000,000 Set Aside in 1877 for such Distress as is now Experienced by the Mohammedans.

Fifty million human beings starving to death—one-tenth that number already beyond all suffering—that is the frightful story to be recorded in telling of the present famine in India.

It is a black spot in British history, and naturally the British papers, with their misplaced patriotism, are anxious to conceal the true state of affairs.

To more fully understand how it is possible for one of the wealthiest countries in the world to be thus periodically afflicted it should be remembered that almost the entire wealth is in the hands of the few—a few thousand, perhaps—and that the great mass of nearly three hundred million beings live in abject poverty.

Then, too, nearly every Hindoo is a vegetarian, and would rather die than touch meat.

After the famine of 1877 the Government set aside twenty million pounds sterling to be used in case of another famine. Crops proved good for nearly twenty years, and then came the scarcity of last year. Of course, the Viceroy at once inquired for the fund in question and learned that it had been diverted into other channels. Report had it that the money was used to repair roads and to fortify certain mountain passes, but the term diversion in this case covered a multitude of sins. The fact of the matter was that the money had disappeared with the exception of about $1,000,000, which was not even a drop in the bucket.

They all say the money has been diverted from its original purpose, and some assert that much of it was stolen by an English political ring.

The great Famine Fund was raised by taxing the natives, and handled solely by Englishmen, thousands of whom are now living in luxury in London, while their victims starve on the plains of India.

To show the extent of the famine, a Methodist missionary, stationed at Jabalpur, can be quoted as saying that in that district alone 28,000 died from starvation in four months. At Poona, one of the plague centres of India, the state of affairs beggars description. The unfortunates simply drop wherever they may be, and, being fatalists, they simply remain passive until death overtakes them.

In one instance, a group of father, mother and two children was being photographed. When the photographer sought to alter their poses he found that the entire family had passed into the next world. The blood of the starving wretches becomes so thin that the heart ceases to beat, and they sit in a dull stupor, caring for nothing and practically oblivious to everything.

One of the missionaries reports a trip he took through the central provinces. According to him, the natives are so emaciated as to scarcely resemble human beings. They fight like tigers over a grain of rice, and in many cases commit suicide through means of poisonous herbs obtained in the jungle.

The description of one of these stricken beings is awful. The head is out of all proportion, the legs and arms are like sticks, the skin looks like shrivelled up parchment and is covered with bleeding festering sores.

In many cases the women try to sell their children to the Europeans in hope of saving the lives of the babes. When the parents find that children are not saleable merchandise they return to their villages in the vain hope that aid will come. First they live on one meal a day, then on a meal in two days, and finally they starve.

One very interesting phase of the famine is that the natives consider it a visitation of their gods, and refuse to help themselves, declaring that fate means them to starve. So strong is this hmooted feeling of fatalism that a Hindoo will not get out of the way of an approaching carriage.

"If the gods will that I be run over, it will be so," he says, and he will not budge an inch. Entreaties, and even beatings, will have no effect, and the carriage will have to turn aside.

The constitution of the Hindoo is illitted by nature to withstand such a visitation as a famine. Insult a Hindoo and he will squat himself in a corner and determine to die. And before a week has passed he will have plied away. His blood is naturally thin, and in no condition to long withstand the ravages of hunger.

The cases of the wives of the better class natives is very sad. These are the people of whose sufferings one hears least. Mohammedan women are never seen, of course. They live for no eyes but their husbands'. In many and many an empty house in India, to-day these poor women are proudly but quietly passing from health to emaciation, and from emaciation to death.

The great question of caste that divides the people of India into numerous social strata and which is enexplicably mixed with religious, commercial and political prejudices distrodes itself even in the face of death.—New York Journal.

LEE'S SURRENDER.

General Grant's Account of This Most Important War Event.

"On the 8th I had followed the army of the Potomac in the rear of Lee. I was suffering very severely with a sick headache, and stopped at a farmhouse on the road some distance in the rear of the main body of the army. I spent the night in bathing my feet in hot water and mustard, and putting mustard plasters on my wrists and the back part of my neck, hoping to be cured by morning. During the night I received Lee's answer to my letter of the 8th, inviting an interview between the lines on the following morning. I found him at the house of Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, with Colonel Marshall, one of his staff officers, awaiting my arrival. General Lee was dressed in a full uniform which was entirely new, and was wearing a sword of considerable value, very likely the sword which had been presented by the State of Virginia; at all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field. In my rough travelling suit, the uniform of a private with the straps of a lieutenant-general, I must have contrasted very strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterwards.

"General Lee, after all was completed and before taking his leave, remarked that his army was in a very bad condition for want of food, and that they were without forage; that his men had been living for some days on parched corn exclusively, and that he would have to ask me for rations and forage. I told him 'certainly,' and asked, for how many men he wanted rations. His answer was 'about twenty-five thousand,' and I authorized him to send his own commissary and quartermaster to Appomattox Station, two or three miles away, where he could have, out of the trains we had stopped, all the provisions wanted. As for forage, we had ourselves depended almost entirely upon the country for that.

"When Lee and I separated he went back to his lines and I returned to the house of Mr. McLean. Here the officers of both armies came in great numbers, and seemed to enjoy the meeting as though they had been friends separated for a long time while fighting battles under the same flag. For the time being it looked very much as if all thought of the war had escaped their minds."

THE REUNION OF DESCENDENTS.

For the first time since the death of General Grant in the summer of 1885, there will be a reunion of the Grant family, and at the magnificent ceremony which is to mark the completion of the Grant mausoleum this group of children and grandchildren of the great soldier will be one of the most interesting features of the day. Some of the grandchildren were not born until several years after the death of the General, and, consequently, the reunion will be more numerous than on any previous occasion.

GRANT'S MOST FAMOUS DISPATCH.

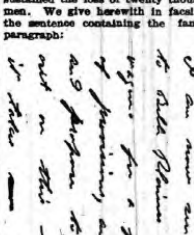
"I Propose to Fight It Out On This Line If It Takes All Summer."

In the January number of The Century General Horace Porter gives the origin of the famous message from General Grant which electrified the country—"I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." As General Porter's article shows, it was a passage from a letter, and not a laconic message as was supposed when the extract first appeared in the newspapers.

General Grant and his army had been "lost in the Wilderness" for three days. Rumors had reached Washington of terrific fighting and fearful loss of life; the people of the whole nation were almost breathless with anxiety and fear of a terrible defeat, with consequences more disastrous than ever before.

GENERAL GRANT 1865.

Then came a letter from Grant to Halleck. It was written after weeks of hard fighting, and when it was known to General Grant that his army had sustained the loss of twenty thousand men. We give herewith in facsimile the sentence containing the famous paragraph:



Halleck at once took the letter to President Lincoln, to whom it was a great relief. He joyfully exclaimed, as he read the terse sentence aloud, "We will give that to the country!" and the next morning the people learned that Grant and the army were safe. Remembering that other laconic message at Fort Donelson, "I propose to move immediately on your works," the country applauded, and fully believed that we had a soldier and a fighter at the head of the Army of the Potomac.

SHERMAN'S OPINION OF GRANT.

A Letter Written Fifteen Years After the War by Old Tecumseh.

The letter which follows was printed from the original by the Century Magazine. It is significant as representing, fourteen years after the war, General Sherman's frank and deliberate judgment of General Grant's characteristics.

"I don't believe Grant's head has been turned or confused one iota by the extraordinary displays in his honor at San Francisco or elsewhere. He is a strange character. Nothing like it is portrayed by Plutarch or the many who have striven to portray the great men of ancient or modern times. I knew him as a cadet at West Point, as a lieutenant of the Fourth Infantry, as a citizen of St. Louis, and as a growing general all through a bloody civil war. Yet to me he is a mystery, and I believe he is a mystery to himself. I am just back from Chicago, where he had a reception equal in numbers and display to that of San Francisco. I was president of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, the first he commanded, with which he achieved the great victories of Forts Henry and Donelson, of Shiloh, and of Vicksburg. As such I presided at two great assemblages of people, at the theater and at the banquet hall. In both cases I sat by him, and directed all the proceedings. He was as simple, as awkward, as when he was a cadet; but all he did and all he said had good sense and modesty as the basis. No man in America has held higher office or been more instrumental in guiding great events, and without elaborating, I give you what I construe to be the philosophy of his life: a simple faith that our country must go on, and by keeping up with the events of the day he will be always right—for whatever is right."

GRANT'S MEMOIRS.

He Felt Compelled to Write Them for the Money They Brought.

The cause which led General Grant to write his memoirs is thus given in the preface to the first volume:

"Man proposes and God disposes. There are but few important events in the affairs of men brought about by their own choice.

"Although frequently urged by friends to write my memoirs I had determined never to do so, nor to write anything for publication. At the age of nearly sixty-two I received an injury from a fall, which confined me closely to the house while it did not apparently affect my general health. This made study a pleasant pastime. Shortly after, the rascality of a business partner developed itself by the announcement of a failure. This was followed soon after by universal depression of all securities, which seemed to threaten the extinction of a good part of the income still retained, and for which I am indebted to the kindly act of friends. At this juncture the editor of the Century Magazine asked me to write a few articles for him. I consented for the money it gave me; for at that moment I was living upon borrowed money. The work I found congenial, and I determined to continue it. The event is an important one for me, for good or evil; I hope for the former.

THE BROOKLYN STATUE.

"In preparing these volumes for the public, I have entered upon the task with the sincere desire to avoid doing injustice to anyone, whether on the National or Confederate side, other than the unavoidable injustice of not making mention often where special mention is due. There must be many errors of omission in this work, because the subject is too large to be treated of in two volumes in such way as to do justice to all the officers and the men engaged. There were thousands of instances, during the rebellion, of individual, company, regimental and brigade deeds of heroism which deserve special mention and are not here alluded to. The troops engaged in them will have to look to the detailed reports of their individual commands for the full history of those deeds.

"The first volume, as well as a portion of the second, was written before I had reason to suppose I was in a critical condition of health. Later I was reduced almost to the point of death, and it became impossible for me to attend to anything for weeks. I have, however, somewhat regained my strength, and am able, often, to devote as many hours a day as a person should devote to work. I would have more hope of satisfying the expectations of the public if I could have allowed myself more time. I have used my best efforts, with the aid of my eldest son, F. D. Grant, assisted by his brothers, to verify from the records every statement of fact given. The comments are my own, and show how I saw the matters treated of whether others saw them in the same light or not.

"With these remarks I present these volumes to the public, asking no favor but hoping they will meet the approval of the reader.

GRANT AND BUCKNER.

The Union General would not Consent to Terms, But Offered His Purse.

It was in 1862 when General Simon B. Buckner, a former class-mate of Grant, had, in following the orders of his superior officers in the Confederacy, become hopelessly entangled at Donelson, that Grant wrote his famous "unconditional surrender dispatch."

Buckner had sought to extricate his troops from a very serious dilemma, a pressing letter of defeat, by proposing to General Grant that commissions from both sides be appointed to settle terms of capitulation.

To this Grant replied: "Yours of this date proposing armistice, and appointment of commissioners to settle terms of capitulation is just received. No terms except an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works."

It is a matter of history that General Buckner surrendered before the time limit indicated by the word "immediately" had expired.

After the surrender, and when General Buckner had gone aboard the transport that was to convey him North, General Grant took him aside and said, in his gentle, half-diffident way: "Buckner, you may be going among strangers, and I hope you will allow me to share my purse with you." Buckner thanked him for his kindness, and told him that he had made provisions so that he would not require financial assistance.

A few years later, the funeral cortege of the great general who had hurled the successful columns against the Southern lines along the crest of Missionary Ridge, and who had brought final defeat to the Southern arms in Virginia was followed by no more sincere mourners than the Southern generals who came from far away homes to pay a last tribute of friendship to the memory of Grant.

One of these Confederate generals, who served as a pall-bearer at the funeral, was General Simon Bolivar Buckner, of Kentucky.

GEN. GRANT'S DARK DAYS.

An Incident in His Life Ten Years Previous to Lee's Surrender.

"I have not a cent to my name; will you allow me to sleep to-night on that lounge?"

"I am greatly obliged, but I will save that and sleeping on the lounge and use the dollar for my dinner and breakfast.

So this man who was penniless slept in a rickety old lounge in a back office in San Francisco and the next morning said he had slept well. He added, with a pleased look, that he had saved his dollar. Ten years later this shabby and penniless man, having changed his fortunes by his own exertions and consummate genius, received the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee, for the shabby man was no other than Ulysses S. Grant.

The story was told by Gen. W. H. L. Barnes to an assemblage of army and navy officers, active and retired, representing all branches of the service, mostly men whose beards and hair have become silvered since they threw their caps in the air, nearly thirty-two years ago, when Lee capitulated at Appomattox. The meeting was one of the California commandery of the military order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, and the occasion was designated as a "Grant night."

THE TEXAS RANGERS.

A PECULIAR ORGANIZATION OF THE LONE STAR STATE.

Process of the Frontier's Man—Desperate Experiences With the Outlaw—A Gruesome Tale of the Killing of One by a Ranger.

The Texas rangers form a military organization peculiar to the Lone Star State. Never was there a more appropriate name for the fighting portion of a frontier people. From the beginning it has been their business to range over the frontier and hunt thieves and outlaws, and fight bands of hostile Indians.

At this time there are only a few companies of rangers in the field. Doubtless Capt. Brooks' company, with headquarters at Cotulla, is not only the most complete organization in the service, but one from which the most is expected. This company is engaged in protecting and guarding the Rio Grande border.

A ranger carries a Winchester in a scabbard attached to his saddle under his left leg. With a revolver at his belt, the inevitable lariat at the horn of his saddle, a blanket and a little wallet containing a morsel of food, the ranger is accoutered for galloping over a hundred or more miles of the Rio Grande plains without ever dismounting. This company lives in camp and their presence on the border is accounted for by the fact that the country for a considerable distance on both sides of the Rio Grande is the hiding place for desperadoes, outlaws and cattle thieves.

A stout ranger tells a story of a recent battle with a desperate outlaw that presents features of such a startling and horrible character that the paranoeritic of the cold facts taxes the credulity of one not familiar with scenes upon a field of carnage. This ranger suddenly rode within earshot of the man he wanted, and he called to him to surrender. The outlaw replied with a rifle shot, accompanying the echo of the firearm with a laugh and the words, "The guard dies; it never surrenders." "Ah, you have been reading Victor Hugo while hiding in the brush," muttered the ranger to himself. The ranger opened fire with his Winchester, but his horse was almost flying over the rough ground, and he failed to put a bullet either in the body of the thief or his horse. He drew his revolver, but to his chagrin there was something wrong with the mechanism of the weapon, and it failed to fire. A dozen bullets whistled about the ranger's head, but fortunately not one struck him. It soon became evident to both parties that each one had emptied his weapons. The ranger, by the merest accident, had at his belt an old Mexicon sword. It was a long, straight blade, as sharp as a razor and resembling a modern Bowie knife more than anything else.

He was almost at the heels of the outlaw's horse, and happening to think of the old sword, he drew it from the scabbard and, swinging it over his head, once more he called to the outlaw to surrender, but the desperate man replied by driving the steel into the flanks of his horse. The bright blade flashed through the air, and stuck the outlaw on the back of the neck. It was a master stroke, the result of which astonished the ranger. The head of the outlaw spun through the air and fell into a bunch of cactus. That of itself was sufficiently horrible, but there was something still more amazing and blood-curdling in front of the ranger. The headless trunk of the outlaw did not fall from the flying horse. The blood was spurting high into the air from the arteries of the neck, but the body sat in the saddle with arms and legs clinging to the animal and looking as rigid as if they were made of iron. A dozen or more ranchers who were riding the range had heard the firing, and they were riding in a gallop to the ranger's assistance from an opposite direction. As they rode over a low ridge the first thing they saw was the headless outlaw, not twenty steps away, and coming towards them as if the horse's feet were hardly touching the earth. Not one packed courage. They had proved that in a dozen battles, but they had already began to retreat into the brush, so much terrified to open their mouths, when the headless body of the outlaw dropped from the saddle and struck the ground in a heap of gore. The body had clung to the saddle for 200 yards. The ranchers corroborate the story of the ranger, and they say that the arms and legs of the dead man were like pieces of iron. The limbs were so firm in death that it would have been impossible to have bent them in any direction without breaking them.

The Texas rangers are brave men. It is doubtful whether there is another military organization on earth that encounters so many hardships and faces so many dangers. Ulla soldiers familiar with campaigning say they would rather serve in the ranks of any army in Europe during actual war than to be a Texas ranger. Watchful and grave enough while riding through the canyons, the mountain and the plains where they can look about them they are ready to tell a story or sing a song.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

COST OF EDUCATION.

The average cost per pupil of maintaining the public schools of New Jersey for 1893 was $9.59. The counties exceeding this average were the following: Bergen, $15.03; Essex, $11.79; Ocean, $11.25; Sussex, $10.89; Union, $10.80; Monmouth, $10.74; Camden, $10.60; Gloucester, $10.39; Hunterdon, $9.62. Here are the average salaries paid to female school teachers in a number of towns: Somerville, $450; North Plainfield, $480; Orange, $503; Westfield, $575; Cranford, $521; Morristown, $586; Bloomfield, $537.79; Rutherford, $600. These figures naturally do not give a fair idea of the individual salaries because one or two highly paid persons in a small town raise the average considerably. But it should be laid down as a settled principle that money saved by paying school teachers less than they earn is the poorest kind of economy. A good teacher is not merely a machine to communicate her knowledge to the children; she should have such qualities of mind and heart as will enable her to wield a powerful influence for good on pupils at their most susceptible age, and to get and retain the services of the right kind of teachers fair compensation should be paid.—New York Tribune.

REFORM NEEDED HERE.

Governor Griggs has pointed out the incompetency of the Legislative engrossing department. This ancient system has caused all the trouble. There have been repeated efforts for a number of years to abolish the engrossing department of the House and Senate. Nearly all errors in bills which the Governor vetoed were made by this department. The engrossed bill is never closely scrutinized by the committees, and it frequently happens that amendments made to the printed bill are never inserted in the engrossed bill. It is the engrossed bill upon which the Governor acts. When a bill is certified to the Governor as having passed the House or Senate, as is the custom, the Governor takes it for granted that amendments made and reprinted in the printed bill have been inserted in the engrossed copy. He is without authority to act upon the printed bill. Therefore it frequently happens that measures which have received the approval of the House and Senate, and which would be approved by the Governor, are nullified by the carelessness of the clerks of the engrossing department of either the House or the Senate.

MUST REINSTATE VETERANS.

The Court of Errors and Appeals Monday decided constitutional the law of 1889, which provides that in certain cases honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the civil war may not be removed from office except for cause. The decision was given in the case of Ebenezer Francis, a veteran, who seeks reinstatement as clerk in the City Auditor's office of Newark, from which he was removed two years ago. The decision is important, as deciding for the first time that the object of the different acts bearing on the subject is not unconstitutional. The Supreme Court did not decide the question of constitutionality, but decided the case on other points. There are many cases pending in the courts that will be affected by the decision.

NO MORE TOLL ROADS.

The legislature passed and the governor signed the bill abolishing turnpike companies and providing that the State pay one third of the purchase money extinguishing the few charters remaining. The abolition of the toll roads is a good thing In their day they were excellent; they served their purpose, but are now obsolete. The main objection to the toll was that part which provided payment for the charters. Perhaps it was a necessity, but it enabled the old turnpike companies to sell at pretty fair figures that which had little or no especial value, and was fast losing what little it had. —Elizabeth Journal.

LOCAL ATHLETES WON.

PLAINFIELDERS SECURED FOUR FIRST PRIZES AT SCHOLASTIC GAMES.

George Proctor Smith Again Distinguished Himself by Winning the Individual Championship by Scoring Most Points.

The second annual field meeting of the New Jersey Interscholastic Athletic Association was held at the grounds of the New Jersey Athletic Club, Saturday afternoon. Although only four contestants went from Plainfield as representatives of the High School, they succeed in capturing four firsts and two seconds. George Proctor Smith again won the individual championship of the State by scoring the most number of points of any one contestant.

C. A. Sulzer and H. E Manvel, of Pingry's school, had everything their own way in the runs and divided the honors. In the hurdles, F. Jones and S. H. Plum, Jr., both of Newark Academy, won the events. W. N. McCully, of Pingry's, won the mile bicycle race, with L. M. Hillman, of the Plainfield High School, half a length behind. Hillman and Harry Cuming won their heats and Cuming had a fine show for third in the final when he was thrown by a collision with one of the other riders. The time was 2:32 2-5.

In the field even's Plainfield made its best showing. There was no one from the High School in the high jump and Smith made no showing in the broad jump. The other events were as follows: Pole Vault for Height —Won by George P. Smith, Plainfield High School, with 9 feet 6 inches; Roger Moore, Bordentown Military Academy, second, with 9 feet 5 inches; W. Lawson, Montclair High School, third, with 8 feet 6 inches. Throwing Twelve Pound Hammer—Won by Carroll L. Runyon, Plainfield High School, with 102 feet 11 inches; Geo. P. Smith, Plainfield High School, second, with 98 feet 5 inches; E. P. Underwood, Pingry School, third, with 96 feet 8 inches. Putting Twelve Pound Shot—Won by George P. Smith, Plainfield High School, with 37 feet 11½ inches; E. P. Underwood, Pingry School, second, with 36 feet 6 inches; A. M. Lindley, Montclair High School, third, with 36 feet 2½ inches. Throwing the Discus—Won by George P. Smith, Plainfield High School, with 92 feet 11½ inches; E. P. Underwood, Pingry School, second, with 81 feet 11½ inches; W. H. Barrows, third, with 81 feet 5 inches. In each case the State record was broken. Runyon's defeat of Smith in throwing the hammer was not a great surprise, as it was known that Runyon was doing by far the best at practice, Smith excelled his own record in the pole vault. The scores by points were as follows: Pingry School of Elizabeth, 47; Newark Academy, 44; Plainfield High School, 26; Montclair High School, 11; Bordentown Military Academy, 4; Stevens School, 3; East Orange High School, 0.

BOROUGH DISTURBERS.

Several Delinquents From Law and Order Before Recorder Thomas.

For the first time in many weeks the borough court Monday morning was a scene of activity. Charles Williams was the first prisoner arraigned before Recorder Thomas. He had been rushing the "growler" from a residence in the rear of French's carriage factory, but after repeated warnings he still persisted, besides being noisy and disturbing the peace. He was arrested by Chief Wilson. He was given sixty days to sober up.

The next on the docket was a happy quartette, consisting of George Zelsz, Calvin Sutton, William MacConnell and Albert De Nise. Early Sunday morning this quartette was stationed on the Watchung avenue bridge, and all of them, being somewhat the worse for drink, persisted in giving an open-air concert much to the annoyance of the neighbors. The programme was a varied one and was not wholly harmonious. Chief Wilson heard the noise on Somerset street and at once started to hunt up the origin. At the same time Sergeant Kiely was given a tip and he searched for the disturbance on this side of the brook. In a few minutes the men were discovered and were quick to learn that the officers were after them. They made an attempt to get on this side. The Sergeant was on guard, however, and the men remained where they were until Chief Wilson and Marshal Kliner took them in charge. It cost Zelsz $15 for his part in the concert, while Sutton paid $10, and McConnell was fined $2. De Nise was allowed to go with a reprimand.

According to the newspapers, an Ohio husband became the happy father of seven children not long ago. Of the seven all lived but one. It is to be hoped he laid in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, the only sure cure for croup, whooping-cough, colds and coughs, and so insured his children against these diseases. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

THREE MIRACULOUS ESCAPES IN A BOROUGH RUNAWAY.

A Farm Horse Became Frightened and Pitched a Woman and Little Girl Out of the Wagon and Then Ran Over a Baby.

A runaway occurred on Grove street Sunday which almost resulted in the death of three lives. The escape was, indeed, a miraculous one. Mrs. Albert and her seven-year-old daughter, who live over the mountains, were on their way home and to avoid the trolley cars they passed through Grove street. The horse Mrs. Albert was driving was a large one, attached to a Rockaway wagon. Before they reached Linden avenue the animal took a notion to run and in spite of every effort which Mrs. Albert put forth she was unable to hold him. He was frantic and as they passed through Grove street the animal plunged from one side of the road to the other After passing Rockview avenue, the horse made a wild dash for the sidewalk and for a distance of seventy-five feet the horse and wagon traveled at break neck speed. Finally, the wagon was thrown with such force against the fence that Mrs. Albert and her daughter were thrown out and the wagon upset. This seemed to urge the frantic horse on and in a few minutes the wagon was a complete wreck and was left in that year, while the horse kept up his wild run.

Neighbors at once ran to the assistance of the woman and her daughter and they were taken into Jerry Rowe s house. Mrs. Albert was unconscious, while the child was in a semi-conscious condition. Dr. D. C. Adams, of Grove street, was called and he was obliged to take several stitches in a very deep scalp wound which was inflicted in Mrs. Albert's head. She was bruised about the body and face, as was also her daughter, and the doctor found it necessary to sew a laceration on the head of the little one.

The horse and wagon in its flight ran over the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luebeck, of Grove street, and it was at first thought that the little one's leg was broken. An examination proved that aside from a few bruises and cuts the girl was not severely injured

In a little while Mrs. Albert became conscious and both she and her daughter were removed to their home in another section. Their horse was caught on Somerset street and returned to them.

THE TROLLEY'S PLACE.

FRANK BERGEN BELIEVES IN PUTTING TRACKS ON THE COUNTY ROAD.

A Trolley Road on an Independent Right of Way, He Says, Would Not Fulfill its Duties to the People as it Should Do.

Frank Bergen, Esq., of Elizabeth, has recently given public expression to his views on the growth of the trolley system and how to deal with it. After expressing the opinion that within the next few years, a double track street railroad will be built from the county seat to Plainfield, in response to the growing demands of the public, he answers the objections to using the new county roads and incidentally gives his views on the general subject of trolley extension and municipal ownership of gas works, water works, etc., as follows:

"It is useless to argue that Westfield or North avenues are too good for a trolley road when such roads exist on Broad street, Elizabeth, Broad street, Newark, and in fact on nearly every important street in the country. No doubt it would be a pity to throw the telford in the ditch which the Board of Freeholders put upon the county roads a few years ago at an expense of $10,000 a mile, but it cannot be helped.

"It is useless to talk of constructing a street railroad on an independent right of way or along muddy streets where there are but few buildings. A street railroad, to be useful to the public, must be on built-up streets, where people can step on or off the cars without wading through mud or snow. A trolley road on what is called an independent right of way would be simply a steam road operated by electricity, and if street railroad companies were compelled, as steam roads are, to acquire right of way by purchase, they would have to charge four or five times as much as they do now, and the particular service that railroads are supposed to be furnished The fact is that no class of corporations pays so highly for its franchises as street railways. They agree to carry people almost anywhere for five or ten cents, in consideration of receiving from the public a right of way for their tracks. I do not know of anything in actual operation that so nearly complies with the communistic notions of Bellamy, Henry George and others as a street railroad."

Growth of Bible Study Class.

The Bible classes in the various cities and towns conducted by Rev. George G. Needham are growing in interest and attendance. There is a demand for more classes. Rev. D. M. Stearns, the leader of the Plainfield class, is now in Japan.

The Best Remedy for Rheumatism.

(From the Fairhaven, N. Y., Register.)

Mr. James Rowland of this village, states that for twenty-five years his wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism. A few nights ago she was in such pain that she was nearly crazy. She sent Mr. Rowland for the doctor, but he had read of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and instead of going for the physician he went to the store and secured a bottle of it. His wife did not approve of Mr. Rowland's purchase at first, but nevertheless applied the Balm thoroughly and in an hour's time was able to go to sleep. She now applies it whenever she feels an ache or a pain and finds that it gives relief. He says that no medicine which she had used ever did her so much good. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

—The children who are to take part in the Memorial Day exercises at Music Hall will hold their last rehearsal Saturday afternoon.

Your Idea

is that oatmeal is oatmeal—there can't be much difference.

But there can!

Even in ordinary oatmeals there can be a difference—good oats and good milling are better than lean and shrivelled oats and poor milling.

But oatmeal may be something more than a matter of fat groats and smart millers.

The fat in its natural state is the most nutritious of grains, but it must be adapted to man's physical needs. The starch cells—the indigestibility—must be broken.

Steam cooking will break the cells, change starch into sugar, make the indigestible digestible.

A MORNING SONG.

From the apple trees' bloom
The south wind is flinging
Delicious perfume,
And a medley of singing.

Around me a throng
Of bright birds are winging.
Tot I hear but the song
That the brown thrush is singing.

Almost within reach,
On a spray he is swinging;
And nearer than speech
Is the song he is singing.

"'Tis a wonderful thing
That to you I am bringing;
I bring you the spring"
So the brown thrush is singing.

Aye! sweetest of all
The notes that are ringing,
Is the brown thrush's call,
And the song he is singing.

YOUNG HERO DROWNED

AFTER RESCUING HIS COMPANION HE LOST HIS OWN LIFE.

Little Michael Liebig Pulled Michael Oliphant Out of a Whirlpool Only to Lose His Balance and Drown Himself.

Michael Liebig and Michael Oliphant, four and five years old respectively, strayed from their homes, in Raritan, late Saturday afternoon and found their way to a dangerous place on the bank of the big water course which feeds the mills on the Raritan river. The conduit has an outlet into the Raritan river through an underground pipe, five feet in diameter, and thence through a sluiceway with a bed of rocks. The water rushes from the conduit to the river with terrific force and creates a whirlpool of large dimensions near the outlet in the conduit. The two boys climbed down the bank near the whirlpool and were amusing them selves by throwing chips in the water, when Oliphant lost his balance and plunged headfirst into the whirlpool. Liebig held out a long stick, which he had in his hand at the time, and shouted: "Now, Mikey, hold on and I'll pull you in sure."

The little fellow tugged away for dear life and had succeeded in drawing his playmate to the shore when Oliphant suddenly released his hold on the pole. Liebig fell backward and fell down the embankment into the whirlpool from which he had just rescued Oliphant. He was twirled around like a straw, and in the twinkling of an eye he shot through the underground pipe and was precipitated upon the jagged rocks in the sluiceway below. His little body was tossed like a cork on the leaping waters, which bore him rapidly to the river, one hundred yards away. He was still struggling for life when caught up by the swift current of the river.

Antony Pascale, who sat on the river bank, saw the body shoot by on the surface. He was so horrified by the accident that he made no attempt at rescue. Pascale watched the body until it sank below the surface, a quarter of a mile down the river. The body was recovered an hour later in a shallow part of the river, near where Pascale saw it disappear. The child was the son of Michael Leibig, assistant master machinist in the Raritan Woolen Mills.

An Old Rounder Home Again

Johanna Haley, famous in the annals of the police court, has returned to her home in this city after a visit to the Elizabeth Hospital. She was arrested in Elizabeth, some time ago, on the charge of drunkenness. After being locked up for several days she complained that her head was injured and she was sent to the hospital. It was thought that her skull was fractured, but it afterwards proved that she had only met with a heavy fall while wandering about the street in an intoxicated condition and received a heavy blow on the head. She gradually recovered and was discharged from the hospital several days ago.

Borough School Census.

The taking of school census was started in the borough March 3th, and was completed last Saturday, just nine days before the time required by law. The table shows that there are 1,087 names on the list, of which number 87 are five years old, and eighteen are eighteen years old. These figures are an increase of considerable over last year.

TO THE PACIFIC SLOPE.

GREAT TRIP BEING ARRANGED FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

As Laid Out the Route to and From the Great Convention Takes in 8,219 Miles—The Special Train Will Be Fine.

The New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union Transportation Committee has issued a circular letter to all the societies giving full information regarding the special train which will take the State delegates to the great convention that will be held in San Francisco in July.

The following table gives the rail roads used and number of miles traveled on each: Central Railroad of New Jersey, 30; Philadelphia and Reading, 60; Baltimore and Ohio, 494; Baltimore and Southwestern, 536; Missouri Pacific, 287; Rock Island, 624; Denver and Rio Grande, 456; Rio Grande and Western, 328; Southern Pacific, 1,965; Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, 120; Northern Pacific, 2,254; Chicago and Northwestern, 408; Baltimore and Ohio, 1,017; total miles, 8,219. Delegates will be given the privilege of returning via six different routes from San Francisco.

All inquiries should be made to Rev. S. E. Davis, manager, Bound Brook, as soon as possible, that assignment of berths may be made. They will be announced on June 15th. The letter in closing says:

"The advantages of this New Jersey Christian Endeavor special are worthy of the careful consideration of every one who is planning to go to California. The finest Pullman palace cars and a baggage car will be used on this train. Do not fear that some old, defaced, wornout cars will be used. No finer train than the New Jersey Christian Endeavor special will run to the Pacific coast. Well-trained, polite and efficient porters will be in attendance. A manager will be furnished by every railroad over which travel is to aid in making the trip pleasant and comfortable. Each car will be under the personal care of a member of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union, who will supply each person with illustrated literature and printed information of the entire route and side trips. All the arrangements for meals visiting places of interest, etc., will be made by this committee. No person, therefore, need have any anxiety or even thought regarding the details of this trip. Dr. W. R. Ward, of Lyons Farms, has been chosen by the committee to accompany this special train, and his services will be given free, and he will carry a full supply of medicines. In case of sickness one one or more of the drawing-rooms on the train will be devoted to the use of the patients."

The committee of '97 has adopted as the official flag of the convention the old "Pioneer Bear Flag," and will use it for decorating the convention hall and public buildings.

T. I. A. INCORPORATED.

AN IMPORTANT STEP TAKEN BY PROGRESSIVE WOMEN.

The Old Officers Re-elected as a Matter of Formality—Interesting Report Read—Encouraging News of the Fete.

A public meeting of the Town Improvement Association was held Tuesday in the Y. M. C. A. building. The first business taken up was the adoption of the resolutions which are necessary so that the association may be incorporated, as decided at a recent meeting. It was also necessary to elect officers and the same officers now serving were elected.

Following this, Mrs. S. R. Krom presented her report of the recent convention of the Woman's Health Protective Association of the United States, which was held in Philadelphia. The report was a complete one. At the convention it was decided to form an international association. Plainfield is not yet a member of this association.

Mrs. Mall said that it had been suggested that the coming fete champetre be opened on Friday afternoon instead of Saturday afternoon, but there seemed to be considerable opposition to the proposition, and it has been decided to follow out the original plan.

Mrs. Lemuel William Serrell offered an excellent suggestion in connection with the general work of the Association. She said that in Roger William Park, Providence, R. I., there were several bicycle stands where persons could have their wheels checked and locked by dropping a dime in the slot. The Plainfield association decided to look into the matter, and if possible secure the same arrangement for Plainfield.

The latter part of the meeting was devoted to a preliminary discussion of the coming fete, and it was stated by the president that everything was gradually getting in shape for the important event.

Crop Conditions.

Corn planting has been pushed during the week; potatoes growing, but infested with bugs; grass promises a fine yield; a light shower on 21st.

BICYCLE AND GOSPEL.

A WHEELING SQUAD ORGANIZED BY THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

The Young Christians to Prosecute Their Good Work Awheel—The First Organization of Its Kind Ever Formed.

Something quite new in Christian Endeavor has been originated by the up-to-date Plainfield Local Union. At the business meeting of the Union held Monday at the home of one of the vice-presidents, Miss Ernestine Smith, plans were perfected for the organization of a Christian Endeavor bicycle squad, the first one ever known to have been formed. This squad is to consist of all the bicyclists in the Endeavor Societies of Plainfield and vicinity, who will meet at intervals through the summer months, and enjoy pleasant and sociable evening runs, to visit out-of town societies.

The squad will be led by a color-bearer, who will display the pennant of the Union, with its gold C. E. The captain is Miss Ernestine Smith, who will be assisted by lieutenants, whom she will appoint, and who will help her to manage the runs. No very long rides will be undertaken, and a very moderate pace will be set, in order that those who cannot ride either very far or very fast will be able to participate in the runs.

The first visit made by the squad will be to the Mount Pleasant Society, on Tuesday evening, June 15th. The Endeavorers of the city will assemble at the Seventh-Day Baptist church, and ride to the Park Avenue Baptist church, where the Endeavorers of the east side are requested to gather. The road to Mount Pleasant leads straight out Park avenue as far as Avon Park, then follows the cross-road for a little over a mile. The date was set on account of the moon being full at that time. All Endeavor wheelmen and wheelwomen are requested not to make any other engagement for that night. Of course, should the weather be threatening, the party would not go. However, the Weather Bureau will be solicited to prepare an especially fine night.

While the business meeting gave especial attention to the organization of the bicycle squad, they did not neglect other matters. No spring language seems to have overtaken the Local Union. The executive committee is vigorously pushing the preparations for a missionary extension lecture to be given in Dunellen early in June, and also for the spring fete of all the societies. The plan is to hold the latter in the Congregational church, some time during June; to induce the well-beloved State vice-president and delightful speaker, Rev. Cornelius Brett, D. D., to give a talk on the subject "The Christian Endeavorer on His Summer vacation;" to have a brisk open Parliament, and some fine music. The programme committee will consist of Miss M. G. Morse, Miss Ernestine Smith, Irving L. Brady.

Mr. Anthony had some very enthusiastic words to say on "Paterson,'97," in regard to low rates, excellent accommodations, and a magnificent programme. He also urged the Endeavorers to attend the county conference to be held in Rahway on Thursday night of this week. The bicyclists desiring to go to Rahway are requested to meet at the Y. M. C. A.

For Sabbath Reform.

The Eastern Association of Seventh-day Baptist churches will hold its annual meeting at New Market on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. There will be three services daily. Dinner and supper on those days will be served in Friendship Hall. A number of well-known ministers of that denomination will be present and make addresses. The principal feature of the meetings will be the movement for Sabbath reform. J. D. Spicer, of this city, is the present president of the association, and Miss Ernestine Smith, of this city, the corresponding secretary.

The Fire Alarm Fixed.

A test of the fire alarm system was made on Saturday and all of the difficulty was found in the clock arrangements at the electric light station. As soon as the difficulty was found it was repaired quickly. Saturday afternoon the gong tooted once and for a minute it was thought that there was a fire. Inquiry revealed the fact that men were working on a line which broke, thus causing the blow.

The Westfield (Ind.) News prints the following in regard to an old resident of that place: "Frank McAvoy, for many years in the employ of the L., N. A. & C. Ry. here, says: "I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy for ten years or longer—am never without it in my family. I consider it the best remedy of the kind manufactured. I take pleasure in recommending it." It is a specific for all bowel disorders. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

A SHORT CUT TO DEATH.

A PLAINFIELD WOMAN KILLED AT WESTFIELD FRIDAY NIGHT.

Mrs. Jacob Schleif Was Walking Along the Track to Save Time When She Was Struck by a Freight Train—Died in Half an Hour.

Mrs. Jacob Schleif, aged 23 years, whose home is at 319 West Front street, was struck by a freight train on the Central Railroad, near the Westfield station at 9:15 o'clock Friday night, and died half an hour afterward in terrible agony.

She went from this city to Westfield on the train, to visit a relative, who lives on North avenue, Westfield. The house is only a few feet from the railroad tracks, and as it was late when the woman alighted from the train, she decided to walk up the track in order to save time. A short distance from the station she was struck by west bound freight train number 411.

Ten minutes later another train passed on the same track and the trainmen discovered the body lying near the track. One leg was nearly severed from the body, and the skull was badly crushed. Physicians were summoned and she was taken to her relative's house. Little could be done by the doctors in her behalf, however, except to attempt to alleviate her suffering. She died at 10 o'clock in agony.

Jacob Schleif, the husband of the dead woman, is a baker doing business on Park avenue, in this city. He is now ill in Muhlenberg Hospital, and his wife had been to visit him Friday and had then left to spend the night with relatives in Westfield.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL HOUR.

An Important Contemplated Change by the Congregationalists.

The teachers of the Sunday-school of the Congregational church gathered at the home of their superintendent, Joseph A. Robinson, of East Fifth street, last evening, and made plans for the summer and discussed others for the betterment of the condition of the school.

It was decided to unite with the First Presbyterian Sunday school for an excursion to Asbury Park about July 15th. The most important question that called for an answer was the changing of the hour of meeting during the summer months. It has been the custom of the Sunday-school for several years to hold its session directly at the close of the morning church service, continuing from 12 to 1 o'clock. Several of the teachers favored a different arrangement this year and it was finally decided that the session of the Sunday-school should be held before church, beginning at 9:30 o'clock.

The success of a rallying day in the fall, as shown last year, decided all in favor of holding another this fall to end the morning session period. The date was not decided upon. The change to the morning session of the Sunday-school will begin after Children's Day, which is the second Sunday in June.

A very special review service was proposed for the next review Sunday, and it was decided to hold the proposed service on the evening of that Sunday and hold a missionary service in the afternoon.

A LAWN PARTY.

An Outdoor Affair Given by Miss Pangborn of Chatham Street.

Miss Lida Pangborn, of Chatham street, entertained a few friends at her home last Thursday by giving a lawn party. The playing of croquet and other amusing games was enjoyed by the guests, after which all adjourned to the house where the rest of the evening was passed in singing, and some of the young ladies present furnished some excellent instrumental music. Everyone had a good social time and the serving of refreshments brought to a close an evening of pleasure.

Those present were Miss Lillian Zeiss, Miss Mabel Hockridge, Miss Ella Peterson, Miss Dora Ulrick, Miss May Dobbs, Harvey Dayton, Frank Milligan, Hiram Humes, William Swick and William Thorn.

Fined for Robbing Birds Nests.

C. P. Sebring, the active fish and game warden in Somerset county, arrested Vito Sperduto and Louis Corrello, two Italians for robbing birds nests of eggs near Bound Brook on Friday last. They were captured at Raritan and brought before Justice Brampton of Bound Brook who fined each prisoner $20. They paid the fine. Mr. Sebring is one of the best wardens in the State.

Mrs. Isaac Brokaw, of Duer street, is visiting her son, Harry Brokaw, and family, of Philadelphia.

Miss Huff, of Centreville, returned home Saturday after a pleasant visit with her brother, Horace Huff, of Coddington avenue.

John Taylor, of West Second street, is improving nicely after a two weeks' confinement to the house with inflammatory rheumatism.

The many friends of Mrs. McVey, of North avenue, will be pleased to learn that she is improving nicely from a very serious illness.

COST TO RUN THE COUNTY

APPROPRIATION MADE BY THE BOARD OF FREEHOLDERS.

The Taxpayers Will Raise $206,000 for the Various Departments—Assets of $23,000 at Present to Be Used During Next Year.

The board of freeholders has decided that there should be levied for taxes for the county government $200,000. There are assets to the amount of $23,000, and by adding that sum to the proposed levy the freeholders believe all the obligations for the coming year can be met, provided they exercise judgment and economy.

This money is to be divided between the several departments as follows: Court, $36,000; county jail, $6,000; coroners, $1,000; election, $17,000; stationery, $3,000; printing and publishing, $2,000; burial of soldiers, $1,200; principal on bonded debt, $27,000; interest on bond, $18,600; interest on temporary bonds, $1,000; hospitals, $5,000; public grounds and buildings, $7,000; bridges, $23,000; county roads, $17,000.

The board also decided to acquire the Sheridan House property and the lot adjoining owned by the Hetfield estate. The Sheridan House property will cost $25,000, and the adjoining lot $2,000.

County Road Inspector James W. Finck submitted his annual report, showing that during last year $14,003.21 was expended for the county roads. For this expenditure 6½ miles of road were repaired with 1½ inch stone, 1½ miles top dressed with stone, 15½ miles of gutter cleaned, and 33 miles of road top dressed with clay.

The board accepted the bond of Collector Wood. The amount is $20,000 and the sureties are John W. Whelan, Meline W. Halsey, John Kean and E. C. Woodruff.

A communication from the state superintendent of the New Jersey Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, claimed that the society in Elizabeth has never received from the county its share of the fines in cases of conviction, as provided by law. In other counties the societies have no difficulty in this matter, and the county of Union will be held liable.

Freeholder Roll said he was in favor of the society receiving all its due. It is doing a humane work and is worthy of support. He moved that the matter be referred to the county attorney for an immediate report upon the law involved.

The committee appointed to confer with the Somerset county board in reference to the bridges at Watchung and Sycamore avenues in Plainfield, *recommended that the bridges be con*structed at a cost not to exceed $8,500 to the county of Union.

Director Hubbard said he was sorry it would be necessary to build two new brides this year, but it could not be avoided. The streets were opened and the law requires the county to build the bridges.

GOOD HORSE RACING.

Spirited Contests at the Gentlemen's Driving Park Saturday.

There was good trotting at the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Saturday afternoon, and a large crowd of the local horsemen were present and witnessed the sport. The track was in good condition.

John Osbourne's brown mare, "Magnolia," and John Hays' brown gelding, "Andy," met in a special match. "Magnolia" was driven well and passed under the wire first in both heats, making the miles in 2:40 and 2:39½.

The fastest time of the day was made in a match between Thomas Brantingham's bay mare "Myrtle Twig" and William Smalley's brown pacing mare, "Belle." The bay mare made the pace and won the match after three exciting heats. The time for the heats was 2:27½, 2:26½, and 2:28.

There was a lively brush between three of the horses. Newton Smalley had his sorrel pacer in the, "Daisy M., the gray mare, owned by Harry Gynette, was there, as was "Sunday." Douglas Darby's sorrel mare. Smalley's horse failed to get off properly in the first heat and the gray and the sorrel had everything their own way. Darby's sorrel mare won the first heat with "Daisy M." a close second. The result of the second heat was the same. In the third heat, Smalley's mare started off good trim and forged ahead at the hat. The harness to Darby's rig broke and he was forced to withdraw, but it did not make any difference, for Smalley's mare had found her gait and left the others far behind. The times for the three heats were 2:38; 2:37½; and 2:33.

Andrew Lutkins' brown pacer won two straight heats from Fred Hand's bay pacer, "Ned," in 2:40 and 3:42.

The racing ended for the day with a match between Ed Walters and Isaac Randolph in road wagons. Walter's horse was driven by Ed Campbell who finished first in the one heat in an even three minutes.

Alex. Muir, of West Fourth street, spent Sunday with friends in New York.

Freeholder Barkalew and wife, of Lincoln place, spent Sunday with relatives at Clinton, Hunterdon county.

DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE.

PLANS OF THE PLAINFIELD SANITARY COMPANY.

How the Work of Scientifically Gathering Refuse Will Be Carried On—Several Methods for Householders to Choose From.

The Plainfield Sanitary Company has issued the following circular, which will be interesting as a description of what taxpayers may expect from the company:

We take this method to introduce to you the great sanitary benefits and improvements our city will have by the householders adopting the system below set forth, and most respectfully request your patronage.

It is the purpose of the company to collect and dispose of all garbage, swill, offal, dead animals, ashes, rubbish, sweepings, cut grass, leaves, tin cans, waste paper, and in fact all kinds of household wastes, in a manner that will effectually do away with all nuisances and danger of foul gases escaping from garbage around the house or while being taken away. The company will furnish each subscriber with a tight galvanized iron can. This can will be taken away by the collector and a thoroughly clean can left in its place. The can, as soon as emptied at the plant, will be submitted to steam at a very high temperature, thus destroying all disease-breeding germs and disagreeable sour smells.

The ashes and all other wastes will be removed in tight covered carts made especially for the service. If householder desires, the company will furnish a large galvanized iron can with a tight-fitting cover for a small extra monthly compensation as below set forth. Everything will be taken to the crematory and there treated, and all organic matter thoroughly incinerated. The business will be carried on so as to conform in every respect to the rules and regulations adopted by the Plainfield and North Plainfield Boards of Health (particularly as to gathering).

The carts will have the company name and a number on each side, and the collector will have a distinguishing cap and uniform, so that if everything is not done satisfactorily a report should be immediately sent to the office of the company, and a thorough investigation will follow. A copy of the rules and regulations of the Plainfield and North Plainfield Boards of Health will be furnished to every subscriber respectively. These rules are very clear and to the point, and it is very important that every householder should see that they are carried out in the kitchen.

The company will make the following charges for their service:

We hereby agree to take and pay for the services of the Plainfield Sanitary Company as hereinafter set forth, designated by numbers inserted opposite our names.

No. 1—Garbage can, 12x18, service at 50c. per month.

No. 2—Ashes and rubbish removed at 10c. per barrel.

No. 3, 1 and 2—Combined with can 18x24 service, for ashes and rubbish, can to be furnished by the company and contents to be removed as often as may be required, at $1 per month.

No. 4—Garbage can, 12x18, service at 75c. per month.

No. 5—Ashes and rubbish removed at 10c. per barrel.

No. 6, 4 and 5—Combined with can, 18x24, service for ashes and rubbish, *can to be fur*nished by the company and contents to be removed as often as may be required, at $1.50 per month.

No. 7—Garbage, two cans, 12x18, service at $1 per month.

No. 8—Ashes and rubbish removed at 10c. per barrel.

"Death a Happy Release."

Such was the comment of friends and relatives on Saturday afternoon, when at 5 o'clock the soul of Miss Mary S. MacCarty passed from this earth to her Heavenly home. She was a patient sufferer for several years with that terrible affliction, consumption, and everything that medical aid and constant attendance of loving friends could do, was to make her comfortable as possible, which they did to the last hour of her life. She realized her condition and having made her peace with God when a child, she had no fear of death, rather longing to go and be at rest. A few days before her death she calmy conversed with the lady who had been her constant companion and made known all the wishes she desired to be carried out after her death. A short funeral service, conducted by R v. Dr. Rodman, were held at her late residence, No. 166 Manning avenue, Tuesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, and the remains were t ken to Princeton, her former home, in the afternoon for interment in the family plot.

Former Mayor Charles A. Place, of the borough, has returned from a visit with Philadelphia friends.

—Mr. Burdick, who leased the sash and blind department of Bushmore & Co's mill, has secured D. L. Hulick as superintendent, and he is now in charge.

FIRST OF THE DANCES.

SUMMER SOCIAL SEASON OPENED AT THE HOTEL HUNTERSTON.

The Spacious Parlors of the Hotel Filled With a Gay Throng of Pleasure Seeking People—Some of the Guests There.

The summer social season was most auspiciously opened last Saturday evening at the Hotel Hunterston, Netherwood, when this popular place was the scene of a dancing reception. It reminded one of old times to see the large and spacious parlors filled with merry dancers, all of whom *seemed to thoroughly enjoy the re*turn of former days.

The exterior of the hotel and the grounds was brilliantly illuminated with Chinese and Japanese lanterns and the scene was, indeed, charming as one approached the hotel from the winding roads below. Upon entering the hotel the guests were met by that genial person, Manager Hall, and his assistant, M. B. Doughty, while former Councilman Spangenberg proved a most admirable member of the reception committee.

Everything about the hotel looked bright and attractive and many pleasing compliments were expressed by the guests present, of which there was a large number, including the best people from Plainfield and vicinity.

In the parlors was seated Rogers' orchestra and during the evening the best music was discovered. The guests were all fond of dancing and as soon as they heard the attractive music they sought the opportunity to enjoy it. The two-step and the waltz were the favorites and frequently the orchestra was obliged to respond to an encore. About 10 o'clock the guests were invited to adjourn to the dining room where a pleasing supper was served. Everything about this part of the programme was enjoyed and the menu was all to be desired.

Following the supper the guests returned to the parlors where dancing was continued until nearly 12 o'clock, and when the guests departed they were profuse in their thanks to the management for their general hospitality.

Among the prominent people present were: Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Dyett, Mr. and Mrs. Hill, Leonard Spangenberg, C. W. Ellis, Miss Ellis, Mr. and Mrs. Beal, Miss Beal, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Vandeventer, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Sandford, Mrs. S. A. Chrisfield, Miss Chrisfield, Miss Green, Miss Dryden, Miss Patten, Miss Thompson, Miss Edith Clapp, Dr. and Mrs. Stanton, Dr. R. J. Shaw, Miss Daniel, Miss Cross; Arthur Freeman, E. Serrell, Maxwell Honeyman, Henry Brower, Mr. Simpson, Clement Morgan, Mr. Kirkner, Mac-Cready Sykes, W. L. Brown, Bert Holly, Harry Patten, Fred Smith, Meridith Dryden, of Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. Lee, Long Island; Mrs. Havens, Misses Havens, Mrs. Emily Holbrook, Mrs. Phillips, Miss Lulu Wright, of New York; Miss Louise Sloate, of Middletown, N. Y.; W. B. Toucey, Mrs. R. S. Wiggs, Miss Sergeant, Miss Camp, Charles Harbson, Nelson Coryell, Chase Coale, of Westfield.

From now on every other Saturday night there will be a hop at the hotel, and on other Saturday nights there will be concerts.

MISS E. KIERNAN, PRESIDENT.

Borough Teacher Chosen as President of County Association.

At the annual meeting of the Somerset County Teachers' Association held Saturday in the North Plainfield Public High School, the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: President, Miss E. Kiernan, of North Plainfield; Vice-President, Miss R. G. Brokaw, of Somerville; Secretary, B. D. VanSycle, of Bound Brook; Treasurer, Miss Higgins, of Washingtonville.

A very touching and appropriate part of the programme was the adoption of a resolution and a tribute in memory of the late Miss Ginn, who was a teacher in the North Plainfield school.

Miss Acock, of the borough school, was the pianist for the day, and there were also piano selections by Arthur VanArsdale, Miss Agnes Bailey and a vocal solo by Miss Lottie Benner.

Miss Miller, the retiring president, was a most efficient officer and under her supervision the Association was led through the year successfully. The new president, Miss Kiernan, is equally efficient and she will make an excellent chief executive for the Association.

Boys Not Guilty.

The case of the State against William Mague, Frank Mague and Archie Larmour, of this city, charging malicious mischief on March 8th, was tried Monday a. m., at Elizabeth, before Judge McCormick and a jury. Lawyer Brady represented the Magues boys, and Larmour turned State's evidence. The jury was out fifteen minutes when they brought in a verdict of not guilty.

Walter S. Gibson, of Passaic, spent Sunday with his mother, Mrs. J. S. King, of West Second street.

AN ARRAY OF OFFENDERS

CITY COURT IN SESSION FOR AN HOUR AND A HALF.

Several Were Arrested for Being Drunk and Disorderly—A Trio of Disturbers Who Got Into a Fight While Moving.

A half a dozen offenders kept Judge DeMeza busy for an hour and a half Monday a. m. Patrolman McCarty made a complaint against James Ross and William Knowland for being drunk on West Front street, Saturday evening. They pleaded that they had been drinking, but were not disorderly. *Ross was fined $3, while Know*land, who had never been up before the Judge before escaped, sentence being suspended.

John Johnson pleaded that he was not guilty to the charge of being disorderly on Grant avenue, Sunday evening, as preferred by Patrolman Meyers. When he heard the officer tell how he had found Johnson lying asleep on the sidewalk with his head in close proximity to the gutter, Johnson suddenly remembered that it had happened after all and changed his plea. The Judge find him $3.

Clarence Whepley, John Philmore and Owen McHolmes lined up in front of the railing, all charged with causing or taking part in a disturbance, Saturday evening. Holmes was brought before the Judge, Sunday afternoon, but his tongue was so disobedient to the orders of the Judge that he was locked up for trial next morning. All three appeared and related their stories. Philmore was trying to move to East Third street and Whepley was assisting him. They carted the goods to the rooms and were setting up the stove when Holmes, Philmore's son-in-law, began to abuse his own wife, who had come to live with her father. Whepler commented on it and told Philmore that he ought to interfere but Philmore thought not. Then they came out on the sidewalk and a discussion arose as to who was to take the truck home. Loud talk resulted and attracted the attention of Patrolman Totten, Cash and Special Officer Denny Carney. Whepley and Philmore were arrested and then Mrs. Holmes made a complaint against her husband who she said was to blame for all the trouble. The trial was a lively one. The prisoners, Whepley and Philmore were represented by Walter L. Hetfield and the cross-questioning of Carney by that lawyer was exciting and humorous.

The Judge declared everybody guilty and suspended sentence on them all.

FANNIE IS A BAD GIRL.

A FOURTEEN YEAR OLD MISS SENTENCED TO THE COUNTY JAIL.

The Dusk Girl is a Terror to the Neighbors and Defiant to the City Judge—Absolutely Refuses to Behave Herself.

The surroundings at the City Court, Sunday afternoon did not awe Fannie Bush in the slightest when she was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza, on the charge of being disorderly and using profane language.

Although Fannie is but fourteen years old, she has been arrested several times before. She returned only a short time ago from a trip to Elizabeth when the local authorities made an effort to have her committed to an industrial home. Her mother tried to keep the girl at home, however, and promised that hereafter she would behave herself. Fannie came back and continued her career. She called a neighbor all sorts of unpleasant names and a complaint was made against Fannie. Fannie took to Somerset county, but was captured Saturday evening by Patrolman Saffron, armed with a warrut.

Fannie was not abashed when the Judge talked to her, and even attempted to "bully" him, which nearly resulted in Fannie taking another trip to jail without delay.

She told the Judge that she had been arrested before and expected to be arrested a good many times yet. She did not pare whether she was sworn in her own defence or not, and put on a very bold front.

The Judge sentenced her to pay a fine of $25, or go to jail for forty days. She declared that her friends would surely pay the fine, but the friends were not forthcoming and she had no money here.

A New Firm.

Clarkson Mundy, for the past four years head salesman for David Smalley, the North avenue butcher, and for fourteen years past connected with Smalley Bros., has purchased an interest in the Plainfield packing house, 153 West Front street, and formed a copartnership with Mr. Blatz, under the firm name of Blatz & Mundy. Mr. Mundy is an excellent judge of meats, and guarantees satisfaction to all who will give the new firm a trial.

—It is said that the taxpayers of Somerset county are objecting to the number of prisoners that are confined in the county jail. They say that many persons who are arrested and sent to the county seat should not be sent there, as the charges are insufficient to hold them.

CHILDREN'S LAWN FETE.

GIVEN FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE SUMMER CAMP.

It Was a Lengthy Affair Despite the Fact That Thirteen Little People Were in Procession—One of the Attractions.

The lawn fete, held on the lawn of Percy Phillips, of Madison avenue, proved a great success despite the fact that the number thirteen played an important part in it. It was given by thirteen little girls for the benefit of the Children's Home and incidentally to give them something to do.

The fete, or fair, was a departure from the regulation sale of candies, cakes, ice cream, and fancy articles. There were several new attractions that found great favor with the young people and gave ideas to those who are planning similar events for the future.

The entire lawn, with its fine grape arbors, was utilized for the affair. Just inside the house were the candies and cakes which were sold by the young girls. Several of them were also in charge of a flower booth, which stood close to the house. Beneath the shade of the large trees were arranged tables on which were served ice cream and cake. Roy T. Phillips and Augustus Fisk presided over this department with much skill. In the barn was an establishment, under the supervision of Paul Kimball and Harold Phillips, which the youthful visitors labeled the "bar." Lemonade, soda water, root beer and the like were the only beverages sold, however, to which the throng crowd that constantly surrounded it.

One of the novel attractions was a see-saw, on which the visitors might ride for the payment of a small sum. The see-saw was built for the occasion and was an ingenious affair. It was under the personal supervision of Alexander Rickard, of Brooklyn.

In one of the arbors, a rack of canes was so arranged that the visitors could try to throw rings over the heads of the canes. This was an exciting amusement and some of the young people fared well. Harvey Fisk was in charge. A similar amusement was prepared in another of the arbors, only in the latter case, knives were used instead of canes. Percy Phillips was manager of this latter attraction.

The most attractive of them all to the youths of the neighborhood was "Aunt Sallie." A frame had been placed at the end of one of the arbors, and in the frame were a number of small square openings. In the openings were to be seen little figures, differently dressed. The visitors were allowed the use of three baseballs for a small sum which they might throw at the figures. Those who were successful in striking one of the figures, which were labeled anything from "Aunt Sallie" to "McKinley" and "Bryan," received a ticket for a glass of Randolph's soda. The tickets were furnished gratuitously by Mr. Randolph. Jack Hall and John Phillips were in charge and they were kept busy the entire afternoon for "Aunt Sallie" was in great favor with old and young.

Two voting contests had been arranged for the afternoon. One was for the most popular girl present. Of course that made no end of excitement and the boys were called upon to invest their savings for the benefit of the Children's Home and the young lady of the choice. Miss Edna Smith, of Grove street, was the victor.

The other contest was for the most popular baseball team and the Alis Club was victorious after a close race with the High School team and the nine from Lesli's School.

The grounds were prettily decorated with flags as was also the house. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips lent a hand on every side and looked after the young folks.

Financially the affair was a great success. Over three hundred tickets were sold and everything that had been placed on sale was purchased. Twenty-eight quarts of ice cream were disposed of at that department.

THEY WORKED WHILE VICTIMS ATE.

Guests at a Borough Party Had Wearing Apparel Stolen.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hanigan, Jr., of Somerset street, entertained a few friends at their home Saturday evening by giving a dance. The affair was a very informal one and the guests included just the intimate friends of the host and hostess. An unfortunate circumstance happened while the guests were in the dining room partaking of refreshments. The front door was not locked and some person slid took advantage of the absence of the guests and entered the hallway. There they found several hats and coats. Two derby hats and a light overcoat were stolen. The coat belonged to Carl Gallup, of West Front street. As yet no information has been secured that would lead to the detection of the thief.

A New Church Treasurer.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Congregational church was held Sunday morning and Morris C. Van Arsdale was elected treasurer.

W. A. Rossmans, secretary of the New York State Hotel Association, is a guest at the Hotel Hunterston.

DEATH VISITED A CELL.

MARTHA EVANS ENDED HER LIFE IN THE ROOKERY.

She Was Looked Upon the Charge of Drunkenness and Passed Away During the Night—Death Caused by Alcohol.

A chapter of death has been added to the long and eventful history of the city jail, familiarly known as the "rookery." Last Thursday, a woman arrested for drunkenness was placed in one of the cold, damp cells, and there breathed her last, the victim of wood alcohol poisoning. When the policeman came to see how she was getting on, he found her lying in a heap on the floor of the cell and her cold, staring eyes directed toward the ceiling. The officer did not realize he was in the presence of death, but summoned the Sergeant with the tidings that the woman was very ill. They found the illness was past and that death was there in that gruesome place.

The clock had just struck half-past five, Thursday afternoon, when the telephone bell in the office of Chief of Police Grant rang. Chief Grant answered the summons. It was from Mrs. S. A. Cruikshank, of Belvidere avenue. She said that the cook had been intoxicated all day and that they were unable to do anything with her; therefore she requested the Chief to send an officer to the house and take charge of the woman.

When Patrolman Lunger went on duty at the Netherwood beat, he was instructed to go to the residence of S. A. Cruikshank and take the woman to the station house and lock her up. When the officer reached the house, he learned that Martha Evans, the cook, had been drunk all day. She had refused to rise in the morning and had spent the day in her room in an intoxicated condition.

Through the efforts of the officer and Mr. Cruikshank, the woman was at last persuaded to dress. She was brought downstairs, being unable to walk straight herself, and a carriage summoned from Keely's stable. The woman and the policeman were driven to the station house.

Chief Grant visited her cell a few minutes after she had been placed there and conversed with her for several minutes. She evidently recognized him for she called him "Chief." After leaving the station house, Grant ordered the roundsman to instruct the officer on duty in the neighborhood to visit her occasionally during the night. Patrolman Saffron had that beat.

It was 11 o'clock when Saffron went into the corridor of the jail and looked into the cell. The dim light showed the form of the woman lying on the floor of the cell, where she had slipped from her seat on the bench on which the Chief had left her. Saffron went out of the jail to find Sergeant Kiely just entering. He told the Sergeant that the womap was very ill and the latter went in to investigate.

He opened the door and leaned over the prostrate form. He felt the hand. It was cold and there was no sign of life. Further investigation showed that the woman had died there in the cell soon after the Chief left her two hours before. Her body was cold when the Sergeant examined it.

Chief Grant was summoned from his home and word was sent to County Physician Wescott who gave the necessary permission for the removal of the body to Cole's undertaking rooms.

When the prisoner had been brought to Chief Grant had noticed the odor of wood alcohol. On inquiry it was learned that Martha Evans had found a large demijohn of wood alcohol in a closet and had partaken largely of its contents. That had intoxicated her and finally caused her death as wood alcohol is poisonous. Such was the opinion of Dr. Westcott, who investigated the matter next morning.

The woman who thus met her death had only been in the employ of Mrs. Cruikshank for three weeks. She came her from New York. She was an English woman of apparantly forty years of age, slight and of fair complexion. She was quite good looking. She had $10 in money and some clothing. The police, thus far, have been unable to find any relatives or friends of the deceased.

THEATRICAL.

"The Mysterious Mr. Bugle" has entered the fifth week of its run at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, and not only continues but increases the measure of its success in Mr. Frohman's charming little house. There have been no changes in the cast of "The Mysterious Mr. Bugle" and, as upon its first presentation, the company includes Annie Russell, Joseph Holland, Guy Standing, Chas. Craig, John Wooderson, Edgar Norton, Henry Phillips, Charles Peckham, Master Michaelson, Agnes Findlay and Grace Fischer. This whimsical, diverting, brilliant, amusing, deft and witty piece of nonsense has proven to be exceptionally popular with the business at the Lyceum Theatre shows no diminution as the weather grows warmer. The little house is as cool, cheerful and pleasant as a drawing room, and there seems to be really no good reason why "The Mysterious Mr. Bugle" should not upset all precedents and keep the Lyceum Theatre open all summer.

At Daly's Theatre, New York, "The Circus Girl" has begun a fourth week of the supplemental season. Especially at the matinees has its success been apparent. Children take to it as a real, live circus, while their aunts and sisters find interest in the Parisian gowns. And after all this, the piece has the usual attractiveness of a musical farce, and its charms are by no means lost in presentation at the hands of Nancy McIntosh and Virginia Earle.

WON AWAY FROM HOME.

Y. M. C. A. Bowlers Victorious on Newark Alleys Last Night.

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. bowling team went to Newark and rolled three games against the Newark Y. M. C. A. team. The games were bowled on the Montgomery alleys, which are considered the best in the State. The Plainfield boys went to Newark with the expectation of losing each game and they were more than elated to think that they captured every one themselves. William Scholoes and C. Sutphen were high men for the Plainfielders, while Crane and Peal occupied the same position for the Newarks. The Plainfielders say that they were neve treated better. Below are the scores of the games:

EXAGGERATION OF NEWS

RELATION OF THE PRESS TO JUSTICE DISCUSSED IN COURT.

Middlesex County Officials Indulge in Criticism of Newspapers in the Report of the Alleged Car Trust Assault.

Judge Woodbridge Strong, Prosecutor John S. Voorhees and Geo. Silzer, a lawyer, indulged in an exchange of opinions in the Middlesex County Court Thursday afternoon over newspaper tendencies of the day and the assistance or injury which newspapers rendered to the cause of justice. It was brought about by the trial of Wm. Tighe and James McCann for breaking and entering the house of Noah Schumacher, near Oak Tree, at midnight on April 2d, and atrociously assaulting and beating Schumacher.

As the trial progressed it became the newspapers told how Tighe, McCann and a third person, named Manson, had driven to the house, beaten Schumacher, and dragged his sister, Kate Schumacher, clad only in her nightdress, out of the house, forcing her into a wagon, and later throwing her out on the road. The next day she was found wandering aimlessly about the county.

As the trial yesterday was on an indictment for assaulting Noah Schumacher, the evidence regarding Kate Schumacher, of course, figured little in the case. McCann was on the stand, and Judge Strong said to him: "The reports sent broadcast over the country make the people look up to me for a rigid enforcement of the laws and penalties, thus protecting the community. The stories indicated a most horrible outrage. Are these stories at all true?" McCann denied them, saying that the woman had entered and left the wagon of her own free will.

Judge Strong then denounced sensationalism and exaggeration in newspapers, and remarked that such reports were calculated to injure the cause of justice. Mr. Silzer, who defended the two men, also characterized the reports as highly exaggerated and unwarranted, and said that their gaining general credence would tend to induce jurors to follow public belief rather than the evidence. Prosecutor Voorhees took strong exception to the opinion of Judge Strong and upheld the newspapers, asserting that they frequently were instrumental in bringing criminals to justice by gaining information which it was difficult for officials to acquire. He denounced the Schumacher occurence as a heinous outrage, and asserted that the newspapers had served the public well in giving the facts.

FLAMES WROUGHT RUIN

HARRY WERNER'S CLOTHING HOUSE GUTTED BY FIRE.

A Hanging Lamp Dropped to the Floor and the Spreading Oil Made a Fierce Blaze—Stock Ruined by Smoke and Water.

A fierce blaze, started by a falling lamp, gutted the clothing store of Harry Werner at 306 West Front street, last Thursday. The fire was in the rear of the store and hard to get at but after the fire department reached the scene of action it was not long before the flames were extinguished.

It was almost nine o'clock when Mr. Werner was preparing to close up for the evening. L. B. Woolston, one of the owners of the building in which the store is located, came in to see Mr. Werner just before that time and they had spoken about the spring to the front door which did not work well. Mr. Woolston removed the patent closing apparatus from the top of the door and then the springs worked without trouble. Mr. Woolston went out and a man and woman came in. They came to make a purchase.

Mr. Werner directed his clerk, Andie Van Arsdale, to close up as usual while Mr. Werner turned his attention to his customers. The rear windows and door were closed and barred and then Van Arsdale attempted to turn down the large hanging Rochester lamp in the rear right hand corner.

Without warning the lamp fell and the next instant there was a burst of flame from the spot.

The cause of falling of the lamp was plain to see. The iron hook that fastened into the ceiling and held the lamp had pulled out and allowed the lamp and fixture to come to the floor with a crash. The force of the fall had split open the metal side of the lamp and allowed the oil to spill over the floor. The lamp held a gallon and was almost full at the time of the accident.

The oil was ignited immediately and spread over the floor carrying the fire in its path. Van Arsdale narrowly escaped the lamp when it fell. As the flames rushed upward, he seized a bundle of suits that had been selected to put in the show window and tried to beat out the fire. Mr. Werner heard the crash and saw the blaze. He grabbed a blanket which happened to be near-by and rushed to the assistance of his clerk, followed by his customer.

The blazing oil set fire to the tables of goods on every hand and was soon far beyond control of the workers. Dashing through the flames, they reached the front of the store. The rear of the store was then a mass of flames and the dense smoke was nearly stifling them. Mr. Werner tried to open the door. It stuck fast. The spring was strong and he was unable to stir it. The woman who had come in as a customer, was greatly frightened and her shrieks added to the excitement.

"Murder! murder!" she screamed as the smoke grew thicker and more stifling. As they had run to the front of the store, Mr. Werner had stooped and picked up his little pet dog and carried him under his arm. The animal barked and whined with fear. Again Mr. Werner shook the handle of the door and nearly pushed it off its hinges; this time it swung open and they all rushed out into the open air.

Charles DeGraw, of the firm of Putnam & DeGraw, whose store is next door, hurried to box 12 and sent in an alarm. The whistle sounded one blast and then something caught and the rest of the alarm was not sounded. The bell in the headquarters of the fire department sounded all right and the apparatus came in a hurry. A carriage was left standing at Second street and Park avenue and there was a narrow escape from a collision between it and the chemical engine.

When the chemical engine reached the scene of the fire, it was under too much headway for the effective use of the stream from that engine. Two lines of regular hose were laid, one to the front entrance and one to the rear. The rear of the building was bursting into flames as the firemen reached there. The back door was broken down and the stream turned into the interior where the fire was raging. The skylight on the roof of the one story wing in the rear was opened and the last of the fire finally extinguished. The stream from the front entrance was turned into the building. It was nearly half an hour before the fire was practically extinguished.

The store was illuminated by Welsbach burners and the one hanging lamp. The smoke smothered the lights and extinguished them allowing the gas to escape. The room was soon filled gas and the fumes from the kerosene, which accounted for the fierceness of the fire.

All the wood work in the store was charred. A large pile of winter overcoats in the rear of the store was found in the same condition. Most of the suits what were spread out on tables along the sides and centre of the room were ruined by the heat. A few that were saved from the flames were clempletely warer soaked. Mr. Werner, when seen by a Press reporter, next morning, placed his loss at $15,000. It is estimated that the damage to the building was $600. The stock was insured to the amount of $10,000, $3500 through Van Buren Brothers, $2500 through Elston M. French, and $ 00 through Lyman and Abbott. The fixtures were insured for $600 through Lyman and Abbott. The building is insured to the amount of $6,000 through W. A. Woodruff and E. M. French.

THE G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT

GENERAL ORDERS ISSUED FOR THE MEETING OF VETERANS

The Encampment to Be Held at Atlantic City in June and Will Be Attended by President McKinley and Other Notables.

Department Commander E. C. Stahl, of the New Jersey G. A. R., has issued General Orders No. 8, in reference to the observance of Memorial Day on the 31st inst., and the thirtieth annual encampment of the department in June, at Atlantic City.

He calls the attention of the Posts to the provisions of "An act to encourage and promote patriotism," approved April 3, 1894, and to the necessity of an active co-operation in its observance by the members of the Grand Army of the Republic. Comrades, see to it that on the Friday preceding the coming Memorial Day, suitable patriotic exercises are held in every schoolhouse throughout this State, and, wherever this be possible, a delegation of members of the G. A. R. in uniform should attend and by their presence and participation in these exercises teach an object lesson of patriotism to those who are destined some day to manage the affairs of our land.

"The beautiful custom of the Grand Army of the Republic" says the commander, of attending divine service on the Sunday preceding our Memorial Day exercises should be this year especially observed by the posts of this department because of the fact that Sunday, the 30th, will be in reality the national holiday. Comrades, let us make it such in deed as well as in name, by gathering in God's houses, and prepare our minds for the solemn duties of the morrow.

"Post chaplains are directed to forward their reports of the manner of the celebration of Memorial Day by their respective posts, to C. H. Hill, Department Chaplain, Red Bank, N. J."

In reference to the encampment, the order continues that the Council of Administration will meet at Schauffer Hotel on June 8th. The encampment will continue through the 11th. A canvas camp will be in the rear of Schauffer's Hotel, where free quarters may be secured, but members must furnish their own blankets.

The following detail on credentials is announced: Wm. H. Carman, P. P. C., of Post 23; Comrade M. V. Kennelly, of Post 3, and E. P. Southwick, A. A. General, of Post 23. This detail will meet at Headquarters on Thursday, June 10th, at 9 a. m. Post Commanders will report at headquarters immediately upon their arrival for badges.

The commander of Joe Hooker Post, No. 32, at Atlantic City, will detail one officer of the day, one officer of the guard and twelve comrades, uniformed and equipped for duty, during the encampment. The officer of the day will report to the assistant Adjutant General for instructions on Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

The Department will assemble for parade on Wednesday, June 9th, at 2 o'clock p. m. The formation, line of march and review by the President of the United States, Comrade McKinley; Commander-in-Chief, Comrade T. S. Clarkson; Governor Griggs and other distinguished guests, will be on Atlantic avenue. Joe Hooker Post, No. 32, has been detailed for escort duty to Department Headquarters. Members of the Department Staff will appear mounted; horses will be furnished upon requisition made to the Assistant Adjutant General not later than June 1st. Further orders as to details of parade will be issued from Department Headquarters on the morning of June 9th.

A reception will be tendered guests on the evening of June 9th at the Hotel Dennis.

The Department camp fire will take place at the Academy of Music on the evening of June 10th. Admission for non-members of the G. A. R. will be by tickets only. Distinguished speakers and an excellent programme will be provided.

Length of the New Bridges.

According to the decision of the Union and Somerset County Boards of Freeholders the length of the Watchung avenue bridge will be seventy-five feet long, and that of the Syca more avenue bridge forty-five feet long. Both of these figures are slightly reduced from what was originally planned. A meeting to fully decide the matter will be held at Tier's lake house Tuesday, June 1st.

—Those wishing a sample of Frank Bowley's Italian salad oil can secure it at his store on Somerset street. Mr. Bowley has made a special feature of this oil for upwards of four years and we have reason to know that it is a very superior article.

CHARGES OF BRIBERY!

A STARTLING AFFIDAVIT IN THE PHELPS-HOWELL CASE.

Arthur Whitlock Made an Affidavit Saying That Miss Phelps Bribed Him to Perjure Himself—Now He Denies It.

Highly sensational and contradictory were some of the developments in the Phelps-Howell case, in the taking of testimony before Supreme Court Commissioner Herbert W. Knight, at Elizabeth, Thursday. The taking of testimony was concluded last night. The sensation was sprung by the defendant's counsel when they offered in evidence the following affidavit made and sworn to by Arthur Whitlock before Justice Nash the first week in April:

Ques.—Do you know Adella C. Phelps?
Ans.—Yes.
Was you a witness in the case of Mr. Howell and Miss Phelps?
Yes, sir.
Did you testify in that case?
Yes.
Did you have anything promised you for it?
Yes, sir.
What?
She said she would give me a wheel.
Did Miss Phelps or anybody else tell you what to say?
Yes, sir.
Who told you?
Only Miss Phelps.
Did she tell you to tell the truth?
Also told me to tell to the Judge that a box dropped out of the wagon, and that he, the driver, was looking back at it.
Is that what you told him?
Yes, sir.
Was that the truth?
No, sir.
Did you see a box drop out of the wagon?
No, sir.
Why did you tell that?
Because she promised me a wheel and some money for my mother.
Did you see any box drop out of the wagon?
No, sir.
Do you know whether there was a box dropped out?
No, sir there wasn't any.
Did you see the accident at all?
Yes, sir.
Did you see the driver at the time of the accident?
Yes, he was in the right position and looking ahead.
Would you have sworn that he was to blame and the box dropped out if she had not promised you the bicycle?
No, sir.
Then you did it to get the bicycle?
Yes.
Has anyone promised you anything for telling me this story?
No, sir.
Have you told any other person about not telling the truth on the trial at Elizabeth.
Yes, William Sweeney.
Did Miss Phelps pay for you to go to Sheepshead Bay?
Yes, sir.
How long did you stay there?
I guess I was there for a month.
Who paid your expenses?
My sister and brother. Miss Phelps only paid my fare there and back.
Did Miss Phelps bring you home?
Yes, sir, she went over and got me.
Where did you go when you came back?
I stayed at Miss Phelps house for about three days before the case and afterwards still my mother came home from nursing.
Was Miss Phelps teaching you what to say at the trial while you were there?
Yes, sir.
Can you tell me anything else she told you to say?
She told me to say Mr. Howell's man was kicking back at the box when he run into her. Did she run into the horse or did the horse run into her wheel?
She ran into the side of the horse between the front and rear legs.
Then she fell over, did she?
Yes, she fell and the wagon did not run over her.
When did she tell you first to state that a box fell out?
A long time after the accident, nearly a month.
Did it worry you at nights after the trial because you swore as Miss Phelps asked you to?
Yes, sir.
Why did you come to make this statement?
Well, because young Sweeney asked me to tell the truth. I refused at first and then I agreed to come.
Did Sweeney tell you that a clear conscience was better than loss of money or a wheel?
Yes, sir.
Did he say if I were you I would tell the truth?
Yes, sir.
So you think it is?
Yes, sir.
Do you know if Miss Phelps was riding alone for a wheel rider?
She was going in for a bicycle.
Did you talk to Mr. Mallison about the case or did you show him and Sweeney where the horse was?
I showed him and young Sweeney where the horse was.
While you and Sweeny were drinking soda did not Mr. Mallison hear what you said?
I don't know, sir.

After the affidavit had been read, Whitlock was called to the stand by Miss Phelps' lawyer and admitted that he had made the affidavit, but that it was untrue and that he make it to get rid of William Sweeny, and that also he was frightened because someone told him he was going to be arrested. On the cross-examination he said that he made the affidavit in order to get a glass of soda water from Sweeny. He also swore that what he had testified to on the witness stand at the time of the trial was true.

Miss Phelps was also called and she denied in toto that she had ever made any promise to Whitlock to buy him a wheel if he would testify as she wanted him to or that she told him what to say.

For the defence R. V. Lindabury and W. K. McClure appeared, while Craig A. Marsh appeared for the plaintiff.

All papers in the case will now be prepared to be sent to Trenton where the case will be argued before the Supreme Court.

GOSSIP OF THE CYCLERS.

ITEMS INTERESTING TO DEVOTEES OF THE STEEL STEEDS.

The Popular Exercise Provides Incidents and Expressions That are of Especial Moment When Wheeling is the Rage.

The Triumph Wheelmen, of New York, had a run to this city, Sunday afternoon.

The Elizabeth Athletic Cyclers will send a team to Plainfield next Monday to compete in the Crescent Wheelmen's race meet.

There is a movement among a number of the young men of the city to form a bicycle club for the purpose of taking runs one evening every week.

The bicycle track at Crescent Oval is in fine condition, and every day crowds of racing men are to be found there getting in shape for the Decoration Day meet.

The Epworth League of the First M. E. church has decided to give a bicycle run for its members and friends. The date of the run will be announced in a few days.

L. M. Hillman and Harry F. Cuming, two crack riders of the Plainfield High School, have entered the two-mile handicap in the Crescent Wheelmen's Decoration Day meet.

Fred W. L. Fullerton, of Montclair, formerly of this city, is entered to ride at the Crescent Wheelmen's racemeet on Decoration Day. Fullerton is a fast little rider and is up in all the tricks of the track.

The F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company has just received two handsome Cleveland tandems, enameled olive green. They are combination tandems. There has been a change in the steering gear of the Cleveland tandems this year, which is a great improvement over the old.

The New Jersey Road Book for 1897 will be issued about June 1, so that those not already members should secure an application blank at this office and join at once. All new members will receive one. Old members can secure it by sending twenty-five cents to the secretary-treasurer.

Those who are planning a Decoration Day outing on their wheels find themselves greatly in need of a reliable road book. The road book which the New Jersey Division of the League of American Wheelmen offers to all its members, is the right thing in the right place. It free to all League members.

William McCutcheon, one of the most popular young riders of Plainfield, has entered for the Crescent Wheelmen's Decoration Day races and will come down from New Haven to attend them. He will bring with him a fellow member of the Yale track team named Howard, and the two will give the local cracks something to think about. They will ride in the amateur events, including the two mile tandem.

While riding down one of the hills between Metuchen and New Brunswick, Sunday afternoon, an unknown cyclist from New York fell and was seriously injured. His head was badly gashed and he received internal injuries. He was carried by his companions to the Stelton station, several miles away, and taken by train to New York. At the time of his accident he was riding without hands on the handle-bar and looking behind at his friends.

There will be plenty of attractions for wheelmen on Decoration Day this year. The main feature of the day, will of course, be the annual Irvington-Milburn road race, and in addition there will be races under the auspices of the Crescent Wheelmen in this city and the Atalanta Wheelmen at the Waverley track, the meet of the Excelsior Boat Club at Clifton, and the bicycle races at the events of the New Jersey Athletic Club at Bayonne. On the Saturday previous, the Boonton Athletic Club and the Hammonton Athletic Association will have races, also the Athletic Park Association at Millville.

The chief topic of conversation in local cycling circles at present is the coming race meet of the Crescent Wheelmen which is to be held on the Crescent Oval next Monday afternoon. For the last three years the Decoration Day meet in Plainfield has been a regular feature despite the strong rivalry of Rahway which has on two occasions tried to get the sanction. This year, there are more opposition meets in the vicinity, but the number of fast riders has increased and there will be enough for all. The Crescents are planning to have the cream of the racing circles for their meet and are constantly receiving entries from many well-known riders. If the local people stand by the club, there is no doubt but that the meet will be a great success from every point of view.

Herbert W. Knight, the court stenographer of Union county, who attended the Beerbower trial in this city last Friday, is one of the most prominent L. A. W. men in the State. He was much delighted with the appearance of Plainfield as a cycling city and remarked on the great number of wheels ridden here. He was greatly astonished when he learned that Plainfield had the smallest percentage of league members of any city in the State. Mr. Knight told some of his Plainfield friends of the practical advantages of being an L.A.W. member. He rode here from Elizabeth, accompanied by his wife. While passing through Westfield her pneumatic saddle met with an accident and a Westfield dealer, after seeing Mr. Knight's membership card, lent them a new saddle until the old one could be fixed. On arriving here Mr. Knight materially reduced the size of his hotel bill by presenting that wonderful membership card again. Every rider should be a member of the League. Application blanks may be obtained at this office.

Mrs. J. K. Myers has recently adopted the wheel as a source of pleasure.

TENNIS.

A tennis court has been laid out by the Misses DuBois next to their home, on Park avenue, and every day a number of the young people assemble there for a friendly game.

The tennis courts of the Grace M. E. church have been greatly improved by the removal of the large tree that stood close to the court and by the moving back of the guard nets. The court itself has been improved and the game grows more popular every day with the young people of the church. A croquet ground has been laid out next to the court, where those who do not care for such vigorous exercise can spend a pleasant afternoon.

There will be an active season among the tennis players of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, this year. Already the courts of the club, in the vicinity of their clubhouse on Plainfield avenue, are daily visited by the members. The courts are in good condition and promise to rival the old courts of the club in a few weeks. The season will be formally opened on Monday when the first tournament will be held. The tournament will be for men's doubles, open to residents of Plainfield and North Plainfield. Play will begin at 10 o'clock, Monday morning. The tournament has been arranged by the tennis committee of the club which is composed of Carl Pfeiffer, chairman; Leonidas Dennis, Horace E. Moore, Henry V. Ryder and Willard Wadsworth.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore equires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo O., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. THEY ATE GOOD THINGS.

STRAWBERRY AND ICE CREAM FESTIVALS TUESDAY NIGHT.

One Held in the W. C. T. U. Rooms and One in the Monroe Avenue M. E. Church —The Social Side to Each Affair.

The rooms of the W. C. T. U. never looked prettier than they did Tuesday afternoon and last evening when the members of the Union held their first strawberry festival of the season. A large variety of the choicest plants and flowers, very kindly loaned by Mrs. L. J. Denton, were used to decorate the rooms and a pretty scene was presented. In each of the front windows were banked all kinds of wild flowers, while the various tables were made beautiful by an adornment of these choice flowers.

In the afternoon a goodly number of people were present and enjoyed the strawberries, cake and ice-cream which was served by those in charge. A much larger crowd attended in the evening and the attractions were increased by the rendition of a pleasing programme of music. Those who furnished piano selections were Miss Jennie Quick, Miss May Thompson, Miss Swain and Harold Smalley. The musical numbers interspersed the social features of the evening and everybody had a thoroughly delightful time. Those present spent their money freely and thus a good cause was assisted in a grand work.

Mrs. Parse, president of the Union, was chairman of the affair and assisting her were Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Mrs. S. R. Krom, Mrs. J. W. Yates, Mrs. Silas Yerkes, Mrs. B. K. Case, Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, Mrs. J. Newton Honeyman, Mrs. S. A. Cahoone, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. O. B. Leonard, Mrs. Ramsey Blair, Mrs. Clinton Randolph and Miss Anna Boice, while the waitresses were the Misses Cahoone, Miss Smith and Miss Noe.

The affair was in every way successful and a good sum of money was received from the sale of refreshments.

Among the first strawberry festivals of the season was the one held last Tuesday in the Monroe Avenue church under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the church. The pretty little church was attractively decorated with flowers and the tables were also decked with beautiful plants.

Mrs. Israel P. LaRue, president of the Society, was in charge, and she was ably assisted by various members of the Society. In the kitchen looking after the cakes were Mrs Kinney, Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Wenzel, while Mrs. A. D. Pearson attended to the strawberries. The apron table was in charge of Mrs Rogers, and Miss Smith, Miss Adams and the Misses Foster presided at the candy table. That all-important article, ice cream, was carefully attended to by M. Eaken and Mr. VanPelt. The waitresses, were Mrs. Pugh, Mrs. VanPelt, Mrs. Ackerman, Mrs. Fulton, Mrs. Eakin, Miss Brower, Mrs. Hayes, Miss Foster and Miss Stafford. Mrs. Brown sold tickets, while Mrs. Brouard received the ever-desirable cash.

There was a large attendance and the sale of articles and refreshments was excellent. The proceeds of the affair will be devoted to the church work and the ladies feel much encouraged for their efforts. A feature of the evening was the genuine sociability on the part of all, and everybody complimented those in charge in arranging such an enjoyable event.

Central's Popular Excursions.

Next Monday the Central Railroad Company will commence their popular excursions to Manhattan Beach, Glen Onoko and the famed switchback. These excursions each year have become more and more popular and the number of people taking advantage of them has increased. The train will leave Plainfield next Monday morning at 9:28 a. m., and the fare for the round trip is $1.75 for adults, and $1.31 for children. You cannot spend a day more profitably than to go on one of these excursions.

A Developing Athlete.

Raymond A. McGee, of Washington Park, is making a great reputation for himself as an oarsman at Yale. He was one of the leading candidates for the freshmen crew, but his splendid physique and great strength and quickness has resulted in his being transferred to the 'varsity crew, in which he is now rowing as No. 6. He is looked on as a sure candidate for the position.

Isidoro Castro Brittin, a young Cuban who resided in this city about five years ago, has returned to Plainfield and is now night clerk at the Hotel Hunterston. Mr. Britton has many friends in Plainfield who wish him success in his new field. The first of June Mr. Brittin's parents, who are now in Cuba, will come to this city for a visit.

GRADUATES' RECEPTION

THE SOCIAL SIDE OF THE HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT.

Members of the Classes of '95 and '96 Met and Arranged for the Details, Which Will be About as Usual.

The leading social event of the year in the Plainfield High School is the reception to the graduating class. This year it will be held in the Casino of the Union County Country Club on the evening of June 24th, Commencement Day at the High School. The reception is given by the two preceding classes.

Last Monday the members of the classes of '95 and '96 held a meeting at the High School building and made the necessary arrangements for the reception to the class of '97. There had been some talk of returning to the old custom of holding the reception in one of the school buildings, but there was a decided opposition to it and the classes decided to follow the precedent of the last two years and hold it in the Casino. The reception will be from 10 to 1 o'clock.

It was decided to issue 300 tickets. Each member of the classes of '95 and '96 will receive four tickets, each member of the graduating class will receive the same number and the rest will be distributed among the subscribers. The Juniors will receive no tickets.

The committees were then appointed by the chairman as follows: Finance committee—Charles Burdette Morse, chairman; John V. Beekman, Jr., Henry B. Drake, Henry Egger ding, Charles M. Dolliver and Raymond V. Carroll; Casino and caterer committee—John V. Beekman, Jr., chairman; George V. Horne; music, order committee—Miss Grace E. Overton, chairman; Miss Mary Hull; printing committee—Chas. B. Morse, chairman; Edward C. Clark; decorating committee—Miss Grace E. Overton, chairman; Miss Etta Raybert, Miss Hattie King, Miss Florence Bowman, Miss Mamie Steiner, Miss Clyde Burnett, Miss Elizabeth Cahoone, John V. Beekman, Jr., Geo. A. Horne, Chas. Squires, and Fred J. Squires.

The meeting was presided over by Henry B. Drake, secretary of the class of '95, the president and vice-president both being out of town. Chas. B. Morse was appointed secretary pro tem.

STRUCK BY A LCCOMOTIVE.

Narrow Escape of a Jersey City Man From Meeting a Fearful Death.

There came very near being another name added to the list of those who have met death on the railroad, Tuesday a m., when a citizen of Jersey City deliberately walked in front a passing train at the North avenue station.

The 6:30 train was slowing up preparatory to stopping at the station when a middle aged man walked down the platform to meet it. He was walking along the board walk that is built between the tracks and next to the approaching train. He kept close to the side of the track on which the train was moving. The engineer saw him and rang the bell but supposed that the man must see where he was going.

The stranger never moved from the path in which he had started but kept on until the front of the locomotive struck him on the shoulder and threw him to the ground. He was unconscious for several minutes but finally recovered and declared that he was all right. He gave his name as J. Stewart, of Jersey City, and insisted that he must leave at once for that place.

THEATRICAL.

There will be no cooler or more enjoyable place of amusement in New York this summer than Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre, New York. On warm days all the doors that lead into the capacious courts on each side of the auditorium will be thrown wide open. Huge ventilating fans moved by machinery will keep up a most enjoyable breeze. The seats are unusually commodious and comfortable, and ice water will be passed around by courteous ushers. Mr. Proctor has not only taken special pains to insure physical comfort for the patrons of his Twenty-third street house, but has made ample preparations to entertain them with the very best vaudeville attractions in the grand continuous performance that will be in progress every day throughout the summer, from noon to near midnight. There will be no deterioration from the acknowledged excellence of the continuous bills presented during the winter season. On the contrary, Mr. Proctor intends to have the performances at his Twenty-third Street Theatre surpass in point of novelty and attractiveness anything that may be offered this summer on roof gardens or other places of amusement.

A Church Convention.

The Eastern Association of Seventh Day Baptist churches of New Jersey and New York city will commence at the New Market church on Thursday and continue in session for four days. No service will therefore be held in the Seventh-Day Baptist church of his city next sab bath.

SUPPOSED ROBBERS CAPTURED.

Three Young Men, Wanted by Philadelphia Detectives, Arrested.

A telegram was received by the police of this city at an early hour, Wednesday, asking that three men be removed from a freight train that was then almost due. The three men were arrested by the officers and gave their names as John and Charles Michael and John Leonard, all of Philadelphia.

Chief Detective O'Brien, of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and other detective of the same force, arrived this noon and told the officers that the men captured last evening were suspected of committing a series of freight car robberies at Philadelphia. City Judge DeMeza sent them to county jail for thirty days, charged with trespassing, while the railroad detectives are looking for the necessary evidence to hold then on the charge of entering the cars.

Mrs. Burke left her horse and wagon in front of a Grove street residence Wednesday. During her absence the horse was attracted to a nice grass plot, and in his efforts to get something to eat the wagon was almost upset. Hackman Charles Barry happened along and hastened to the rescue of the horse and wagon.

While he was getting things straightened out Chief Marshal Wilson came along and took charge of the rig. At that time the owner of the rig was not known. Mrs. Burke appeared while the officer was tieing the horse to a post, and she took charge of the rig. The officer warned her not to leave her horse untied again.

For the Fresh Air Fund.

An ice cream and candy sale, for the benefit of the fresh air fund, will be held at the home of Miss Eleanor T. Van Deventer, 2 Willow avenue, on Friday afternoon. In connection with the sale, which has been arranged by Miss Eleanor T. Van Deventer and Miss Grace E. Overton, there will be a Punch and Judy show, conducted by the same young ladies on an original plan.

"PLAINFIELD DAY."

The Date of the Fete Champetre to be Known as Such.

The Town Improvement Association having been duly incorporated, begins the second year of its existence with most encouraging prospects. While the membership has increased over last year, it is desirable that all the women of Plainfield should identify themselves with an association that is so directly interested in the welfare of the city. A mistaken idea prevails in some quarters that women need a personal invitation to become members; such is not the case as Article III of the Constitution reads, "Any woman may become an active member of this association by the annual payment of fifty cents. The Association needs the co-operation of all women to make its working entirely successful.

Just now when so much time and thought are given to the coming Fete Champetre, the street committee would call particular attention of all good citizens and of the Council to the advertising signs nailed on the trees in direct violation of the law. Before the numerous expected guests arrive would it not be well to have all these unsightly objects removed? On this "gay and festive" occasion how much it would add to the beauty of our city if our citizens decorated their houses with flags etc., in honor of Plainfield Day.

Twenty Days to Think It Over.

Marshal Kilner arrested Andrew Dougherty, of Catasauqua, Pa., at the corner of Greenbrook road and Harrison street, Tuesday afternoon. Dougherty was under the influence of liquor and was inclined to be disorderly. Recorder Thomas gave him twenty days in which to recuperate.

ON MOUNT MINSI'S TOP.

THE DELIGHTFULLY RUSTIC SUMMER PLACE OF A PLAINFIELDER.

A Spot Designed by Nature to Make a Most Romantic and Pleasurable—Party of Plainfielders Who Were There.

Nestled among the mountains of Pennsylvania is located the Delaware Water Gap, noted the world over for its natural beauty. Not far distant, about three miles, through a most romantic portion of the country, is located that particularly favored spot, Mount Minsi, towering far above its sister mountains. The natural beauty prominent in every nook and corner attracts the eye and one is almost bewildered as he finds himself surrounded with so much that is rustic and charming. Separating the Keystone State from that of New Jersey is the broad and rapidly flowing Delaware River, winding its way onward to a larger body of water. On the Pennsylvania side of the river traverses the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, while on the other side is the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad.

This is the spot where a party of Plainfielders had the delightful pleasure of spending Saturday, Sunday and Monday as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Nightingale, who have a residence in this city. Charming, indeed, was the host and hostess, and that they know full well how to entertain was clearly evidenced by the way they provided every comfort for those who were favored with an invitation to the above place.

The guests, which included a number of New York people as well as the Plainfielders, arrived at the Mount Minsi House early Saturday afternoon, and every one felt perfectly at home from the start. The reception was in true Pennsylvania style and this feature pervaded the atmosphere throughout the stay in the mountains. Of course, every one was seized with a large appetite upon their arrival and when supper time was reached a tempting repast was soon disposed of. Manager Warner had anticipated such a state of affairs and had prepared for it, and although this was the opening of the house everything worked with clock-like regularity. After supper the guests enjoyed a short stroll or a seat on the broad veranda where the cool breeze made one feel as though they were ten years younger.

When the time came to retire the guests were all provided with comfortable quarters. Surrounding the house in romantic places were five cozy cottages, each one made in a truly rustic manner and amply large to accomodate a number of people. Some of the cottages were located on the mountain-side while others were near the house. In the cottages every convenience is provided and living there is like being at home. The very excellent drinking water is obtained from a spring at the top of Mount Minsi and to drink this water is, indeed, invigorating.

After a comfortable night's rest the guests awoke rather early Sunday morning to enjoy all that was possible during their short stay, and after a good substantial breakfast small parties were formed and short trips were taken through the country, and the bracing atmosphere brought everyone home with a sharp appetite for dinner, which was a most delightful one.

In the afternoon the guests separated again and some enjoyed a drive to near by places, while others preferred to walk among the mountains. In the evening there was a social gathering of the happy party in one of the cottages and the evening was passed in singing to the accompaniment of a banjo.

Monday was one of the best enjoyed in the mountains. The weather was perfect and the many forms of amusement were all sought by the guests and they never seemed to tire of any. Monday morning all were indeed sorry that the time for departure had arrived and it was with regret that the genial company separated. In a few hours each one had reached home and the trip to the mountains will be a life-long reminder of all that is pleasant and enjoyable. Anyone desiring to spend a summer or even a few weeks could find no better place than Mount Minsi, for everything that is healthful and enjoyable is there. An additional feature of the trip was the presence of G. Thord and Ben Wykoff, of this city, who made a number of very excellent views, both of the party and the surrounding country. The guests were all loud in their praise of the host and hostess and the best wishes of everyone was extended.

Those who formed the party included "Uncle" Dan and Mrs. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Arnold, Assemblyman and Mrs. W. R. Codingly.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDIES.

CHANGES THAT ARE PROPOSED FOR THE NEXT YEAR.

A Business Education to be Given by a Capable Instructor—More Room to be Given to the Scientific Department.

While all immediate action regarding a new High School by the Board of Education of Plainfield has been dropped, the members of the Board still speak of it and it is only a question of a few years when ground will be broken for a new edifice to take the place of the present building which has been outgrown by the school. Meanwhile it is necessary for the Board to do something to supply the growing needs of the students in the High School.

There will be several important changes in the courses in the High School in the next school year. For the benefit of the young men and young women who are now compelled to go to a business college to take a course in stenography and typewriting, a practical business course will be started in the High School. It will include stenography, typewriting, bookkeeping, commercial arithmetic and other needful studies of the same character. A professor, well up in those branches, will take charge of them.

The scientific department of a school grows more and more important in these days of scientific research when everybody finds a knowledge of the sciences of great value in almost any branch of work and so plans are being laid for a broadening of the scientific department of the High School, which has always been cramped in space and materials. There is at present but one science room in the High School for four classes. Another room, equipped with individual desks and tables for experimental work, so necessary in science, will be fitted up and ready for use in the fall. The room to be used is the one now occupied by Miss Day's class of the Grammar School, which will be transferred to the old Seventh-Day Baptist church structure in the fall. This room, in the days before the classes all sat in the assembly room, was known as the senior room. The old science room will be continued in its present use, but for classes where individual work is not so needful.

A BICYCLE SOCIABLE.

EPWORTH LEAGUE INAUGURATE ANOTHER WHEELING INNOVATION.

Chapter No. 1 to Have Their Summer Sociables Take the Form of a Bicycle Run on Country Roads Pleasant Evenings.

The Christian workers of Plainfield have taken the lead in the practical adoption of the bicycle among their methods of work. Plainfield was the first city in the country to have a church run. Last year, it will be remembered, Rev. C. L. Goodrich gathered the cycling members of his congregation and enjoyed a spin out on the country road together. Then Plainfield was the first to have a Christian Endeavor cycling squad, as has been organized this spring. Now the members of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church, Chapter No. 1, have planned a novel sociable in which the wheel is to play the all prominent part. The members are to assemble in wheeling dress and spend an evening on their wheels, enjoying a ride on Union county's famous roads.

The plan of a sociable on wheels has been spoken of by the officers of the League for some time but now the plan has taken practical shape and the run is set for Tuesday evening next. It will be for the members and such of their friends as they care to invite. The destination has not yet been decided upon, neither have the officers been chosen, but all that will be accomplished at the business meeting of the League on Friday evening.

There are an even hundred members of the League and it is estimated that nearly fifty per cent of them are riders of the wheel and will be able to go on the run.

Bound Brook Council Adjourns.

The Bound Brook Council was to meet last Tuesdao to take up the trolley ordinance. A large crowd was present, but to the surprise of all, when the time came for the question to be considered Councilman McNabb made a motion to adjourn, and being seconded by Councilman Ramsay, the body adjourned for one week. The time for the writ of certiarori served on the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company will expire on June 7, and as the Council adjourned for one week, the company proposes to call for immediate action.

HO! FOR VACATION DAYS.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE CAMP FOR Y. M. C. A. MEMBERS.

A Beautiful Place That is Endowed With All the Things That Make Camp Life One Round of Pleasure and Profit.

Ho! Ho! Vacation days are near! Tra la, Tra la, Tra la. Yes, the vacation days will soon be here, and the question comes to you and others, "Where are you going to spend your vacation?" Not an easy question to answer perhaps, but let me call your attention to the fact that up in the grand old "Bay State" (Massachusetts,) on the Connecticut river, is a little village by the name of Northfield, the birth place of the famous evangelist, D. L. Moody, and in this village, about one half of a mile from its centre, on an elevated piece of land, with a beautiful view of the Connecticut river as it winds its way in and out can be had, and in the summer of '95, was organized the camp now known as "Camp Northfield," where young men from the heated and crowded cities have gone for the past two summers to get rest and pleasure and it is needless to say that they have found both in abundance. The "Old Camp Grounds" situated as they are, in a grove of stately pines, near the village and yet secluded, has grown dear to the camper who has spent many a happy day there. Four young men are assigned to a tent. No boughs for a bottom, thank you, but a good, solid floor of wood. A good cot, good mattress, warm blankets. Oh, how refreshing a sleep in the open air, with no New Jersey mosquitoes to bother the life out of you, and to entertain you with their charming (?) tune! Around the old camp fire, which is in the centre of the camping grounds, and around which the tents are formed in a circle, many a happy evening has been spent in singing songs, telling stories, cracking jokes, etc., etc. But what other pleasures are there for the campers? About a mile from camp is the Seminary ground where there are tennis courts, athletic field, etc. Baseball games are arranged throughout the season between camp teams and others. Then there is the "Old Swimming Hole," where the campers have loads of sport. The water is at this point for the use of the campers and a swimming float adds to the pleasure of the swim. Many are the pleasures to be enjoyed at "Camp Northfield," too many in fact to mention, but if you will call at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms you can receive as much information as you may desire in regards to the camp and the cost of camping, which is moderate. This camp is open to all young men, whether members of the Y. M. C. A. or not.

WILL FIGHT MARTIN ACT.

PROPERTY OWNERS AGAINST PAYING TAXES PRIOR TO 1880.

Those Interested to Hold a Public Meeting and Formulate Plans and Employ Counsel and Fight the City to the End.

The recent action of the City Council in securing the enforcement of the Martin Act for those who, it is claimed, owe the city taxes previous to 1880, has not been received with any degree of satisfaction by a large number of those who are affected by the Act, and in consequence an opposition to the above action has been started by School Commissioner Lounsbury.

At an early date a meeting will be held in the Board of Trade rooms a large number of citizens will meet and organize for the purpose of fighting the Martin Act to a finish. At the same time counsel will be engaged and everything will be done in a strictly legal manner.

A representative of The Daily Press met Mr. Lounsbury June 2 dand confirmed the report of the proposed action on the part of the citizens. Mr. Lounsbury says that he does not propose to pay any amount of money for the mistakes of someone else, neither does he propose to pay the taxes owing the city from someone else. He received a bill of $300 for taxes supposed to be due the city on his property prior to 1880. He claims that he does not owe the money, but is willing to pay the city $1 in settlement. This the city has refused to accept.

Among those who are interested with Mr. Lounsbury as leaders in this movement are Joseph Sadford, J. T. Vail and Charles Hand. There are a host of others who have signified their intention to join the movement and have so stated their intention.

David Ryno, of East Second street, is among the latest to ride a wheel.

Mrs. G. T. Rhodes, of Grove street, has joined the great army of cyclists and enjoys many delightful spins on her silent steed.

FOUGHT AGAINST LIFE.

MRS. JOHN C. SMALLEY DIES BY THE ACT OF HER OWN HAND.

Drank a Cup of Poison Tuesday Afternoon and Died Next Morning in Great Agony—The Third Attempt at Suicide.

After two unsuccessful attempts, Mrs. John C. Smalley, of 203 Manson place, succeeded in making away with her own life by swallowing several arsenical compounds. She made her last tempt to commit suicide, Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, and at 7 o'clock this morning she passed away in great agony, the victim of her own hand.

John C. Smalley is the proprietor of the Bijou Market, on South Second street, near Manson place. He lives in the corner house, which backs up to the store. There has been some trouble in the Smalley family for some time and about two years ago, Mrs. Smalley, in a fit of despondency, tried to end her life. She was successful. A year ago she took a large dose of laudanum but the treatment of Dr. Simpson saved her and she recovered from the effects of the poison.

For several weeks Mrs. Smalley has been feeling very despondent, so her husband says. Tuesday she was worse than before. Mrs. Smalley assisted her husband in the care of his store and tended to the customers in his absence.

He had been to the storehouse of the meat company after a supply of meat and had just returned. He entered the store in time to see Mrs. Smalley raise a cup to her lips. From its appearance and her recent despondency, he suspected that it was poison and dashed the cup to one side. It contained Bough on Rats and water. It appears that she had already partaken of the poisonous draught before the appearance of her husband and had also taken the liquid for arsenical fly-paper, which was kept for use in the market.

She hurried to the house where she drank more of the fatal solution of Bough on Rats before her husband realized what she had done.

Dr. M. S. Simpson was sent for but was not at home. The messenger sent him on the street and the doctor hurried to Smalley's home, stopping to pick up Dr. Manning on the way. They found that she would-be suicide had planned her work carefully and that the poison was beginning to act. She fought their every effort to relieve her and told them that though they had balked her before, she would now accomplish her object. It was, at last, found necessary to hold the woman while the stomach pump was used.

Dr. Simpson worked over the poisoned woman most of the night. She was conscious all the time and in great agony. She expressed no repentence for her act to the very last. At 7 o'clock, next morning, she died.

STYLE OF NEW BRIDGES.

FREEHOLDERS CONSIDER IMPORTANT JOINT COUNTY IMPROVEMENTS.

The Sycamore Avenue Span to be a Low Truss Plank One—Watchung Avenue to be Connected by a Concrete Structure.

The Bridge Committee of the Union County Board of Freeholders met with the Somerset County Board of Freeholders at Tier's lake house, Tuesday afternoon, for the purpose of determining on the style of bridges to be erected on Watchung avenue and Sycamore avenue. Plans were submitted for both bridges. The members decided to build a concrete bridge on Watchung avenue with a centre pier. The span will be seventy-five feet. It will cost between $8,000 and $10,000, and it will be erected in such a manner as to provide for a low rise in the stream over which it will be placed.

Regarding the Sycamore avenue bridge, it was decided to erect a low truss plank bridge and will be full width. This bridge will cost about $8,000. There are several matters to be considered about the latter bridge and that will be done at the next meeting of the two Boards one week from next Friday.

Next Saturday the plans and specifications for the two bridges will be on exhibition at Mr. Tier's lake house, when all who desire can see the same and prepare to submit bids for the construction of the bridges. It is customary to allow about twelve days for the reception of bids and this rule will hold good in this case. It is confidently believed that the work of building the bridges will be started this month, and it is expected that it will require from two to three months to complete the Watchung avenue bridge.

Miss May Cooper is visiting relatives in Brooklyn.

—The Daughters of Rebekah will hold an entertainment June 8th in their rooms on West Front street.

WORK OF THE HOSPITAL.

REPORTS MADE AT THE GOVERNORS' ANNUAL MEETING.

At the annual meeting of Muhlenberg Hospital on Monday evening the reports presented showed that the past year had been the most active in work and in improvements in its history.

The number of patients in the Hospital this year has been 238, as compared with 222 in the previous year, and the number of visits of patients to the dispensary 912, compared with 878 in the previous year. The ambulance has been called into service fifty-nine times during the year, demonstrating again its great usefulness.

A great many improvements have been made, the more noticeable being the new laundry and the Nurses' Home, each complete in its way, thoroughly equipped and entirely paid for, and the X-ray apparatus.

But the demands on the Hospital call for still greater improvements, and the Board of Governors are aware that they must soon begin alterations and additions required for enlarging both wards and providing for the dispensary, for private patients and isolation wards, for erecting contagious disease buildings and for several other urgent needs.

The treasurer's report contains the kernel of the whole matter. From that it appears that while the contributors have been more numerous and the contributions larger than ever before, the expenses have overrun the current receipts so that the floating debt exceeds $1,000, the largest ever reported.

RECEIPTS.
Donations	$4,000
Hospital Sunday	2,000
Woman's Auxiliary Board	1,000
Patients	2,000
Interest and rents	1,000
Other income	1,231
EXPENSES.
Fuel, light and water	$ 4,000
Provisions	3,000
Medicine, etc	1,000
Salaries and wages	9,000
Miscellaneous expenses	1,000

A part of the indebtedness comes from bills of the previous year, unpaid at the beginning of the present year, but the real deficit of this year amounts to $600 or $700, and it was stated that the hope of overcoming this growing deficiency depended mainly in increasing the list of regular annual subscribers, to accomplish which a special effort will be made.

HAS TWO BICYCLES NOW.

EDWARD WHITE RECOVERS IN JUNE A WHEEL STOLE IN SEPTEMBER.

The Bicycle Disappeared From South Plains and Was Recognized the Other Day by Manager Price at Eldridge's.

Edward White, the well-known merchant, has two bicycles now. It will be remembered that several months ago, he left his wheel standing in front of one of the hotels in South Plains. When he came for it, the wheel was gone and he did not see it again until Tuesday.

Several days ago, a young man came into the repair shop of the Eldridge Bicycle Company, on Park avenue, with a '96 Columbia wheel to have some trifling repair made. The young man said that his name was John Coles and that he lived in South Plains. Mr. Price, manager for the Eldridge Company in Plainfield, noticed the wheel and recognized it as the one which Edward White had formerly owned but which had been stolen from him. Nothing was said to Coles in regard to the matter and he was allowed to depart.

Tuesday, Mr. White, who had been informed of the location of his missing wheel, went to Scotch Plains and appeared before a justice of the peace there. A search warrant was sworn out and placed in the hands of a constable who served it. The wheel was found in Mr. Coles' barn.

Mr. Coles, on learning that the wheel he had been riding was the property of another man, explained that he got it An Italian came to him about a month ago and offered him the wheel for $5. The bargain was a good one and Coles bought the wheel. Then Mr. White and the constable went after the Italian.

A warrant was issued for the arrest of the Italian and he was found and placed in custody. When arraigned before the justice, he admitted selling the wheel to Coles. But said that he had found it on the mountain. He told a straight forward story, and as there was no evidence to hold him he was discharged.

—Former Assistant Secretary of State Joseph D. Hall, who fell from a second story window at his home in Trenton on Sunday night, died yesterday from his injuries.

DEMOCRATIC HARMONY.

A CONFERENCE OF UNION COUNTY LEADERS HELD TUESDAY.

A Dinner to Be Given in a Few Weeks When It is Expected All Divergent Elements Will Meet and Thus Harmonize.

At the Winsor Hotel, in Orange, Tuesday afternoon, there gathered by prearrangement fifteen prominent Democrats of Union county, who set down to a big dinner and then talked crops, weather and politics—mostly the latter subject, however, for the assemblage was called for the purpose of devising some way in which the divergent elements of the Democratic party in the last campaign could be brought together to act in unity in the campaign next fall. Representatives were present from nearly every section of the county. The conference was understood to be a very quiet one, and for that reason it was held in Orange, but the fact of it leaked out before the morning.

While most of the conferees reported that things looked lovely in their particular bailiwicks, there were others who said that the gold Democrats in their section were still inclined to be backward in patching up the differences that set the party in twain last fall. Advocates of both currency platforms were present at the meeting. It was finally decided that some time in July the Jefferson Democratic Club, of Union county, should give a banquet that should be a veritable love-feast for the members of the party—an affair modeled after the Jefferson Club dinner of a few weeks ago in Newark, only that all the toasts should be more conducive to harmony than was Allan McDermott's speech. The dinner will probably be given in Elizabeth, and distinguished Democrats from other States will be invited. Besides the harmony dinner, the prospects of candidates for county offices next fall were discussed. Special stress was laid on the importance of electing the Union county Surrogate, the only office, besides the Assemblymen, to be chosen in November.

MONEY MAKERS IN A GOOD CAUSE.

King's Daughters Receive the Profits of Children's Lawn Fete.

The following letter has been received by the treasurer of the King's Daughters from Percy F. Philips, who had charge of the money made at the lawn fete conducted by the children at 921 Madison avenue:

It gives me much pleasure to hand you herewith check for $74 for the benefit of the Children's Camp. This amount was raised by children's little efforts, as shown appear below, who held a candy and cake fair at 921 Madison avenue, last Saturday afternoon. Neumann Brothers, Tier & Son, Consolidated Ice Company, Dr. Beadle's pharmacy, Drs. Shaw, Kay, Armstrong and others made liberal contributions, and also sold to the little girls various articles at wholesale prices, thus enabling them to make a profit.

The names of the girls in charge are as follows: Misses May Day, Anna Caboone, Fannie Caboone, Jean Dunham, Mamie Dunham, Edna Smith, Wilhelmina Patten, Ethel VanZandt, Ethel Murray, May Murray, Bessie Phillips, Virginia LeCand, Margie Phillips.

"PIC-NIC!"

A Study For Plainfield and Other People to Make.

The derivation of the phrase, "Pic-Nic." What is it? For a satisfactory explanation of this problem a handsome prize will be given at the tent of the press-committee—if you can find it. At the same time you will have a lesson in the theory of evolution: You will see that the change from Pic-Nic to Fete has been a change in fact as well as in name, a growth from the simple to the complex. The former was an informal, jolly frolic among friends and kindred; the latter is a world of amusement in miniature.

Do not, however, take our word for it, but go to Johnston Park and see it demonstrated.

Pleasantly Surprised.

Miss Lizzie Dunlap, of East Fifth street, was pleasantly surprised last Tuesday by the members of Rebekah degree lodge, of which she is a member. Miss Dunlap was wholly unaware of the visitation of her sister members and she was completely surprised. A few games helped to pass a portion of the time and at a late hour supper was served. Miss Dunlap is one of the officers of the above lodge and is very popular among the members.

Conferred Masonic Degrees.

Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., held a communication last Tuesday and conferred the degrees on two candidates. There was a large number of visitors present from nearby lodges, and after the business of the evening a fine banquet was served by the committee in charge. The work, as performed by the members of the home lodge, was very highly complimented by the visitors and they were delighted with their visit.

ADJUSTING THE TAXES.

SCHEDULE ADOPTED BY THE COMMON COUNCIL LAST NIGHT.

Delinquents Previous to 1880 are Divided Into Four Classes, Allowing Settlements That are Hoped Will be Satisfactory.

The special meeting of the City Council held last Friday was not a drawing one; in fact, it was so uninteresting to the average person that there was scarcely anyone in the lobby. During the early part of the evening two or three persons dropped in, but they did not stay long.

E. T. Barrows acted as president pro tem in the place of J. B. Dumont, who is out of town. The other members absent were Messrs. Baker and Worthington. The call of the meeting was read, which was to take further steps to secure the adoption of the Martin Act for the collection of back taxes prior to 1880. At the suggestion of Councilman. Runyon, Corporation Counsel Marsh stated in brief the position of the city regarding the Act and and the present necessary steps. He said that the Council was acting under a law of 1887, whereby the Legislature gave common councils jurisdiction in the collection of real estate taxes to settle, levy or compromise the same. This the Council was now doing in view of the irregularities prior to 1882. Under the act of 1887 many persons have asked the Council to adjust, settle or compromise with them in the matter of taxes within the next thirty days. If it is not settled in that time other steps will have to be taken to collect the taxes. The resolution which was adopted at the last meeting which referred to the schedule was somewhat incomplete, in it did not give a description of the property and the figures were in some cases incorrect. The committee did not think it necessary to include the description of the property and it was therefore left out.

At this time Mayor Fisk returned the previous resolution for amendment as suggested by the Corporation Counsel. It was referred to the committee on collection and assessment of taxes. In the meantime Mr. Marsh stated for the benefit of the members that originally the collector of taxes had no authority to issue certificates where a property changed hands, but at the present time he has that power and has had since 1894. After a recess of thirty minutes, during which time the committee was preparing their amended report, Mr. Serrell moved to reconsider the original resolution. He then moved that a substitute resolution be adopted in its place. The new resolution and schedule consists of four classes as follows: Class A all those who have petitioned to settle for the full face value of the tax; Class B, those who are poor and unable to pay the full amount can settle for $10. Class C, where property has changed hands several times and is now being held by innocent persons 50 per cent. will be received in settlement; Class D, those who can show receipts or certificates that their tax has been paid will pay $1 if they wish the tax erased from the books.

The above schedule was examined several times by the members and finally was adopted by them. Just previous to its adoption Mr. Runyon, who had voted against the above, arose and stated that he would like to offer a motion that all taxes prior to 1880 be settled for 5 per cent. on the dollar. Mr. Barrows did not think that the motion was in order and several Councilmen were of the same opinion. The Mayor was present and had a few words to say on the subject. He said that upon investigation he had learned that the city has no right to make such a compromise and that it would take a change in the law stated that the Council could not enforce the payment of these back taxes prior to 1880 unless the delinquents desired to pay. If they would not pay the tax would remain the same as it is on the books of the city. Under the Martin Act there is a provision that the Collector's books shall be turned over to the commissioners and that a number of public hearings shall be given so that all can be heard. If a person does not like to settle at our figures they can go to the commissioners and settle with them

Mr. Runyon still pressed his motion and it was lost by a vote of 6 to 2, Messrs. Runyon and Newman supported it. Mr. Frost made a few remarks on the subject and thought that all should be treated alike and that persons who owed should pay. He thought that the ones who have been owing the city for the past twelve years, and who have had the use of their money during that time, should be willing to settle at the figures offered by the city.

In a petition presented by J. B Coward he stated that property owned by himself had changed hands and there is due taxes which he is willing to settle with the city. Mr. Serrell offered a resolution that the claim be settled for 50 per cent. of the face value of the amount without the costs or interests. The above petition was the last one received and as the parties were willing to settle, Mr. Serrell thought it wise to effect a settlement at once.

Mr. Frost moved that certified copies of the schedule be furnished by the City Collector, and Mr. Serrell moved that all of the papers necessary be placed in the collector's hands.

This concluded the business of the evening and the council adjourned.

MARTIN ACT COMMISSIONER.

The Appointment Made by Judge Van Syckle This Morning.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh appeared before Judge Van Syckle of the Supreme CourtSaturday and made application for the appointment of three commissioners to proceed under the Martin Act for the collection of back taxes. According to the law only one of the commissioners can be selected from Plainfield. Judge Van Syckle appointed Frank Bergen and Comptroller A. P. Carlton, of Elizabeth, and Joseph A. Hubbard, of this city. These commissioners will take into consideration all properties coming under the Act and will then report back to the Supreme Court. The latter will either accept or reject the report. In case the report is accepted all those who fail to pay their taxes will have their property disposed of by the Court. The property will be sold outright and there will be no redress after the Court has decided the matter.

New Bridge Across the North Branch.

The ancient bridge which crossed the North Branch river on the road leading to South Branch and Readington has been torn down, and the stone piers are now being constructed for the big iron bridge that will replace it. A fence rail placed across the roadway near Stephen Garretson's farm and a sign which reads: "Bridge Off" warns the traveler that the best way around is the longest.

A CHANCE FOR HIS LIFE.

JOSEPH CHALBI GRANTED A NEW TRIAL IN SOMERSET COUNTY.

Argument Made by the Counsel Yesterday and the Points Considered by Judges Magie and Bartine on the Bench.

In the Somerset Court Friday morning Chief Justice Magie listened to the argument of counsel for a new trial in the case of Joseph Chalbi, who was convicted of murder in the first degree.

The evidence of two witnesses had been taken in the meantime before a master, the defence endeavoring to show by them that there was no premeditation. This testimony was read and J. J. Bergen, who has been added to the counsel for the defence, submitted a brief, in which he held that a motive for the killing was wanting in the evidence and no malice had been shown. The only premeditation, he said, was in the evideuce of one witness, and that was contradicted in the later testimony.

Justice Magie, after a conference with Judge Bartine, said that the Court had no doubt that the guilt of the defendant was established by the evidence beyond any reasonable doubt, but the difficulty was as to whether there was no reason for a new trial with respect to the degree. The threat made by the defendant to kill his wife to be effective should be made in anger. One witness said it was another said he was fooling and in good humor. The Judge regretted, he said, that the case should be tried again, but the defendant could have no other redress except an appeal to the Court of Errors or the Court of Pardons. The prisoner is willing to enter a plea of guilty of contendure to murder in the second degree. but Prosecutor Dungan has not consented to accept it.

BLUE LAWS MAY BE ENFORCED.

Elizabeth Players Threaten to Retaliate on Golfers and Wheelmen.

County Detective Keron was instructed yesterday by Prosecutor Marsh to take steps to prevent any ball game being played next Sunday on the Linden racetrack. Detective Keron will have a force of deputies at the track on Sunday, and will arrest. under the Disorderly House act, the managers and members of the opposing teams if they undertake to play.

The manager of the Elizabeth ball team says that if his men can not play, then he will retaliate by stopping golf playing on Sunday at the Suburban Club grounds, of which association Prosecutor Marsh is president. For the past month golf playing has been freely indulged in by this club, without any interference from the authorities. The ball players claim they are being unfairly discriminated against in this matter by the County Prosecutor They point out that in Newark, Paterson, Jersey City and other places Sunday ball is allowed by the authorities.

Threats are also being made to stop cycling on the Union county roads and streets of Elizabeth if ball playing is to be prohibited because cycling, it is claimed, also comes within the blue law statute.

PUNCH HIT JUDY IN A GOOD CAUSE.

A sale and entertainment for the benefit of the "Life" Fresh Air Fund was given at the residence of Augustus VanDeventer, of 3 Willow avenue, Friday afternoon. The affair was arranged by Miss Eleanor T VanDeventer and Miss Grace E. Overton, who had general supervision over it and took the leading parts in the entertainment, which consisted of a "Punch and Judy" show. It was given several times during the afternoon and proved very successful. It was given in a very effective manner, the stage being built under the charge of Miss Mabel VanDeventer and Miss Halla VanDeventer. Miss Lucie Palmer Davis presided over the lemonade table, while the waitresses in the ice cream department were the Misses Emily Gould, Annie Jennings, Marguerite VanDeventer and Frances VanDeventer.

The affair proved quite successful financially, over $30 being cleared.

Wheelmen in a Collision.

Benjamin H. Pitcher, an office boy at Scott Press Works, met with an accident Thursday evening in front of the Y. M. C. A. building. He was riding his wheel and run into an unknown wheelmen from out of town. Both received several scratches and bruises and the unknown man was obliged to stop for a few moments for repairs. Neither rider had any bones broken but they were badly shaken up.

Epworth League Parade.

A most important event of the season will occur on June 8th, when all of the members of the Junior Epworth League of this city will join in a grand parade, after which they will march to some suitable open air place and hold a mass meeting. Arrangements are now being perfected for the event and it will be undoubtedly one of the largest of the kind ever held in this locality.

ON EVEN FOOTING NOW.

BOUND BROOK TROLLEY WAR TAKES ON A NEW PHASE.

The Ordinance of the Cross-State Line Accepted and Advanced Satisfactority to Stockholders—Disposition of Certiorari

At the adjourned meeting of the Bound Brook Borough Council last week the ordinance of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company was accepted and passed on its second reading after being amended by the ordinance committee. The clause permitting use of under grade crossing was stricken out, and a clause allowing use of Main street extension substituted. This change will have the effect of cutting off South Brook, as that town cannot now be reached except by a round about route.

The two traction companies are now on an equality, the ordinances of both having been accepted; and the matter will now probably rest until the decision of the Supreme Court, regarding the writ of certiorari, recently issued, is known. Since the serving of this writ, the New York and Philadelphia Company have removed all ties within the borough, but have continued the work of planting poles west of the borough limits.

SWEENY NOW HAS A WORD.

He Replies to the Charge That He Influenced Young Whitlock.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I have seen the article published in your issue of the 26th instant headed "The Right Story" signed "Mrs. Helen C. Whitlock."

It seems that this writer intends to show that I am responsible for the voluntary confession made by her son Arthur. While I do not wish to be dragged into a newspaper controversy, preferring to wait until the courts have looked into the whole matter, I must say that the article is full of false statements, especially the statement that Arthur Whitlock was influenced and threatened by me to make the confession.

The truth is that he told to me, without any inducement or suggestion on my part, the exact facts he afterwards stated in his affidavit made to Justice Nash, therefore his attempted denial at the recent investigation at Elizabeth is so "this" that it merits no consideration.

The statement in the second clause of Mrs. Whitlock's letter that "William Sweeny then took my son to the office of Justice Nash where this paper that you published was found and my son was not afraid to sign it" is absolutely false. No paper was "found," but the Justice in his private office took Arthur's confession, as has appeared, after having in my presence cautioned him to tell the truth only. Arthur's own testimony that he was not taken to Justice Nash's office until the third day after his confession is enough.

He had three whole days and nights to tell his mother or his friend, Miss Phelps, of any alleged influence or thereto.

Did he do it? The charge to keep all this a secret is, so far as I know, another absolute falsehood.

That Arthur is sorry that "he did not have courage enough to resist such influence" may, perhaps, be true, but he must be referring to the influences exerted by Miss Phelps for I could not, and did not, attempt to exert any. If he told the truth on the day of the trial why should he not have stuck to it.

There is no positive assurance that Arthur told the truth to his mother and I cannot see how she can so positively speak of him.

Regarding what may have been promised him, his own sworn statement is sufficient, or insufficient, as the case may be. With the same intention Mrs. Whitlock is anxious to show, I too, desire to set this matter right before the public, if the public cares enough to give it consideration.

Wm. Sweeny.

JUNIORS DANCED.

A very successful junior subscription dance was held in the Park Club house, last Friday. The dance was arranged by a committee composed of J. P. Welles Taylor, E. Maxwell Honeyman and Arthur Murphy, and was independent of the Park Club.

The number of subscribers had been limited and a very pleasant feature of the dance was the fact that the number of guests corresponded with the size of the room. Refreshments were served at 11 o'clock and then the dancing continued until after 1 o'clock this morning. The committee was congratulated on its success in managing the affair and on the delightful evening they had arranged.

The patronesses were Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Mrs. S. A. Cruikshank, Mrs. Pfeiffer and Mrs. J. P. Taylor.

A LONG DRINK.

The great scarcity of water in Western Australia is well known. Twenty-five miles from Kanowna the author of the book said he had this experience: "We had now to halt to fill our water cans and give the camels a drink, as there would be no possibility of letting them have their fill again for some days after this. Having had a sort of farewell drink at one of the hotels, I strolled down to the condensers, where my camels had preceded me. Little had I imagined what eight cents per gallon for water meant when I told the men to give the camels what drink they could drink. I do not believe I am an inhuman man, and I feel sure I am as fond of animals as any one; but I must confess that my kindly feelings went down to a very low ebb indeed as I stood there watching gallon after gallon disappear down the apparently insatiable throats of the animals. I forget for the moment how many dollars this long drink cost me, but it certainly was the biggest teetotal drink I have ever paid for. I learned afterwards that it was a month since the poor brutes had had a drink, as they had not been working during that time, and when out at feed they never require water, it appears. However the bill was a heavy one, undoubtedly make up for it when they get a chance at somebody else's expense."

The Queen's Awkward Present.

The French colony of New Caledonia is troubled by the depredations of deer, which multiply with marvelous rapidity and invade the plantations, where they do great mischief, even climbing up into the granaries. A curious feature of the trouble is that the deer are not native, but are the offspring of a present made to the colony by the Queen of England.

A scientific writer draws from this fact a lesson that it is well to be cautious concerning the gifts of animals we may bestow upon other countries, and not make them without advice from experts concerning the conditions and contingencies. Rabbits in Australia, the mongoose in Jamaica, and the New Caledonian deer afford instances in which such gifts, made with the best intentions, have resulted disastrously.

It is said that the farmers of the State of Maine have also suffered from the incursions of deer since restrictions were placed upon the hunting of them.

CENTRAL COUNCIL HELD AN INITIATION AND SMOKER.

Members Enjoyed an Initiation and Smoker—Song, Story and Music Made the Hours Pass Pleasantly Friday Evening.

There was an extra large attendance at the meeting of Central Council, No. 131, Jr. O. U. A. M., of Westfield, Friday, and it proved a most enjoyable event in the lodge's history. The initiation of Bro. John L. Aiken took place first and the meeting then threw off its formal character and assumed the character of a smoker and entertainment. A. R. A. Woidt rendered violin solos, William H. Ward furnished some excellent organ music, and Martin Snyder showed what wonderful things could be done with the cornet. Addresses suitable to the occasion were delivered by Bros. L. Hendrickson, of Elizabeth, S. W. Reese and E. W. Affleck. W. M. Stamets sang with excellent effect "The Death of Ellsworth," and as an encore, "The fellow that looks like me," and Samuel Knapp executed an interesting fling with his heels. Refreshments were next passed around, and for a time all other matters were forgotten in the pleasures of the feast. Several selections on the phonograph, given by H. Pearsall after the feast, were roundly applauded. The report of the fair committee was rendered, and a check for $210.74, representing the proceeds of the recent fair, was presented to the Council. The pipes were lighted for the last time at midnight, and the company dispersed, well-pleased with the evening's enjoyment.

THE MOST ORIGINAL WOMAN'S CLUB.

It will Test the Wealth and Generosity of Its Members.

Indiana has the most original woman's club in America. In that broad and breezy State, perhaps, there is room for such a thing. The possibility of its existence in a more narrow minded community is doubted. Its membership is small, and its main object is to increase the fascination of each and every member. Every woman who joins pledges herself to divulge the secrets of such charms and accomplishments as she may possess and, as far as possible, to impart them even cooking known by some, are to be taught to the others.

So far so good, but the difficult part is in the next group of by laws. Despite the fact that a group of young women observing serious faults in a fellow member is to labor with her until such mental or moral blemishes are removed. All peculiarities of temperament are to be closely watched and fully discussed with a view to the improvement of their owner. This is the point at which the tolerance and broad mindedness of the Indiana woman is expected to show itself.

Incidentally, the matrimonial prospects of the members are also to be looked after for. Young men are to be studied carefully, and reports on them read and discussed at the club meetings, so that no member can make the mistake of marrying in haste without a suitable knowledge of the man into whose hands she weighs her natural and acquired charms and fascinations.—From The Puritan.

Would Allow a Evasion of the Law.

Judge Roy Bean, of Langtry, Tex., declares that he is the "law west of the pecos." Lasile the quaint old man decide of him when he sat as Coroner and held an inquest on the body of a man who had met a violent death by falling from the great railway bridge that spans the Pecos river. An examination showed that the man had a revolver and forty dollars in cash in his pocket when he was killed. After swearing in a jury and looking over the effects of the dead man, Judge Bean said: "Gentlemen of the jury, there is no doubt how this man came to his death; that's all plain; but what I would like to show is why in the name of thunder he carried that gun. Now, gentlemen, it's agin the law to carry a concealed and loaded gun in the State of Texas, and jist because this gentleman took it into his head to get killed I don't mean to let him offend the peace and dignity of Texas. I fine him forty dollars."

Couldn't be Fooled.

In a Boston suburb a priest of one of the churches announced that a collection would be taken up to defray the cost of coal for heating the church. Everybody contributed but Tim—, who gave a sly wink as the plate was presented to him, but nothing else. The priest noticed Tim's dereliction, but thought that he might have left his money at home.

A similar contribution was levied the following Sunday. As before, every one gave except Tim, who looked sly. The priest wondered, and after service took his parishioner to task.

"Now, Tim," he said, "why didn't you give something if it was but little?"

"Faith, I'm only yez," said Tim.

"Tim!"

"Yes, father."

"What do you mean?"

"Oh, nothing. Just that I'm only yez; that's all."

"Tim, your words are disrespectful and require an explanation. What do you mean?"

"Oh, faith, father, a-thrying to pull the wool over me eyes, a-thrying to make us believe it's wants the money to buy coal to heat the church, an' yer riverence knows it's heated by steam!"

A MAY DAY MARRIAGE.

MISS ANNA SPIER BECOMES MRS WILLIAM HENRY TITUS.

A quiet wedding was celebrated Thursday afternoon when Miss Anna Spier, daughter of Justice and Mrs. Spier, of Washingtonville, and William Henry Titus, of the borough, were united in marriage by Rev. J. H Johnston, pastor of Grace M. E. church, at the home of the latter. The ceremony was performed at 3:30, and the bride and groom were attended by Miss Carrie Bullman, of Washingtonville, as maid of honor, and Harry Coddington, of the borough, as best man.

In the evening a reception was held at 12 Howard street, where Mr. and Mrs. Titus have taken up their residence. The home was furnished throughout, so that everything was in readiness for them to go to housekeeping. The bridal party received their guests in the parlor, and after congratulations supper was served. Throughout the evening the guests enjoyed genuine sociability.

A great many useful and pretty gifts were received by Mr. and Mrs. Titus from their friends and relatives. Nearly all of the guests were from the borough and Washingtonville and included:

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Titus, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Winans, Mr. and Mrs. George Winans, Mrs. Spier, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Will Demler, Mr. and Mrs. George Demler, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Coddington, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Billyeau, Miss Katy Billyeau, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kilmer, Miss Lizzie Elwood, Miss Minnie Smalley, Miss Jessie Coddington, Miss Bessie Bullman, Miss Carrie Bullman, Mrs. Eunice Coddington, Miss Anna Bolong, Miss Rose Bartell, Miss Nettie Beeching, Francis Bartell, Theodore Bartell, Walter Titus, Allan Coddington, George Spier, Henry Rogers, Robert Rogers, David Clark, William Acker, Samuel Titus and Burt Simpson.

WILL PEDDLE NO MORE.

TWO ZITHER DEALERS ARRESTED FOR HAVING NO LICENSE.

One of Them Used His Tongue Too Freely and Suffered For It—They Will Only Take Orders Hereafter.

The zither peddlers were in trouble again, this time on this side of the brook. They failed to heed the warning of Chief Marshal Wilson, of the borough, and make their way back to New York, but came into Union county to continue the sale of musical instruments. They evidently were not acquainted with the Plainfield police or else they might have done otherwise.

Boundsman Flynn has been on their track for several days, for they have been carrying on operations on both sides of the brook, and he has been waiting to secure the necessary evidence. Friday morning, the necessary evidence was forthcoming and Flynn started out to look for the zither peddlers. One was found having his shoes polished in a neighboring barber shop and the other was found on the street.

Both were arrested by the Boundsman and arraigned before City Judge DeMess in his office. The charge made against them was for peddling musical instruments without a license. At first they thought that they had been merely collecting orders, but then they decided to plead guilty.

There were two witnesses who were called upon to testify against them. They were DonPedro Randolph and William VanSickle, who had both been a sale consummated and the zither delivered. The prisoners were indignant at some of the testimony and spoke their mind. One was particularly heedless in his language and interrupted judge and witnesses without regard to appearances. The Judge decided that the men were guilty and fined Isadore Knox, who had been quite free with his language, $8, and George Weirnberg $5.

Knox demanded to know why he was any more guilty than his companion and was informed that he talked to much.

The fines were paid and the men started off again declaring that here after they would merely take orders for the zithers and would peddle no more in Plainfield at least.

Euchre the Amusement.

The members of the Thursday Evening Euchre Club were entertained, last Thursday by Robert M. Clark and Edward O. Clark, at their home near Washingtonville. Progressive euchre was the event of the evening. The first prizes were won by Miss Etta Krymer and Edward O. Clark, and the second prizes were taken by Miss Ada Chandler and Miss Clara Williams. The rest of the evening was devoted to refreshments, music and singing. The evening proved a delightful one. All the guests gathered at the home of Miss Krymer and were given a straw ride up to Mr. Clark's home. The return was made in the same way.

SONG OF THE MILK MAIDS

MUSICAL AND SPECTACULAR FEATURES IN VINCENT CHAPEL.

The Entertainment Arranged by the Ladies' Aid Society—Grecian and Roman Tableaux Were Given to Dazzle the Eye

"A Milk Maids' Chorus" and a series of Grecian and Roman tableaux were the principal features of the entertainment at the silver sociable given in Vincent chapel last Thursday by the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church. Of course, the sociable was a success, as all affairs that the Ladies' Aid arrange are bound to be, and the large audience that filled the chapel was very enthusiastic in its reception of the programme.

In the parlors in the rear of the chapel tables were arranged, and on them ice cream and cake were sold. The programme was so arranged that the audience was given a change to partake of the good things in the intervals between the different parts of the programme. The refreshment department was under the charge of a committee composed of Mrs. Henry A. McGee, chairman; Mrs. Garrett Q. Packer, Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. Noah W. Pike, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, Mrs. Charles W. Lyman, and Mrs. D. E. Davis. They were assisted in serving the ice cream by the "milk maids" who took part in the chorus.

The first number on the programme was the "Milk Maids' Chorus," which was given under the charge of Miss Jessie Utter, organist of the church. Those taking part in it were the Misses Etta Raybert, Cora Shepard, Eva Jenkins, Alice Jenkins, Lizzie Stafford, Edna Harris, and Lucie Palmer Davis. Dressed in bright costumes, they passed through a drill with milk pail and stool, singing a catchy chorus. The effect was very pretty and everybody enjoyed it.

The other part of the programme consisted of a series of tableaux arranged by six young women in Grecian costume. Those taking part were the Misses Edna Harris, Bertha Jenkins, Etta Raybert, Elsie Horne, Maud French and Sadie Blimm. The affair was under the charge of Miss Bertha Whitney and Mrs. J. R. Joy, to whom much credit is due for the very artistic appearance of the tableaux and the charming effect produced. Miss T. Snodgrass and J. Vincent Ritten house assisted in the management of the curtain.

The loose flowing robes of those taking part in the tableaux were colored, and, with the gay settings, the combination of colors was very striking and very pleasing. The names of the tableaux were as follows: "Music of Olden Days," "The Trio," "Fortune's Favorite," "A Roman Singer," "A Grecian Study," "They Wound Their Brows with Leaves of Kallistephanos," and "A Venetian Dream."

After the programme a social hour was enjoyed.

DOUBLE ACHIEVEMENT.

PUBLIC GOOD AND PERSONAL PLEASURE AT THE SAME TIME.

By Patronizing the Fete Champetre You Will Benefit a Movement That is Going to Make Plainfield a Better City.

Killing two birds with one stone has, from time immemorial, been considered the perfection of economics and sound business management. When the joint achievement of public good and one's own pleasure can be attained by the same act, no persuasion should be needed to induce the average mind to grasp the opportunity. The Fete Champetre to be held Saturday, June 8th, on the grounds of Mrs Pierre Mallé, country home on East Front street, offers the consummation of the two objects, public good and personal pleasure. Plainfield, with all its beauty, has no park, except in name. Washington Park in North Plainfield is merely a residential quarter, with private ground surrounding private property. In all Plainfield there is no real park, a pretty sort of a playground place that is no man's private property, but be longs to the city, and is everybody's—the poor man's even more than the rich man's.

Now that the city has the ground for such a park in the rear of the Public Library, the ladies of the Town Improvement Association ask the public, you and you, gentle reader, to attend the Fete on June 5th, which will assuredly be a pleasant thing to do, and will fill the coffers [so far a small tin box is all that has been necessary] of the treasury.

For the accommodation of those who wish to ride, stages will be run from the Y. M. C. A. building on Front street to Johnston Park; fare, 5 cents.

The price of admission will be as follows: Adults, 50c.; young people under 16 years of age, 25c.; children under 10 years of age, 10c.

THEIR DUTY TO THE SICK.

THREE PROFESSIONAL NURSES GRADUATED LAST WEEK.

Came From the Training Class at the Muhlenberg Hospital—Very Appropriate Exercises Rendered For the Occasion

The professional trained nurse is becoming more and more a recognized factor in the world, and that the skilled surgeon or physician would not be able to get along without her has been clearly evidenced. Plainfield has been doing her share in assisting in such work and the graduation exercises of three nurses from the Training School of Muhlenberg Hospital, which took place last Thursday in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church was an event of the most importance. This school has been established three years and during that time good work has been accomplished under the direction of the Board of Governors of the Hospital.

Last Thursday the chapel of the church was thronged with an interested and appreciative audience who enjoyed the somewhat novel features attendant upon such an occasion.

George H. Goddard, president of the Board of Governors, occupied the seat of honor and presided at the exercises. Behind him were seated the graduates of the Training School nine in all, and with them was Miss Moss the very efficient superintendent of the Hospital. The exercises opened with a fervent prayer by Rev. Dr. Rodman, after which President Goddard made a few remarks. He paid a compliment to the workers in the school and cited the very earnest and faithful labors of those connected with the various branches of the Hospital. Mr. Goddard then introduced Miss Lavinia French who executed with skill a difficult piano selection. Following this, Mayor Charles J. Fisk was introduced, and His Honor said in part:

"I presume the reason that I have been asked to speak tonight is not that I am a public speaker, but because I represent the city as its chief executive officer; and I am proud to be the chief executive of a city having such an institution as Muhlenberg Hospital. I met one of the Board of Governors the other day and I asked him what I was expected to say tonight and he replied that the least I said the better the people would like it, and that I must flatter from beginning to end. It is not necessary for me to tell you that man was Col. Cock. I have learned that the Hospital does not need flattery, for it is the best to be found anywhere. The Hospital needs further support and the Board of Managers are ready to make it more efficient just as soon as the people give it more support. It is a free institution open to all and the object is to make it large enough so that no one will have to be turned away. The Board of Managers desire to extend the building and add a sufficient number of wards so that all cases can be handled. I hope that this year a movement in this direction will be made.

"I congratulate you all that you have within the borders of the city such a well-governed institution as Muhlenberg Hospital."

The remarks made by the Mayor were enjoyed and heartily applauded by the audience. The presentation of the diplomas by Mr. Goddard then followed. He stated that Miss Eleanor G. Trembly was the only one of the three graduates who had completed the course. Her time was out last December. Miss Emma R. Hartranft would complete her course next month and Miss Catherine Edman's time would be finished next September. Diplomas denoting these facts were given to the graduates. Mr. Goddard said that it was impossible to have the graduates complete their course at the same time for the reason that they commenced their studies at different times. When the diplomas were presented the graduates received a round of applause. In part Mr. Goddard said: "It gives me great pleasure to present you with these diplomas. The doctors and laymen feel grateful that material made of such true steel has come to them. Your experience and hardships have fitted you to the best work and may you carve out a record of usefulness to others and honor and profit for yourselves."

At the conclusion of President Goddard's remarks Drs. Murray and B. VanD. Hedges, and E. H. Ladd, Jr., presented each of the graduates with large and beautiful bouquets of flowers. This was followed with another piano selection by Miss French which was equally enjoyable with the first production.

The next speaker was Dr. T. H Tomlinson, who addressed the graduates on behalf of the Hospital Staff. The Doctor spoke somewhat as follows:

"It affords me great pleasure to speak to you on this occasion. The class has been small and the advantage of this is noteworthy. It brings the scholar in close touch with the teacher in the transmission of knowledge. Tonight you stand on the doorsill of life ready to go forth and receive the approbation of patients and physicians, with a consciousness of knowing that your work will be well-done. A trained nurse is a recognized factor on the battle-field or in the hospital, or anywhere her administrations may bring peace and consolation to those who need it. It is the Spirit that quickens all she does and helps her.

"Be ambitious to keep posted and in the advance in your profession. I say farewell on behalf of the staff. Each of you have been faithful, conscientious and womanly. Miss Moss, your superintendent, the Board of Governors and the Hospital Auxiliary and everybody connected with the hospital have worked in harmony for the best results."

The last speaker was E. B. Clark, of the Board of Governors. He presented the graduates with a gold pin bearing the insignia of the profession they represent. It was in a circle and in the centre was a red cross, the symbol of the hospital. The pins bore the inscriptions, "Training School for Nurses, Muhlenberg Hospital, Plainfield, N. J.," while on the back was the date. Mr. Clark stated that the red cross was significant, from the fact that it admitted the wearer with the lines to administer to the sick and dying.

This concluded the exercises and President Goddard thanked all for their attendance. Nearly everyone remained to congratulate the graduates and to shake hands with the members of the school, the Superintendent, Miss Moss, and the members of the Board of Governors. Nearly all of the members of the Board were present as well as the doctors who are associated with the hospital.

An attractive feature was the appearance of the members of the Training School and the superintendent in full professional uniform.

THEATRICAL.

Du Souchet's funny farce, "The Man From Mexico," is moving along prosperously towards the celebration of its fiftieth performance at Hoyt's Theatre, New York. This is probably the first time on record that a comedy has run so far into the summer without having been produced earlier in the season. The summer runs in New York up to this time have been confined to plays that had been produced early enough to keep going to the strength of the advertisement gained by a long run; therefore, when "The Man From Mexico" was put into Hoyt's at the begining of the heated term many predicted it was an unwise venture. The fun of the comedy, however, is so thoroughly novel and spontaneous, and Willis Collier, with the rest of the excellent cast, have made so much cut of their splendid opportunities, that all these calculations have been knocked into a cocked hat. It is not an unusual record before the production of "The Man From Mexico," that Du Souchet could not possibly write an act so funny as the second act of "My Friend From India." That he has managed to do this, however, is shown by a remark made by a member of the audience the other night. After the second act he expressed the opinion that he might well go home, as he had laughed until he was tired. Nevertheless, he stayed to see the next act and discovered that there were many more laughs left in him.

HALF THE MONEY PAID

The suit brought by Fred H. Haberle against the estate of George Babcock has been settled. Mr. Haberle was one of a dozen carpenters who worked on the Babcock building, and when it was about completed demanded wages from the executors. The latter refused to pay and claimed that they were in no way liable to the carpenters who they said must look to John Chandler, the contractor, for their money.

The men employed Reed & Coddington and the executors retained Craig A. Marsh. A test suit was brought in the name of Mr. Haberle and on the trial before Justice Newcorn he won. The executors took an appeal to the court of Essex and on the trial there they were again beaten. They then took the case, which involved less than $100, to the Supreme Court.

It would have come up there in June but as the expenses were likely to exceed the amounts involved, the carpenters have accepted a settlement of fifty per cent of the face of the claims, including the case on which suit was brought, each side paying its own costs. Reed & Coddington have received a check for the amount agreed upon and the hard fought battle is ended.

BICYCLE FOR THE PASTOR

A PRACTICAL PRESENT GIVEN TO REV. A. E. MAIN.

The Gift Was a Surprise and Was Made at the Sociable Last Week, Which Was Under the Direction of the Young Men.

The young men of the Seventh-day Baptist church had their turn at entertaining, last Wednesday, when they took charge of one of the regular sociables of the Christian Endeavor Society and made all the arrangements themselves. They surprised the congregation by giving a programme that included selections by some of Plainfield's best talent, they surprised their pastor by presenting him with a new wheel, and finally surprised themselves with the general success of the attempt.

The first part of the evening was devoted to the programme. There were several selections by an instrumental trio, composed of Charles Davis, violin, Lindley L. Hillman, violin, and Walter H. Serrell, flute. Miss Jessie Utter acted as accompanist. The numbers were excellently rendered for the young men kept good time and played together.

Frank O. Bristol was new to most of the audience but his recitations were much enjoyed. His impersonations were excellent, while his original dog song was really new. He also showed that humor was not his only forte but that he could recite pathetic selections with great feeling and power.

Mr. Holmes sang twice and his baritone voice found general favor with his hearers.

After the programme, Henry M. Maxson stepped to the platform and in a neat little speech presented Rev. A. E. Main, the pastor of the church, with a new Spalding bicycle as a gift from his friends in the church. Mr. Main responded and thanked the donors of the gift. A collection was taken and then the guests were invited into the next room to partake of light refreshments.

The refreshment room was prettily decorated even if it was the work of the men. Green and white were the prevailing colors. Daisies were also used in decorating.

In the centre of the room was the table, which was also decorated. At one end of the table was Dr. Marcus Clawson pouring coffee, and at the other George B. Titsworth pouring bouillion. Both were white lace caps, white lace collars and white aprons. Their assistants who passed the refreshments were also attired in white caps and aprons, after the full fledged witnesses. They were Arthur J. Spier, Nathan E. Lewis, Robert Randolph, Asa Randolph, and Harry L. Marsh. Frank T. Clawson was chairman and head-waiter.

The coffee and bouillion were made by Frank J. Hubbard, whose practical experience on a ranch stood him in good stead.

MR. FOWLER EXPLAINS.

As Prosperous Times Approach, and Government Revenue Increases, Taxes Should be Abated From Year to Year.

Representative Charles N. Fowler, of the VIIIth New Jersey District, sends a letter explaining his Tariff Commission bill. Allusion was made a few days ago to this additional argument offered by Mr. Fowler. Permission is granted by him to use any portion of the letter desired, and the following extracts may be of interest not only to New Jersey men but to others in connection with the subject of the tariff, now under consideration in the Senate. In part Mr. Fowler says:

"Any tariff measure that will produce sufficient revenue to support the Government under present conditions will, with the natural increase of population and the greater consumption incident to prosperity, bring us in a few years a hundred millions more revenue than will be required to meet expenses. It should not be taken from the people. It would naturally lead to national extravagance.

"The taxes should be abated from year to year and taken from our schedule at a time. Hence the President, who is responsible for the proper administration of the Government, with the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, ought to have the power to suspend any portion of the taxes, and the country not be compelled to wait until the Executive, the House of Representatives and the Senate were in political conjunction, which might not happen for several years. They were not in conjunction from 1875 until 1889.

"The duty of the Commission to investigate all Federal taxation and domestic and foreign conditions, and annually recommend changes called for legislation, will make a most valuable adjunct to a wise administration of our National affairs. Its establishment cannot do any harm, while it may prove the greatest possible blessing to the American people in securing stability to our varied business interests and continued and equal prosperity to all sections of our common country."

AGAINST THE SUSPECTS.

EVIDENCE LOOKING TO DETERMINATION OF SCOTCH PLAINS BURGLARS.

The Authorities Believe That They Were on the Right Track When Clark and Simmons Were Arrested and Held in Jail.

A few interesting bits of evidence have come to light in connection with the series of burglaries at Scotch Plains, last Wednesday, which tend to strengthen the belief of the detectives that Clark and Simmons, the two men who were committed to jail yesterday, are directly implicated in the robberies.

The officers are now making every effort to discover the identity of the two suspicious looking men who were loitering around the village on Tuesday in company with Clark and Simmons. The two were continually together, during the day and evening, and acted like pals. These two unknown men, who are supposed to have committed the burglaries, have not been seen in the town since Tuesday evening. Two men answering to their description were seen in Sprinfield at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning, but quickly disappeared. The theory of the detectives is that Clark and Simmons were not drunk on Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, as they claim to have been, but that they were acting their part in order to attract the attention to themselves while their pals were rifling the houses. It is thought that Clark and Simmons, when captured on the Washington Valley road, were on their way to join the other two men in whose possession the booty probably is.

Shortly before their capture by the constables the two suspects visited the house of Lofts Hollingsworth and Mr. Walsh, on the mountain road, and frightened the woman who were at home. Mrs. Walsh was out visiting a neighbor and on her return home found Clark standing in her kitchen. She asked him to leave, which he did without saying anything more.

To the detectives Clark and Simmons admitted having passed some time during Tuesday evening in a barn on Park avenue, leased by Fred Clark. A number of burned matches were found there of a peculiar manufacture and different in shape from any matches to be had in the vicinity of Scotch Plains. These were compared with the burned match-stems left by the burglars in the house of George Randolph, on Grand street. They were found to be of the same manufacture.

Both men are old jail birds, especially Clark who was in State prison, until recently, "doing time" for his share in the robbery of Connor's Hotel, at Garwood.

Miss Lizzie Nichols, daughter of George E. Nichols, one of the victims of the Scotch Plains robberies, seems to be the only one who was able to get a good look at the burglar. Miss Nichols, when awakened by the noise of the burglar's footsteps in her room, called and asked:

"Is that you pa?"

The burglar put his hand up to his face and mumbled something which could not be understood and started to back out of the room.

Miss Nichols, still thinking it was her father, asked if he was sick.

The burglar started to go down stairs, turning up his coat collar so as to conceal his features.

Miss Nichols then ran to her father's room and found him sleeping peacefully.

The Judge jumped from the bed, picked up his revolver and went down stairs only to find that the burglar had left by the open window through which he had made his entrance.

Judge Clark's action in connection with the two suspects meets with the approval of the public in general. County Detective Keron searched them at Emerys, but found nothing of a suspicious character about their person, but upon their arrival at the county jail they were again searched and a razor was found attached to a string around Simmon's neck.

Of course there was the usual talk last night of "what will be done for protection?" Many want a special officer appointed, or, if the people have got to protect themselves, then a vigilance committee.

THREW HIS CRUTCH AWAY.

A tramp, who to all appearances was scarcely able to walk, even with the aid of a crutch which he carried, asked for aid in a Park street house in Westfield Thursday afternoon. As he was leaving the yard he was unexpectedly confronted by a huge dog. In his haste to get away he threw the crutch at the dog and ran like a sprinter. In a few moments he returned for the crutch, but the dog would not let him touch it, and when the woman of the house refused to call the dog off the tramp became abusive.

When an officer was sent for the vagrant ran to the woods, and as he went gathered some clothes from the clothesline in a neighbor's yard, declaring that he would get even for the crutch. The officers hunted for the fellow for two hours, but could not find him.

RIGHTS OF VETERANS IN OFFICE.

The courts are likely to be called upon to place a construction upon a law passed by the present Legislature in the interest of veterans of the war. This law goes a great deal further than the act of 1899, which the Court of Errors a few days ago declared to be constitutional. The act of 1899 only prohibited the removal from county and municipal offices except for cause of veterans holding positions without fixed terms The act of 1897 provides against the removal without cause from any public department or public works in the State or in any county, city, town or village of any veteran who is not a private secretary, a deputy to the head of a department, or who is not holding a position of confidential relations. It provides that veterans shall be given the preference for appointment or promotion to positions, if they possess the necessary qualifications. Age is not to serve as a barrier where the veteran has the capacity to fill the position to which he aspires. This latter provision may be held to set aside, so far as veterans are concerned, the rule now in vogue in the different fire and police departments that persons to be appointed must be under a certain age. Lawyers are not willing to give off hand opinions on the law, but they all agree that is very sweeping in its language

BOROUGH GOVERNMENT.

The many boroughs of the State formed under the several laws since declared by the courts to be unconstitutional, are apparently not yet out of the woods so far as their legality goes, notwithstanding that the act of 1896 sought to give a legal existence to those boroughs that confessedly at that time were only de-facto municipalities. The Court of Errors and Appeals in a decision rendered a few days ago in a Belmar case, refused to pass upon the constitutionality of the act of 1896, and referred the case back to the Supreme Court for a decision on this point. If the act of 1896 should be declared unconstitutional the scores of boroughs formed under the acts of 1890 and 1891 and the act for the formation of seaside boroughs would be as badly off as ever. Their only hope then would be in taking refuge under the general borough act of 1897. Good lawyers who have given the matter study, say that the act 1897 is not so open to attack on a question of constitutionality as is the act of 1896, and that it is probable that legislation has at last been enacted which will at last convert these de-facto boroughs into boroughs with an unquestionable legal existence.

PEACE MUST BE PRESERVED.

It is said that the taxpayers of Somerset county are objecting to the number of prisoners confined in the county jail. They say that many persons who are arrested and sent to the county seat should be sent there, as the charges are insufficient to hold them.—Plainfield Press.

But The Press should remember that it is for the Grand Jury and not the Justices of the Peace to decide whether the charges against a prisoner are sufficient to warrant indictment and trial. The peace must be preserved and the safety of the community demands that all due precaution be taken. And at all events few lawabiding and peaceable citizens will object to paying their share toward keeping the other class in jail—manifestly the proper place for offenders against the peace—and it is certainly seldom that others than such are committed by any Justice.—Bound Brook Democrat.

BICYCLE UNDER CANADIAN BAN.

In strange contrast to the rest of the country the bicycle seems to be in bad odor in Montreal, Canada. A tax of two dollars is levied on every wheel ridden within the city limits, wheelmen are forbidden to ride past street corners at a speed exceeding that of a horse walking, and have been debarred from the most frequented park and summer resorts of the city. And now the Turnpike Trust gives notice of application to the Provincial Legislature for power to levy toll on all bicyclists using any of the country roads leading out of the city. At this rate the bicycle may yet be replaced by the horse in Montreal.

NEWSPAPER KICKERS.

An observing contemporary says it is worth remembering that no paper is printed for one person, any more than a hotel is built especially for one guest. People who become displeased with something they find in a newspaper, should remember that the very thing that displeases them is often the very thing that pleases somebody who is just as important as they are.

FOR A FRESH AIR FUND

Successful Sale Conducted by Little Children.

The success attending the ice cream sale in aid of The Tribune Fresh Air Fund, which was held last Saturday afternoon from 3 until 6 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Hallock, 39 Willow avenue, was most gratifying to Leslie W. Hallock, John Valiant and Ralph E. Hallock, the originators of the affair. The large and spacious lawn surrounding the house was used to good advantage and there was on sale in addition to the ice cream, a good assortment of candies and cake, while the sale of lemonade and popcorn was good.

There were about 125 people present who succeeded in putting the young men out of business, for they purchased everything on sale, much to the enjoyment and pleasure of the boys. The latter managed the sale and they were assisted by Miss Bessie Vallant at the lemonade table, and Miss Sadie Howell at the candy table, while Reggie Roome was among the most enthusiastic workers. In all there was about 200 tickets disposed of and the sale will net about $25 for the fresh air fund. Those who assisted in donating cake, ice cream and candy were: Mrs. J. P. Northrop, Mrs. Howard Johnson, Mrs. H. Howell, Miss Lillian Fritts and Mrs. Robinson Pound.

WORK OF THE BOYS' CLUB.

A Creditable Exhibition Made to Visitors Last Saturday.

Few people realize the practical work that is daily being done at the Boys' Club. The annual exhibition of the club, held in the clubhouse on Sycamore street Saturday evening gave some idea of the advantages offered to the boys of the city. A number of the boys were at work in the different departments, while a very creditable exhibition of the work already done was shown.

First there was shown the drawing of some portion of machinery or iron work. The drawing was made by the boys and also the tracing of it and the accompanying blue print. The blue print was given to the boys in the carpentering department who made a pattern, which was given to the boys in the moulding room and a regular casting made, ready for its charge of molten iron. As the handling of molten metal is as yet beyond the resources of the club, plaster of Paris is used instead. The complete series of drawings, patterns and castings were shown. Samples of carpenter work also attracted attention.

All the instruction is given by Olaf Sangstad, whose abilities make him just the man for the place. The exhibition was excellent and received well deserved praise.

Miss Ida Cottrell, of Freehold, is visiting Miss Emma Stram, of Wilson avenue.

HONORED DEAD HEROES.

PATRIOTIC MEMORIAL DAY SERVICES HELD MONDAY.

The inclemency of the weather Monday morning did not in the least dampen the enthusiasm of those who took part in the Memorial Day exercises under the auspices of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and in accordance with the custom the day was appropriately observed. Early in the morning the comrades assembled at headquarters and prepared for the day's exercises. At 9:30 the line of march was formed for the parade, and considering the condition of the weather it was an excellent parade. Those who participated were obliged to walk on the sidewalk as the streets were too muddy. Grand Marshal L. E. Livermore was in charge, and he made it a point to see that the programme was carried out on schedule time. The line of march as previously published was followed, and along the line there were a number of attractive decorations which stirred the hearts of the veterans. The line of march included all of the cemeteries, and at each one the comrades stopped long enough to decorate the graves of the dead soldiers. At Evergreen cemetery a short service was held over the grave of the late Isaac Brokaw, who was a prominent member of the G. A. R. The service was conducted by Commander McVoy assisted by Rev. L. E. Livermore and other comrades.

In addition to the comrades in the line of march there was a good sized delegation of Sons of Veterans and school children, while the Plainfield Cornet Band discoursed appropriate music at intervals. After several cemeteries had been visited the Sons of Veterans withdrew and went to Scotch Plains where interesting services were held over the grave of the late John Hand, after whom the camp is named.

The Sons of Veterans were met at the Plains by members of the fire department and Jr. O. U. A. M., who assisted them in the celebration at the latter place. At the grave an address along the line of patriotism and devotion was delivered by Rev. Dr. Parks, former pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church. The address was enjoyed by everyone who heard it. The other exercises were similar to those held last year and they were in charge of Captain H. C. McVoy. Previous to the close of the exercises the firing squad fired three volleys over the grave. The visitors were then escorted through the town to the stages which were in waiting to bring them to Plainfield.

At 2 o'clock the comrades and Sons of Veterans together with the school children assembled and marched to Music Hall where exercises of an interesting nature were held. The hall was filled to overflowing with a patriotic audience. The stage was occupied with the children all dressed in white, with red, white and blue caps. Each one represented a state and later in the afternoon each one recited a verse appropriate to the state represented.

The exercises were opened with a selection by the band after which Rev. Dr. Snodgrass offered prayer. Adjutant E. C. Morse, of Post No. 73, then read the National and Department orders of the G. A. R.

This was followed with a few words by Commander McVoy who called on the comrades to salute the dead. Another selection by the band and a selection by the chorus of children under the direction of H. J. Martin as leader and Miss Nash, as pianist, was rendered.

Adjutant Morse then read an extract of President Lincoln's famous Gettysburg address which was delivered November 19, 1863. Immediately afterward the officers of the Post took an interesting part. Senior Vice Charles Stephens represented the navy; Junior Vice William Hand the army; Officer of the Day William C. Smith had a few words to say regarding peace, while Chaplain John Goodwin spoke of victory after which he offered prayer. Commander McVoy had his part and it was well given as was also the other parts.

At this time the address of the afternoon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Lowry. The speaker said that nowadays it looked as though the golf stick threatened to knock out Memorial Day and the memories of the war. When he was a boy, Dr. Lowry said, they used to celebrate July 4th, but now it is not thought much of by those who should see that the day is properly observed. In the days of old everyone was brimful of enthusiasm, now it is hard to get up any sort of a celebration. So with Memorial Day, it is not what it used to be when it was instituted by Gen. Logan. The speaker dwelt on the fact that in 1861 it was the best men the country had that enlisted to save the Nation and to preserve it from destruction. While the men in blue were fighting on the battlefield he was doing his part in the pulpit and on the platform. The doctor related the story of how the Prince of Wales came to this country just before the war broke out and how the First Division, New York Regiments, refused to turn out and act as an escort, but when the call came for men to go to the front and fight for the country they were very quick to respond.

The war, he said, was the crisis of elements which has been simmering for years and it was no child's play. There were many partisan forces and these all worked against the soldier to his own destruction. It was not the politicians that secured the victory, but a hard and desperate struggle on the part of loyal, patriotic men. Washington adopted the idea of liberty, and ever since there has been a fight to maintain it.

Dr. Lowry related many personal incidents during his address which were greatly enjoyed by all, and at the end his remarks were given a hearty round of applause, and he was presenten with a beautiful bouquet of flowers by the members of the Woman's Relief Corps.

After a selection by the chorus of children a recitation was given by Miss Try Matrox, which was followed with an act entitled "Decorating the Graves of the Unknown Dead." On the stage was an improvised grave beside of which stood Charles Stephens representing the veteran with one arm, and while Retta Nash sang a solo the grave was decorated by Gene Knowland and Frank Weigmann. In this part Mrs. Clarence Leland repre sented the Daughter of Vete an, H. S. Thatcher the Son of Veteran, while Mr. Matrox took the part of a Soldier dade. The last number on the programme was a tableau arranged by W R Mattox entitled "America." Then there were recitations from forty girls representing each State in the Union In this Mrs. Summers acted the part of Liberty, Charles Stephens the wounded soldier, Raymond McVoy the Son of Veteran. Miss Sadie Mattox the Daughter of a Regiment and I. Stites a sailor. All were arranged in an attractive and picturesque manner and the turning of different colored lights made a pretty effect. The scene closed with the singing of America in which all took part. Miss Nash was the efficient accompanist, and she was also presented with a large bouquet of flowers.

This concluded the exercises, and as the band played a patriotic air the assembled audience gradually left the hall. all feeling as though they had passed a most instructive and profitable time.

Wrecked His Wheel, Saved Himself.

William Johnson, the colo red janitor at the Seminary, met with an accident Saturday evening that resulted in the wrecking of his wheel and a very narrow escape for himself. He was riding down West Seventh street, near Central avenue, on the left hand side of the street, when he suddenly encountered a carriage coming in the opposite direction. Johnson crashed into the horse but escaped by throwing himself off the wheel into the gutter. The horse trampled on the wheel and wrecked it. The driver of the carriage was evidently afraid that he was to blame for he stopped to give his name, and afterwards drove away as fast as possible.

For More School Room.

At a meeting of the Washington ville school trustees on Friday evening of last week, three propositions were summitted to provide increased room for the present overcrowded building. One was to build an addition to the present building and two others were presented for buying a joining ground and erecting a new schoolhouse, either one or two stories high, as the voters in the school district may decide at a meeting to be held on the evening of June 15th.

COMRADES REMEMBERED

MEMORIAL DAY FITTINGLY OBSERVED IN WESTFIELD.

Patriotic Addresses in the Churches—Flags Were at Half-Mast and Veterans' Graves Were Decorated by the G. A. R.

Memorial Day in Westfield began on Sunday evening with the holding of patriotic services in the churches. Rev. N. W. Cadwell gave a talk on "The Dead Heroes of the War" in the Presbyterian church, and National airs and patriotic songs were rendered by the large chorus choir. In the Methodist church there was a patriotic young people's meeting, Sunday evening, under the auspices of the Epworth League. The topic was "God and Home and Native Land." The rain of Sunday night and yesterday morning interfered somewhat with the events of Memorial Day proper. The parade of the G. A. R. veterans to Fairview cemetery, at 10 o'clock a. m., under escort of the Jr. O. U. A. M., did not take place, much to the disappointment of a fair-sized crowd who gathered to witness the patriotic spectacle. The dead were not unremembered, however. Comrades Harden, Reese, Fink and Mitchell drove in a carriage to Fairview and to the old Presbyterian cemetery and there placed flowers and flags upon the graves of twenty-two soldiers. Two handsome flags that were placed upon the graves of D.F. Staples and W. H. Miller, in Fairview, were the gift of U. S. Grant Post, 227, G. A. R., of Brooklyn. Throughout the town flags were displayed at half mast. At the Children's Country Home a successful lawn festival was held from 2 until 6 o'clock. Tables were placed at convenient places upon the lawn, and decorations of flags and lanterns were arranged. The stages which run from Westfield post-office every twenty minutes were heavily laden with passengers. The good things went off rapidly, and a comfortable sum was realized for the home.

To Consider Church Enlargement.

A congregational meeting of Trinity Reformed church, for discussing the subject of raising the present church edifice and providing a commodious Sunday-school room under the church nearly even with the ground, has been called for Wednesday evening, June 9th, at which time a full and free discussion of the contemplated improvement will be entered into and a vote of the congregation will be taken on the subject. It seems almost certain that the project will be voted for by the congregation, as the needs for a larger Sunday-school are very necessary to meet the present crowded room.

A Family Reunion.

The Fenner family living in this locality held a reunion at Weston, Somerset county, Monday. There were present about 150 people, nearly all of whom were relatives. The day was passed in renewing family acquaintances and not the least pleasing was the very fine dinner served at noon. Among those present from Plainfield were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Van Middlesworth, Mrs. Horace J. Martin and family and Miss Ella Fenner.

And There Was Light.

On Saturday night last about forty visitors met at Lincoln depot, the occasion being the turning on of the electric lights in the new town for the first time, which was performed by J. B. Cleavers, young son and daughter, and Mrs. L. D. Drake. The Somerset county telephone company also connected Lincoln with Bound Brook for the first time on this night.

A. H. Patter, with E. C. Atkins & Co., Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "I have never before given a testimonial in my life. But I will say that for three years we have never been without Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in the house, and my wife would as soon think of being without flour as a bottle of this Remedy in the summer season. We have used it with all three of our children and it has never failed to cure—not simply stop pain, but cure absolutely. It is all right, and anyone who tries it will find it so." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

A 17-YEAR OLD BRIDE.

MAY SHARKEY MARRIED WITHOUT HER PARENTS' KNOWLEDGE.

The Nuptial Knot was Tied Last Thursday Night, But the Parents Did Not Know of It Till Monday.

A hard-working mother, broken-hearted at the desertion of her daughter, for whose future she had hoped and planned much, has made serious charges against the alleged husband of her daughter. May Sharkey has been living with her parents, Patrick and Mary Sharkey, at 23 Harmony street, until Saturday night, when she mysteriously disappeared and was not seen until late Monday afternoon, when the anxious mother found the missing child walking with an Italian on the outskirts of the borough. Ere the mother could reach her daughter the Italian stepped between them and commanded Mrs. Sharkey to leave her daughter alone as she was now his wife.

Mr. Sharkey is employed at Sharkey's grocery, on Richmond street, as a driver. Mrs. Sharkey works at Mc Vey's hotel on North avenue. They claim that their daughter is only a few months over seventeen years of age. May has always been brought up as carefully as the parents' circumstances permitted. She was never asked to work, but father and mother toiled unceasingly to provide her with such of the comforts of life as they could afford. They wished her to hold up her head with the best in the country, the mother said.

A year ago May made the acquaintance of a young Italian known as Sullivan. Mr. and Mrs. Sharkey objected to the young man and told their daughter that she must have nothing to do with him. May promised. Circumstances go to prove, however, that she did not keep her word. She told her mother that she spoke to him no more and Mrs. Sharkey did not worry.

Last Thursday there was a clandestine meeting and May and her Italian lover went to some minister or justice of the peace and were married.

Mrs. Sharkey claims that her daughter did not go of her own free will, but that the villainous foreigner threatened to kill her if she did not marry him at once, and that fear, not love, was the cause of the untimely marriage. Mrs. Sharkey told a Press reporter this morning that the Italian drew a knife on her daughter and threatened to cut her throat at once if she made any objection to being married.

Friday night, May returned home but said nothing of the marriage. Saturday night, May offered to go down town for her mother who was tired after a hard day's work and make the necessary purchases for Sunday. May left the house at 9:45 o'clock while her parents retired. She went down town and made the purchases for they were in the house the next morning, but May was not there and could not be found.

Sunday morning Sharkey, Mrs. Sharkey hunted over the borough. She knew that her daughter had once been subject to fainting spells and she feared that she had met with an accident had been robbed or murdered, or, perhaps, abducted.

A friend told her, late in the afternoon, that she had seen May walking with the Italian and directed Mrs. Sharkey to the spot. Thither the anxious mother hurried to find her daughter in company with the man whom she had been forbidden to associate with. Sullivan, Mrs. Sharkey claims, threatened to kill her if she touched him or his lawfully wedded wife and ordered her away with scornful tone.

Mrs. Sharkey has taken no action to recover her daughter as yet but she claims that the marriage was illegal for the reason that her daughter was forced to the marriage by threats of personal violence.

Horse Strayed Away.

A large bay horse attached to an open-top buggy was found on Park avenue, last Monday, by Herbert Martin, of Sandford avenue, and William Lorton, of New Market. There was no one in charge and the finders drove the horse to Plainfield and turned it over to Patrolman Saffron. The horse was stabled at Cole's. J.B. Guttridge, of Netherwood, lost a horse and buggy, answering to that description, is thought. He lent it to a friend, who drove to Campbell's clubhouse and forgot to tie the horse.

—The continued cold nights have greatly retarded the growth of early trenku South Jersey. MEMORIAL DAY SERMONS.

APPROPRIATE SERVICES CONDUCTED IN LOCAL CHURCHES.

G. A. R., Woman's Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans Hear a Patriotic Discourse by Rev. J. W. Richardson in His Church.

It may be truly said that the memorial service held at the Park Avenue Baptist church last Sunday evening was one of the best in the history of the G. A. R. of this city. Nearly every member of the latter organization, the Woman's Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans, were present in a body and the sight was an impressive one. The church was decorated substantially for the occasion.

Special music was rendered by the church choir and this added not a little to the interest in the service. A very impressive part of the service was that portion arranged and carried out by the veterans. Commander McVoy, assisted by Charles Stephens, Wm. Hand, E. C. Morse, John Goodwin and Past Commanders Collier and Coriell, participated in this service. Each of the above were given a part to repeat, after which the last two named veterans assembled about the platform and placed beautiful wreaths thereon. The words spoken by each composed a story and the crowning point was grand.

After these exercises Rev. J. W. Richardson, the pastor, delivered a powerful patriotic sermon. His text was taken from the 22d verse of the 11th chapter of Hebrews: "By faith, Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones." From the above text the speaker drew many strong lessons applicable to the occasion. He then traced the history of the country from the formation of the government and paid especial attention to the part which the Union soldiers took in the preservation of the country. The different battles in which the Union army played an important part were described in a vivid manner, and at times the audience was almost inclined to applaud. Especially was this true of the veterans.

Mr. Richardson paid the veterans many compliments and praised their deeds in helping to save the Union, which was and is so dear to the heart of every loyal American. He pictured the life of a soldier in the prisons of the south, and told of the many hardships which they were obliged to pass through.

At the close Mr. Richardson presented several scriptural truths, which were brought very strongly to the heart of each one. A novel and interesting feature clored the service when Comrade Berg sounded taps. The benediction was pronounced by the pastor.

Memorial Day was very pleasantly observed at the Congregational church on Sunday morning. The desk was draped with a handsome American flags, patriotic hymns were sung, and the pastor, Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, preached a stirring Memorial Day sermon. He spoke especially of the fine record of the soldiers of New Jersey; how they quickly responded to the first call for men, sending to Washington the first thoroughly organized and equipped troops which arrived there, and how, when later appeals came, they never slackened in their devotion, but sent more than the required number of men. He told how nobly they sustained the honor of their State on the field of battle, and how, when Lee entered Pennsylvania, many whose time of service had expired turned about and returned to active duty.

The latter part of the sermon referred to the duties that lie before the citizens of New Jersey in these days of peace; the no less noble and patriotic duties which all owe to God, the Church, and the commonwealth.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. V., and one of the most widely known men in the state was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing could be done for me and my friends were fully convinced that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June 1894, Mr. Evens, then salesman fo the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured." Bicycle a Finger Ginsher.

Louis Drake, aged seventeen years, living at the corner of West Third street and Grant avenue, was cleaning his wheel Monday morning preparatory to taking a ride, when his hand caught in one of the wheels with the result of crushing two fingers. The young man went to the hospital and Dr. Long found it necessary to amputate one of the fingers.

DECORATION DAY

MAY 30TH 1897

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

By the flow of the inland river,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of grave grass quiver
Asleep are the ranks of the dead;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day—
Under the one, the Blue;
Under the other, the Gray.

These in the robings of glory,
Those in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle-blood gory,
In the dusk of eternity meet;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the laurel, the Blue;
Under the willow, the Gray.

From the silence of sorrowful hours
The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers,
Alike for the friend and the foe;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the roses, the Blue;
Under the lilies, the Gray.

So with an equal splendor
The morning sun-rays fall,
With a touch, impartially tender,
On the blossoms blooming for all;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Broidering with gold, the Blue;
Mellowed with gold, the Gray.

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,
The generous deed was done;
In the storm of the years that are fading,
No braver battle was won;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the blossoms, the Blue;
Under the garlands, the Gray.

THE PEACE COMMISSION.

President Lincoln's Preliminary Terms Precluded Further Negotiations.

From Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant.

On the last of January, 1865, peace commissioners from the so-called Confederate States presented themselves on our lines around Petersburg, and were immediately conducted to my headquarters at City Point. They proved to be Alexander H. Stevens, Vice-President of the Confederacy; Judge Campbell, Assistant Secretary of War, and R. M. T. Hunter, formerly United States Senator and then a member of the Confederate Senate.

It was about dark when they reached my headquarters, and I at once conducted them to the steamer Mary Martin, a Hudson River boat which was very comfortably fitted up for the use of passengers. I at once communicated by telegraph with Washington and informed the Secretary of War and the President of the arrival of these commissioners and that their object was to negotiate terms of peace between the United States and, as they termed it, the Confederate Government. I was instructed to retain them at City Point, until the President, or someone whom he would designate, should come to meet them. They remained several days as guests on board the boat. I saw them quite frequently, though I have no recollection of having had any conversation whatever with them on the subject of their mission. It was something I had nothing to do with, and I therefore did not wish to express my views on the subject. For my own part I never had admitted, and never was ready to admit, that they were the representatives of a government. There had been too great a waste of blood and treasure to concede anything of the kind. As long as they remained there, however, our relations were pleasant and I found them all very agreeable gentlemen. I directed the captain to furnish them with the best the boat afforded, and to administer to their comfort in every way possible. No guard was placed over them and no restriction was put upon their movements; nor was there any pledge asked that they would not abuse the privileges extended to them. They were permitted to leave the boat when they felt like it, and they did so, coming up on the bank and visiting me at my headquarters.

I had never met either of these gentlemen before the war, but knew them well by reputation and through their public services, and I had been a particular admirer of Mr. Stephens.

After a few days, about the 2d of February, I received a dispatch from Washington, directing me to send the commissioners to Hampton Roads to meet the President and a member of the Cabinet. Mr. Lincoln met them there and had an interview of short duration. It was not a great while after they met that the President visited me at City Point. He spoke of his having met the commissioners, and told them that there would be no use in entering into any negotiations unless they would recognize, first: that the Union as a whole must be forever preserved, and second, that slavery must be abolished. If they were willing to concede these two points, then he was ready to enter into negotiations and was almost willing to hand them a blank sheet of paper with his signature attached for them to fill in the terms upon which they were willing to live with us in the Union and be one people. He always showed a generous and kindly spirit toward the Southern people, and I never heard him abuse an enemy. Some of the cruel things said about President Lincoln, particularly in the North, used to pierce him to the heart; but never in my presence did he evince a revengeful disposition—and I saw a great deal of him at City Point, for he seemed glad to get away from the cares and anxieties of the capital.

THE GRAND REVIEW.

General Grant's Modest Description of the Last Review.

"On the 18th of May orders were issued by the Adjutant-General for a grand review by the President and his Cabinet of Sherman's and Meade's armies. The review commenced on the 23d and lasted two days. Meade's army occupied over six hours of the first day in passing the grand stand which had been erected in front of the President's house. Sherman witnessed this review from the grand stand which was occupied by the President and his Cabinet. Here he showed his resentment for the cruel and harsh treatment that had unnecessarily been inflicted upon him by the Secretary of War, by refusing to take his extended hand.

"Sherman's troops had been in camp on the south side of the Potomac. During the night of the 23d he crossed over and bivouacked not far from the Capitol. Promptly at 10 o'clock on the morning of the 24th his troops commenced to pass in review. Sherman's army made a different appearance from that of the Army of the Potomac.

M'LEAN'S HOUSE, APPOMATTOX.
In which Gen. Lee met Gen. Grant and signed the terms of surrender written by the latter.

"The latter had been operating where they received directly from the North full supplies of food and clothing regularly. The review of this army therefore was the review of a body of 65,000 well-drilled, well-disciplined and orderly soldiers, inured to hardship and fit for any duty, but without the experience of gathering their own food and supplies in an enemy's country, and of being ever on the watch.

"Sherman's army was not so well dressed as the Army of the Potomac, but their marching could not be excelled. They gave the appearance of men who had been thoroughly drilled to endure hardships, either by long and continued marches or through exposure to any climate, without the ordinary shelter of a camp. They exhibited also some of the order of marching through Georgia where the "sweet potatoes sprung up from the ground" as Sherman's army went marching through. In the rear of a company there would be a captured horse or mule loaded with small cooking utensils, captured chickens and other food necessary for the use of the men. Negro families who had followed the army would sometimes come along in the rear of a company with three or four children packed upon a single mule, and the mother leading it.

"The sight was varied and grand. Nearly all day for two consecutive days, from the Capitol to the Treasury Building, could be seen a mass of orderly soldiery marching in columns of companies. The national flag was flying from almost every house and store; the windows were filled with spectators; the doorsteps and sidewalks were crowded with colored people and poor whites who did not succeed in securing better quarters from which to get a view of the grand armies.

"The city was about as full of strangers who had come to see the sights as it usually is on inauguration day when a new President takes his seat."—From "Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant."

THE ARMY CROSSING THE JAMES.

The work of laying the great pontoon bridge across the James river began at four o'clock one afternoon in June and was finished before midnight. The bridge was 2,100 feet in length, and required one hundred and one pontoons. Gen. Horace Porter in an article in Century draws the picture of the memorable incident:

As the general-in-chief stood upon the bluff on the north bank of the river on the morning of June 15, watching with unusual interest the busy scene spread out before him, it presented a sight which had never been equalled even in his experience in all the varied phases of warfare. His cigar had been thrown away, his hands were clasped behind him, and he seemed lost in the contemplation of the spectacle. The great bridge was the scene of a continuous movement of infantry columns, batteries of artillery, and wagon trains. The approaches to the river on both banks were covered with masses of troops moving briskly to their positions or waiting patiently their turn to cross. At the two improvised ferries steamboats were gliding back and forth with the regularity of weaver's shuttles. A fleet of transports covered the surface of the water below the bridge, and gunboats floated lazily upon the stream, guarding the river above. Drums were beating the march, bands were playing stirring quicksteps, the distant booming of cannon on Warren's front showed that he and the enemy were still exchanging compliments; and mingled with these sounds were the cheers of the sailors, the shouting of the troops, the rumbling of wheels, and the shrieks of steam whistles. The bright sun, shining through a clear sky upon the scene, cast its sheen upon the water, was reflected from the burnished gun barrels and glittering cannon, and brought out with increased brilliancy the gay colors of the waving banners. The calmly flowing river reflected the blue of the heavens, and mirrored on its surface the beauties of nature that bordered it. The rich green was standing high in the surrounding fields. The harvest was almost ripe, but the harvesters had fled. The ruin of desolation had recoiled before the science of destruction; and in looking from the growing crops to the marching columns, the gentle smile of peace contrasted strangely with the frown of war. It was a matchless pageant that could not fail to inspire all beholders with the grandeur of achievement and the majesty of military power. The man whose genius had conceived and whose skill had executed this masterly movement stood watching the spectacle in profound silence.

FALL OF RICHMOND.

THE FORTY DAYS FIGHT WHICH ENDED AT APPOMATTOX.

Greatest of All Campaigns, in Which Both Armies Fought With a Fury Born of the Knowledge That One Came or the Other Must Find Defeat.

With the spring of 1864 the armies were set in motion across half a continent, and the iron leaders grasped the confederacy by the throat. Within a year afterward it had yielded up the ghost.

In the advance, the Army of the James, under Butler, was the left flank; the Army of the Potomac, under Grant, with Meade as the commanding general, was the center, and the Armies of the Ohio, the Cumberland and the Tennessee, under Sherman, were the right wing. Sherman was to sweep down from Chattanooga into Georgia, and carry the war into sections where a Yankee force had never penetrated. Butler was to operate in conjunction with the Army of the Potomac toward Richmond from the sea coast. Grant, marching southward, was to drive Lee backward toward Richmond and compel him to fight wherever he found him. Sigel, with a cavalry corps, was to devastate the Shenandoah Valley, burning the granary of Southern armies and creating a diversion in the rear of the Army of Northern Virginia.

Closing In.

It was literally a ring of fire that was drawn about the confederacy, when at last the northern columns got under way. Sherman led out from Tennessee 60,000 men, the flower of the Western armies. His campaign against Johnston through Georgia and his march to the sea gave to the literature of the rebellion its most romantic episode. When he cut the wires at Atlanta, abandoned his communications and his supplies, and disappeared from view he added a new science to the chapter of warfare. A month afterward Tecumseh and his "bummers" appeared before Savannah and the city, with its stores of cotton and provisions fell into its hands, "a Christmas present to the North," as he telegraphed President Lincoln. Then he swept up the coast toward the rear of Lee's army, having demonstrated, as he said afterward, that the confederacy was a "hollow shell," through which a hostile army could march anywhere.

Sigel was worsted in the Shenandoah Valley. Not until Grant had put Sheridan over his cavalry did it become the instrument of victories. But then it flashed back of Lee's army, tore up his railroad communications, and completed the campaign of 1864 by sending Jubal Early, defeated in every engagement, whirling out of the valley of the Shenandoah. His decisive victories were potential in the Presidential elections of November.

With 130,000 men Grant himself crossed the Rapidan and plunged into the Wilderness. He found Lee waiting for him there with 70,000 men. For forty days his army wandered in a grimmer wilderness than that through which the freed Israelites passed. Every day there was a battle. Every night there was an advance. Step by step Lee was forced back from one intrenched position to another, until his army retired inside its last line of fortifications, and the long siege of Petersburg was begun. Thenceforth Lee never emerged from his intrenchments until that forlorn flight westward that ended at Appomattox Court House.

Forty Days' Fight.

The forty days' battles, bloody beyond description, contested amid the gloom of the forest and the miasma of the swamps, made the pulse of the world stand still with horror. Grant lost 55,000 men—killed, wounded and missing. Lee had fought from behind breastworks, on ground of his own choosing, and had retired always on interior lines. His losses were less, but they were too great for the waning confederacy ever to restore. The enlistments made to replace them, as Butler sententiously remarked, "robbed the cradle and the grave."

The fifth advance upon Richmond, with such bloody and indecisive incidents as the two days' fighting in the Wilderness proper, and the engagements at Spottsylvania Court House, on the North Anna, and at Cold Harbor, was successful because it ended with the Federal lines drawn about Petersburg instead of with a confederate army menacing Washington, and because the Army of Northern Virginia was never able to take the field again after the battering it had received while contesting that advance. And thus the year 1864 came to a close with Grant and Lee facing each other over the earthworks at Petersburg.

When the spring of 1865 permitted the renewal of hostilities, the Army of the Potomac, long baffled by the generalship of its opponent, came into its own. On March 29 Grant ordered a forward movement, and flung Sheridan at Five Forks. The war was over in eleven days. Three days after the movement began, Petersburg was evacuated. Richmond fell the next day, and Lee hurried southward by forced marches, in the hope of joining Johnston in North Carolina, and crushing Sherman before Grant came up. No braver or more pathetic picture than his flight presented has been set on an American background. Like a hunted fox the confederate turned hither and thither. His men, famished by insufficient rations, worn out by marching night and day, were dropping off by thousands and returning to their homes. His foragers fell into the enemy's hands or returned without food from the devastated country. When the half-starved columns would reach a provision train or a storehouse, they found it possessed by Federal troops, and their maddened sallies, more like bread-riots than assaults, were beaten back. Still they hurried on, and always on their heels thundered the Union cavalry, and the tramp of infantry grew louder. The rear guard was a perpetual battle scene, but the vanguard fled before, not halting to repel any enemy. In that headlong retreat, besides the grim casualties of the bullet and the desertions of whole brigades, 20,000 men were made prisoners before the shattered remnant of the once superb Army of Northern Virginia, 23,000 strong, was brought to a stand.

The End of All.

The end came suddenly. On the morning of April 9 Lee's advance guard reached Appomattox Court House, and there found Sheridan's cavalry drawn right across his path. He ordered a charge, and for the last time the veterans in gray raised the rebel yell and dashed at the enemy. But the cavalry was drawn aside like a curtain, and behind it in solid array stood the Army of the James. The chase was up. All around him the confederate saw the ring of fire. On the north and east lay the Army of the Potomac; on the south and west were the dusty legions of Sheridan and Ord. Would the last scene of civil war reveal its most awful tragedy? It was not to be. The white flag was run up, and that afternoon, in a little farmhouse near the apple orchard, Lee sheathed the sword of rebellion, and by his great magnanimity Grant converted it into the instrument of lasting peace. An hour later cheers in the captive army announced the arrival of beef, cattle and provision trains sent them by their generous foe. The officers of the Army of the Potomac were there already greeting old friends who had worn the gray. At last the shadow of war had passed from the land, and out of the blood-stained soil there was springing a grander nation.

THE CONFEDERATE COW.

The Way She was Impressed into the Union Service and Paroled.

"Our regiment, the First Delaware, was on picket, and confronting the enemy. Barney, our Sergeant-Major, espied a cow, which had just come out from the rebel lines, with a reb in hot pursuit, both coming towards neutral territory. Barney, seizing his sword, rushed towards the scene. Secesh, seeing the advance, halted. Barney ran up to the cow, and, waving his sword, gave her a gentle poke with it, and started her towards our lines. The rebel, astonished at the audacity, cried out: 'Hey, you damned Yank! bring that cow back here!' Barney flourishing his sword, looked back towards him, and re-plied: 'Who are you cursing, you darned rebel? The animal has seceded!' Giving the cow another reminder with his sword that she was needed in our bivouac, he brought her in triumphantly—one of the rebs who had been drawn out by the colloquy, laughing at the signal discomfiture of their companion in arms. Barney, having milked the cow, turned her back toward the rebel lines, and cried out to the defeated Johnny that he didn't need her any longer. The last seen of her she was wending her way slowly to the enemy in quest of her calf, which was tied to a tree."

Mike's Pig.

"The most sociable pet we ever had," said the Corporal, "was Mike's pig. He became a member of the company when he was squealing little fellow, and Mike took great comfort in snuggling him up in his blanket at night, washing him and combing him every day, and taking as much care of him as though he had been a baby. He called him Little Mac, and managed in some way to transport him from camp to camp for two or three months, but when the time came for transfer to another part of the country Little Mac was left behind. The last we saw of him was as he ran squealing after the company, following us for a mile or two, Mike falling out at last to bid him a tearful good-bye."

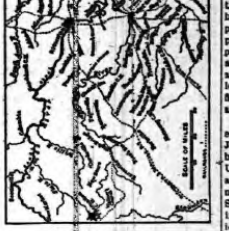
UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS.

Faithful Old Soldiers Who Lead a Loving Band to Their Former Comrades.

The organization of the United Confederate Veterans is spread over all of the Southern States. It is a power that has to be reckoned with. It is built on similar lines to its Northern prototype, the Grand Army of the Republic. Its aims are nominal and its primary reason for existence is to give aid to deserving Confederate veterans and to keep alive the memories of the lost cause. The maintenance of the fires of sectionalism is discouraged and discountenanced.

The commanding officer of the United Confederate Veterans is General John B. Gordon, a valiant soldier and a brilliant statesman. He was for years United States Senator from Georgia, and could have been continued indefinitely in the office did he not at the last General Assembly forbid his name going before the Assembly. He is the ideal of his comrades in the memorable struggle, and his power over the Confederate Veterans is marvelous. Let him recount some stirring incident in any of the many campaigns in which he participated and he can arouse his soldier auditors to a frenzy indescribable. But when he speaks in glowing terms of the new bond between the North and the South, and repeats Lincoln's fatherly words, "One flag, one country, one people," then his hearers applaud his sentiments as vigorously as though they were back in the days of '59 and '60, when state's rights and secession were the doctrines of the South.

The New York Camp of Confederate Veterans and a camp in Chicago are the only organizations of the kind in the North. The Chicago camp belongs to the national organization, but the New York camp is independent.



RICHMOND AND VICINITY.
Within the territory shown by the map occurred the most stirring and also the closing incidents of the War.

TO THE FALLEN.

How silent the brave who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blest!
When spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung;
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell a weeping hermit there!

A DIPLOMATIC HASH.

Lady Whichels was thinking. A letter lay in her lap, and her correspondent was her son—not the baronet, but his brother Bertie—who had written to say that he meant to run down to see her the same afternoon.

She knew what he was coming for perfectly well. Rumors of his infatuation had already reached her. He was coming to tell her that he was engaged to marry Miss Daisy Dornton, who sang for a couple of weeks in the chorus of the Coronet theatre. Lady Whichels groaned, and her lips were pursed in annoyance.

"Your brother is an idiot, Philip," she said sharply to a young man who entered the room a moment later. "He is the worst kind of a fool—for he is not only idiotic, but he is pig-headed."

"Has the climax arrived?" he asked. "What is the matter?"

"Bertie will be with us today. He wants to see me on 'a matter of importance.' The matter is, of course, that he has proposed to that creature and has been accepted, and now he is coming to try and win my consent."

"Well," said the baronet, "and shall you give it? They say she is a very ladylike girl, thoroughly respectable, lives with her mother, and that sort of thing. Her father, I think, kept a large drapery shop in Bermondsey, Bertie could easily have done worse, not being overburdened with brains."

"You need not joke," said the mother; "it is not a joking matter. Have you ever seen the girl?"

"I suppose I have seen her on the stage, but her name does not figure on the programme, and I don't recognize her. She is simply one of a crowd of damsels who troop on and off in a pose. I have never seen her outside the theatre, if that is what you mean."

"That is what I did mean. So her father was a linen draper, and Bertie wishes to make her his wife. Really, this is horrible! It only remains for you to fall in love with a barmaid, Philip, to complete my happiness."

"Oh, I?" said Philip. "I'm not a marrying man, mother."

"I'm sure I don't know what you can do," replied Sir Philip. "If you bully him he'll marry her tomorrow. If you cajole him, he'll try to bully you. I don't see that you can do, upon my soul. It is a cul-de-sac."

The lady, however, was not disposed to be beaten so easily. It was ten o'clock, and Bertie might be expected at the Firs by the express which reached Whichels Junction at four-fifteen. She had six hours for meditation, in which time an idea might occur to her. The post lay on the table beside her, unheeded, as she sat glaring at the lawn with puckered brows. The baronet lounged out to see his dogs. Presently my lady remembered her occupation, and sent a servant to fetch him.

"Philip," she said, "I have a notion at last. Miss Dornton is, of course, impossible. There can be no question about that. The only necessary to make Bertie see it."

Philip had been amusing himself outside, and did not relish having been brought in so summarily, so he resented shortly:

"To make Bertie see it is the original difficulty, is it not?"

"I know that!" impatiently; "but I know also how to do it now. She is, of course, awkward and ignorant as she can be. He has seen her with the glamour of the footlights on her, and in the poky hole where she lives. How we shall see her here, I shall invite her down to stay with us, and ask a lot of people to meet her. Bertie is not brilliant, but he is as sensitive as a girl. When Miss Dornton has committed half-a-dozen solecisms, and he sees that people are ridiculing her, he will be as anxious to break this engagement as I am."

"By Jove!" said Sir Philip. "You ought to have been a diplomatist, mother."

"It is good, isn't it?" said Lady Whichels, complacently. "I felt that there must be a way out, and now I've found it. I think your brother will be rather astonished by my reception of his news this afternoon."

So the vexed question being settled, mother and son went to luncheon.

Bertie arrived at the hour expected. He certainly was astonished at his mother's demeanor. He had looked for remonstrances, threats and tears, and been doggedly prepared for all. Instead of these he was met with smiles and cordiality. He could not understand it.

"I had heard something of the matter," said the mother. "Well, it is a democratic age, and if you are sensible, nobody has a right to complain. Her father was a linen draper, I hear, and her mother is quite a respectable person who lives in, or lets, lodgings."

"Er—they live in apartments, yes," said Bertie. "But—she is charming. I am sure you can trust my taste."

"Emphatically I can, and I am not going to be so absurd as to raise any objection, my dear boy. You want to marry Miss Dornton—marry her. You have my full and free consent, and I would like to be introduced to her. When am I to see her?"

"I really don't know," stammered the boy; "whenever you like."

The question so entirely unexpected that he was almost speechless.

"Well, the best way would be to ask her down here for two or three weeks. So she come, do you think?"

"It could be arranged—oh, yes. She is at the theatre every night, but I dare say I could get her to leave the stage, and—oh, yes, she could come as soon as you please."

"Then I will write and ask her for the first of next month," said my lady, conclusively. "And now you must tell me all about it—how nice she is, how pretty, and nobody ever loved a girl so madly before in all the world."

Lady Whichels dispatched her charming letter to her prospective daughter-in-law on the morrow, and on the day after came the answer, thanking Bertie's mother for her kindness, and gladly accepting the invitation.

The company, sipping tea and nibbling cakes, struggled to hide their curiosity and impatience. Then there was the sound of wheels, and the guests fixed their eager eyes on the door. As it opened Miss Dornton came in and advanced to be presented to the hostess.

Lady Whichels started, and the baronet's eyebrows went up. Nothing could have been in better taste than the manner of the girl who crossed the big room under an ordeal which might have shaken the composure of a society belle of half a dozen seasons. Her costume was perfect, and her words were all that the most fastidious could have desired. She was not pretty, but beautiful, the most beautiful girl present. The fact could not be disguised; if Miss Dornton's first appearance was to be taken as typical of her, Lady Whichels's plot had failed. That night, when she sat in her dressing room before the fire talking to her favorite son, the mother came nearer crying than she had done for years.

"She isn't vulgar at all, Philip," she moaned; "not vulgar; she is preposessing and really good style. Where does she get it from—the daughter of a linen draper? It is awful! They imitate our clothes, these people, and our very phrases; and now they even manage to acquire our style. Nothing is left unassailable."

"She is a very charming girl," said the baronet; "that is the truth. What on earth she saw in Bertie beats me!"

For ten days Bertie had been feeling less sure of himself than he had done. Something—the breath of life to him, and, with the course of true love running perfectly smooth, he began to ask himself whether it were true love, after all.

In the meantime the baronet's first impression of his brother's fiancée had been more than confirmed, and, fickle on the young lady's part as it may look, she appeared to find more pleasure in Philip's society than in Bertie's.

Well, one night when the brothers were alone together in the smoking room, Bertie summarily began upon himself. He told the baronet that his engagement had been a mistake, and he wished to goodness that he had never blundered into it. Sir Philip, who had been mixing himself a whisky and soda, dropped the glass, which shivered into fifty pieces in the Abbotsford stove. As a man not given to dropping things, the accident was noteworthy, and suggested that his nerves were not properly under control.

"You have proposed to the girl damned badly!" he said, sharply.

"You think that I ought to marry her?"

"I think that you oughtn't to have asked her if you weren't sure of yourself. What on earth is going to be?"

"I am going to jilt her," said Bertie, sulkily. "That's what I am going to do—and I don't fancy it will break her heart, either. I don't believe she likes me as much as she did, Philip."

"A good thing for her, if she doesn't!" rejoined the other.

It was on the morning of the next day but one that Sir Philip, who had spent the previous afternoon in London, disturbed his mother's repose in the fashion alluded to. He told her that he was going to be married. Lady Whichels wrapped in a dressing gown, listened to him with ashen cheeks.

"Is Miss Dornton, mother. Bertie has jilted her, and I proposed yesterday. I don't suppose you'll be pleased, but she is the nicest girl I ever met in my life, and I mean to make her 'Lady Whichels.'"

"Bertie has jilted her!" gasped the widow. "And you—you—"

"Yes, even if Lady mouth I scoffed; today I fall. Perhaps it is a judgment on me. Perhaps it is a judgment on you for plotting her downfall as you did. I certainly should not have had the opportunity of failing in love with her if you had not. Anyhow, I worship the ground she walks on, and we are engaged."

And, what is more, he married her—a fact from which an interesting moral may be drawn by ladies who fancy they have abilities for diplomacy. The deposed manager never forgave her nor herself, and when she reflects that it was all entirely due to her own brilliant interference, she feels there are certain emotions which language is wholly inadequate to convey.

Noteworthy Advice.

"Pay as you go, William," said the grocery man to his assistant. "It's a good rule."

"Yes, sir."

"And, by-the-way, you needn't bother so much about Mr. Jaykins. He always pays cash, and when he takes anything he knows he can't get his money back. But be very careful about Mr. Yaplick. See that he gets the best of everything. He owes us $27."—Washington Star.

Plants Near the Sea.

Plants that grow near the sea have thicker leaves than those growing inland. Apparently the sea salt is the cause of this phenomenon, as plants cultivated in artificially-salted soil yield thicker leaves.

An Appreciative Maiden.

"Belinda, how do you treat a stupid man who admires you?"

"Really, I don't know; when a man admires me I never consider it injustice to consider him stupid."—Chicago Record.

QUAINT MRS. YANG.

THE WIFE OF THE CHINESE MINISTER AT WASHINGTON.

Unlike other Representative's Wives from China She Accompanies Her Husband to Official Functions, Also Attends Informal Gatherings.

No woman in Washington attracts more attention than or appeals so much to the curiosity of the ordinary observer as Madame Yang, the wife of the Chinese minister. With her quaint appearance and native dress, she suggests a civilization as widely different from our own as it is possible to imagine. She is a bit of Oriental coloring and personality amidst our modern lights and shades.

When the present Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, Mr. Yang Yu, first came to this country, it was said that he had more advanced ideas upon the political and social questions of the day than any of his predecessors. Mr. Yang is as progressive in his ideas as Li Hung Chang, whom General Grant called "the Bismarck of China," and the late Chinese minister to London, the Marquis Tseng. Following the precedent of the last-mentioned official, Mr. Yang has introduced a number of innovations which were unknown at the legation before his coming.

His family were the first to occupy the new and imposing house leased by the Chinese government out on Columbia Heights, over which the long yellow flag of China, with the black dragon, floats.

The social gayeties of the Washington season were at their height when the new minister and his family were first installed as residents. The first appearance in public of the new representative of the Celestial Empire was at a state dinner given to the diplomatic corps at the White House early in January 1893. On the occasion a brilliant assemblage of foreigners had gathered in the East Room, where dinner guests are received by the President and the first lady of the land.

When the Chinese minister was announced he entered the room not alone, as had been the invariable custom of his predecessors, but accompanied by his wife, who was announced as "Mrs. Yang." The demure little woman, who followed her husband after the subservient fashion of her countrywoman, stood abashed in the presence of so many strangers, until she was reassured by the cordial and kindly greeting of Mrs. Cleveland, who advanced to meet her. This was the first time in all our diplomatic relations with China that the wife of a minister from that country had appeared with him at an official entertainment at which White House was present. Yang is entitled by virtue of her rank to accompany her husband upon occasions of this kind.

Since the residence of the family in Washington, Madame Yang has been seen very frequently at official functions; and not only at these, for many of the residents of the city have invited her as guest to more informal gatherings.

Notwithstanding the fact that the minister and his family have become more or less known here, there is still a very decided code of etiquette maintained at the legation which those who call there must do so by previous appointment. These appointments are made through one of the secretaries, Mr. Sze or Mr. Chung. Both of these attaches are exceedingly well educated, and very proficient in the use of our language. Their replies to notes of request are remarkably correct, as well written and expressed as though the writers were of native birth. Their stationery, of heavy linen paper, is stamped at the top, in red embossed letters,

CHINESE LEGATION
WASHINGTON.

Even the most casual visit to the legation is always invested with a great degree of ceremony. The interpreter enters the room first. There are several attaches who are in the capacity. They are bright and well educated young men, as different from the ordinary laboring-classes by which Americans are apt to judge the Chinese as possible.

The governing and better classes of the Chinese are descendants of the Manchu Tartars. The Emperor is a Manchu, and belongs to the Tartar dynasty, which, with its soldiers, took possession of the country two or three centuries ago. The family of the minister are from the best and most intelligent of the people of North China. They are bright and spontaneous, and revere knowledge. The entire family, Madame Yang and her children included, are studying our language. One of the officials attends the high school in their district, and take private instruction besides.—Harper's Bazar.

War Getting Out of Date

"It won't be long," said the thoughtful man, "before all possibility of war among civilized nations will vanish forever."

"I quite agree with you," returned the member of the peace commission, grasping his hand and shaking it warmly. "We have unquestionably done noble work."

"You!" exclaimed the thoughtful man. "What have you done?"

"Not very much personally, perhaps, but as a member of the peace-commission—"

"Peace commission nothing," interrupted the thoughtful man. "The thing that is going to end all war is the fact that they have reached that point in the construction of mammoth cannon where a new national debt is created every time one is discharged."—Chicago Post.

A HALL OF SUICIDES.

PRECAUTIONS TAKEN WITH THOSE WHO HAVE SUICIDAL MANIA.

Bloomingdale has a Corridor Especially for Guests of this Character. Care of the Inmates a great Strain on the Attendants.

In the Bloomingdale asylum at White Plains there is a ward, or hall, as it is called, in both the male and female divisions, set apart especially for the safekeeping of patients afflicted with suicidal mania. Not a movement of the patients confined there goes unobserved.

At 7 o'clock in the morning they are obliged to vacate their rooms in a body, and the doors are locked behind them. Then they dress in the corridor outside. They then repair to the wash room in companies of three or four, accompanied by an attendant, who keeps them under surveillance.

The meals are served in a light and airy dining room overlooking the asylum grounds. The attendants, whom General Grant called "the Bismarck of China," and the late Chinese minister to London, the Marquis Tseng. Following the precedent of the last-mentioned official, Mr. Yang has introduced a number of innovations which were unknown at the legation before his coming.

His family were the first to occupy the new and imposing house leased by the Chinese government out on Columbia Heights, over which the long yellow flag of China, with the black dragon, floats.

The social gayeties of the Washington season were at their height when the new minister and his family were first installed as residents. The first appearance in public of the new representative of the Celestial Empire was at a state dinner given to the diplomatic corps at the White House early in January 1893. On the occasion a brilliant assemblage of foreigners had gathered in the East Room, where dinner guests are received by the President and the first lady of the land.

When the Chinese minister was announced he entered the room not alone, as had been the invariable custom of his predecessors, but accompanied by his wife, who was announced as "Mrs. Yang." The demure little woman, who followed her husband after the subservient fashion of her countrywoman, stood abashed in the presence of so many strangers, until she was reassured by the cordial and kindly greeting of Mrs. Cleveland, who advanced to meet her. This was the first time in all our diplomatic relations with China that the wife of a minister from that country had appeared with him at an official entertainment at which White House was present. Yang is entitled by virtue of her rank to accompany her husband upon occasions of this kind.

Since the residence of the family in Washington, Madame Yang has been seen very frequently at official functions; and not only at these, for many of the residents of the city have invited her as guest to more informal gatherings.

Notwithstanding the fact that the minister and his family have become more or less known here, there is still a very decided code of etiquette maintained at the legation which those who call there must do so by previous appointment. These appointments are made through one of the secretaries, Mr. Sze or Mr. Chung. Both of these attaches are exceedingly well educated, and very proficient in the use of our language. Their replies to notes of request are remarkably correct, as well written and expressed as though the writers were of native birth. Their stationery, of heavy linen paper, is stamped at the top, in red embossed letters,

CHINESE LEGATION
WASHINGTON.

Even the most casual visit to the legation is always invested with a great degree of ceremony. The interpreter enters the room first. There are several attaches who are in the capacity. They are bright and well educated young men, as different from the ordinary laboring-classes by which Americans are apt to judge the Chinese as possible.

The governing and better classes of the Chinese are descendants of the Manchu Tartars. The Emperor is a Manchu, and belongs to the Tartar dynasty, which, with its soldiers, took possession of the country two or three centuries ago. The family of the minister are from the best and most intelligent of the people of North China. They are bright and spontaneous, and revere knowledge. The entire family, Madame Yang and her children included, are studying our language. One of the officials attends the high school in their district, and take private instruction besides.—Harper's Bazar.

DOGS IN FRANCE.

The Breeds of Them by Their Color and the Purpose Each Serves.

A curious account is given of the use to which dogs are placed in the cutlery work of Thiers, France. Each grinder, man and woman, takes a dog to the grinding-room in winter, and the four-footed heater stretches himself out upon the back of his master's workbench for no other purpose than to keep his owner warm. The reason for this is that instead of occupying an upright or seated position while at work, the grinders, men and women, lie flat on their stomachs upon planks, placed nearly horizontally on a scaffolding, which rises above the grindstones. On the planks are sheepskins to relieve the hardness of the wood, and the head and shoulders of the grinders project beyond the ends of the planks, and their arms reach down vertically to the rim of the grindstones, which are kept in continual motion by the belting, driven by water power. The grinder, extending his full length on the plank, soon becomes fatigued and enfeebled, and the cold gain of the dog exerts a power on his part to resist it. When the chill strikes him, he whistles for his dog, which immediately springs upon the bench and lays himself upon the extended legs of his master, covering him as much as possible, and supplying him with a grateful warmth.

MEXICAN PEARL FISHING.

The agent of the English proprietors of the concession granted by the Mexican Republic for a monopoly of pearl fishing in the Gulf of California recently arrived in San Francisco and gave some interesting details of the present methods employed in their industry, which has continued ever since the occupation of the country in the time of Cortes.

The whole coast of the Gulf of California abounds in pearls, and the concessions control the entire territory. Until within the last few years native divers were employed, and the depth to which they could descend did not exceed 35 feet. With the introduction of diving apparatus the limit of depth was increased to thirty fathoms. The best divers could formerly remain under water not to exceed two minutes. Modern divers remain a half hour at a two-hour stop in the water 100 feet in depth, though at greater depths the stay is necessarily shortened on account of the enormous pressure of the superincumbent water. A diver when at the floor of the ocean looks about for the oyster, which he tears from the object to which it is attached, and places it in a small bag hanging to a rope, which is hauled into the boat on a given signal. The annual yield of the Gulf of California is about $350,000.—San Francisco Call.

Horses Heals did Good Work.

In Los Angeles, a resident exhibits the skin of a mountain lion, got in a peculiar way. He was riding leisurely among the foothills when a mountain lion crossed his path, and was slinking away, as it generally does, when he rashly fired at it with a light shotgun he carried. The lion, slightly wounded, sank back in rage and made a dash at him. The horse shied and the man was thrown, striking his head against a rock, and causing insensibility. When he came to his senses, his horse was standing over him, and a dead lion lay a little distance away. He examined the beast, and found its skull crushed like an eggshell. The horse had got a fair crack at him with his heels, and made an end of him.—Golden Days.

It has been pointed out by a naturalist that the irregular shapes of trees, they "anywhereses," if we may use the word, fulfils a most important purpose. When a gale is blowing the branches will be seen to writhe in all directions, and their movements tend to balance each other. Did they all swing together, the oscillations would either uproot the tree or despoil it of its branches.

A Rare Curiosity.

"I've got something nobody else has got," said a wealthy New Yorker who has been experimenting with raising fancy fowls over in New Jersey.

"What is it?"

"I bought a $175 incubator, put $25 worth of eggs in it, and hatched out a blue bottle fly. I've got the only $200 blue bottle fly in this or any other country."—Texas Siftings.

Very Ambitious.

"Did you say that boy of yours was ambitious?"

"Ambitious! Well, I should say! Why, that boy does nothing but sit around all day and think of the great things he's going to do!"—Philadelphia North American.

Sealing Wax.

Master: "Who can tell me what useful article we get from the whale?"

Johnny: "Whalebone."

Master: "Right. Now, what little boy or girl knows what we get from the seal?"

Tommy: "Sealing-wax."—Tid-Bits.

Couldn't Help It.

Beatrice—Did you notice the loud colors of that blood young lady's gown at the reception last night?

Bertha—Yes, since it. Do you think I'm deaf?—Truth.

He Wouldn't Disappoint His Friends.

His intended bride having deserted him at the eleventh hour, a Cheyenne, Wyo., man thought it too bad to deprive his friends of pleasure just because he had been shabbily used, and he held the reception just the same, discoursing philosophically on the chances of life.

CHINESE HOME LIFE.

Much More Closely Than We Have Been Led to Suppose.

Sociability does not exist among the upper classes of China as in America or England. Their societies are formed for political purposes, and when a banquet is given it is generally with an object. A dinner given merely to enjoy the pleasure of entertaining one's friends is a rare, if not non-occurring, spectacle. The dishes at these banquets are frequently costly, and always palatable. There is a false impression abroad that the Chinese live on all sorts of filthy and, to us, disgusting, dishes. Their style of cooking is different from ours, but the Chinese gentleman eats nothing that the American gentleman will not eat. One thing in their cookery should be mentioned: that is, their universal use of the "hsiang yu," or sesame oil. What the olive oil is to the Frenchman, the "hsiang yu," or fragrant oil, is to the Chinaman. Its taste, at first peculiar, soon becomes pleasant, and to-day I prefer it to either lard or olive oil in the preparation of food. Although it is always given for a purpose, the host's manners are those of perfect hospitality. He entreats you to "eat this," "taste that," and so forth, and with his own ivory chopsticks selects the choicest bits and deposits in your little saucer. Wine of several varieties is served during the banquet, and, at its close, instead of finger bowls, a napkin wrung out of boiling water is presented each guest, and he proceeds to bathe his face, hands and head before adjourning to the "mu ming" for his pipe of opium or tobacco, as his habit is. Cigarettes are very popular. Although cards and chess doubtless originated in China, the upper classes do not indulge much in either pastime. Some of the gentlemen, and occasionally a lady, will play on the guitar or some native music, such as it is, usually the profession of the blind, the actor or the harlot.

His Excessive Politeness.

The late General Sir Henry Pojsonby for many years Queen Victoria's private secretary, was noted for his politeness, and whenever an artiste performed at Court he always telegraphed the following day to inquire after the performer's health. If a complete troupe performed in general employed a formula always the same, which included the various members of the company. Some time ago Rogers Frat was seat for to Court to exhibit his educated geese before Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. The day following the artiste received the traditional telegram from General Ponsonby, written in the following immutable terms—"Her Gracious Majesty would be delighted to know if the members of your troupe were well, and if they have had an agreeable journey. For my own part, I beg you to convey to them the expression of my esteem."

Evidently Mixed Relationship.

The Moultrie (Ga.) Gasette says that there is a family near by which consists of two mothers, four fathers, one grandmother, six sons, one grandfather, three daughters, three sisters, two brothers, five husbands, three wives, two nieces, seven uncles, nine nephews, two wives, one mother-in-law, three sisters-in-law, seven brothers-in-law, one father-in-law, one son-in-law, six grandsons, two granddaughters and there are only ten in the family.

Posted the Bills.

Francis W. Bird, the "Sage of Walpole," once went to Mr. B. G. Howe and found him with his feet swathed in flannels and extended on a chair.

"Howe, what is the matter?" he asked.

"I have got the gout," said Howe.

"You have got the gout—such a temperance man as you are! Yes, but my ancestors drank wine and I have to foot the bills!"—Boston Transcript.

KENTUCKY COLONEL, SAH

The Kentuckian Said He Would Buy 11 Acres of L. D. Martin's Farm, But It Was All a Scheme to Beat the Farmer.

L. D. Martin, a Piscataway farmer, has been flim-flammed out of several days board by a slick talking man who posed as a Kentucky Colonel by the name of Swansey. Martin was visited one day last week by the Colonel, who said that he wanted to buy a small farm in the vicinity, and asked Martin if he desired to sell. The latter told him that he had 11 acres that he was willing to dispose of, and that that would make him a very nice country place. The Kentuckian was very much struck with the idea, and as he hated travelling he would esteem it a great favor if Martin would entertain him while he sent for his daughter, whom he wished to approve of the contemplated purchase. Martin gave him the previlege of staying with him, and the Colonel enjoyed New Jersey farm life in a sumptous manner until last Saturday.

That day Martin was told by the Colonel that he expected a letter to be sent to him at the New Brunswick postoffice. As the Colonel presumed to be a man who kept his good health by out-of-door exercise, he said that he would walk to New Brunswick. Martin remarked that he was going there that same day, and he, just for the novelty of the thing, would take shanks' horses, too

The two men had proceeded about a mile from Farmer Martin's home when the Colonel stopped suddenly in the road and said, as he planked his hand in his trouser's pocket and took on a look of astonishment:

"By gad, sah, I'll be blowed if I haven't left my pocketbook, containing $210, on the bureau in my room."

Still acting as the gracious and hospitable host, Farmer Martin volunteered to return and get the money while his guest waited beside the road. The Colonel agreed, and Martin started back after the missing cash. When the latter got home he could find no trace of the money and fearing that it had been stolen, and that the theft might be laid at the hands of some member of the family, he hastened to the point where he had left the Kentuckian in the road. Farmer Martin found the road still there but the stranger non est. Farmer Martin still has his eleven acres of land, and no prospect of selling.

FIFTY YEARS WEDDED.

CELEBRATION OF A NUPTIAL EVENT OF AN OLD COUPLE.

The Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Shotwell, of Hoboken, Observed Here Monday

To be joined in wedlock for half of a century, and to have that period characterized by bliss and prosperity, is not the fortune allotted to every couple that come under the bans of Hymen, but such it is in the life of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Shotwell, of Hoboken, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in this city, Monday, at the home of the groom's nephew, Wm. H. Shotwell, of Fairview avenue. Such an event is worthy of more than a passing observance, and the affair of yesterday was one of congratulation of the past, celebration of the present and good wishes for the future.

The groom is one of New Jersey's oldest citizens, having been identified with Plainfield when a mere cluster of twenty-five houses graced "the lovely village of the plain." Though a resident of Hoboken at present he has always taken a lively interest in the affairs of his old home. He was a brother of the late Freeman Shotwell. The bride's maiden name was Miss Compton, who came from the oldest families in Perth Amboy.

The celebration, Monday, was arranged by Mrs. William H. Shotwell and was carried out in a way to prove that time has increased the love of friends for the happy couple who were the honored guests. Among those present were:—Mr. and Mrs. J. Clarkson, Mr. and John Goodwin, Mrs. E. V. Shotwell, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Cadmus and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Garretson and daughter.

A distinguishing feature of the celebration was the youthful appearance of the couple, neither one of whom appeared to be over fifty years of age.

Mr. Shotwell was one of the charter members of the Second Presbyterian church, now known as the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, and it was in the edifice of this society, situated where Whitney's dry goods store now is, that the wedding ceremony was performed. Mr. Shotwell is one of the very few charter members of the society left.

PASSING COMMENT.

Frank W. Vermeule, who has been in the South during the last few months, recently sent the following from Alaga, Ala., to the New York Sun:

Pigs can swim. The fact was drawn particularly to my notice on Thursday last while working on a drawbridge over the Chattahoochie River between Georgia and Alabama, at a point where the river is about 200 feet wide and very swift. I heard a racket on the Georgia bank of the river and upon walking over found that a dog was chasing two large black hogs. He drove them to the river's edge, and as there was no other way of escape both took to the water and struck out for the Alabama shore and reached it in safety. They seemed none the worse for their experience and swam fully as well as any dogs that I have ever seen in the water. The incident was witnessed by not only by myself, but also by eleven other members of our crew.

Intended by its promoters to be supremely attractive and interesting, by thoroughly covering the field to which it will be devoted, the Dramatic Herald will make its initial appearance in New York next Saturday, under the editorship of Robert James Campbell, Jr., now on the staff of the New York Journal, and with Col. Clarence Watters, well known to the dramatic profession and the frequenters of the Rialto in general, as business manager. The contents of the paper will be distinctly of interest to that great and growing array of vaudeville talent that has developed in stageland during the last few years. In a general way the journal will cater to the other literary fancies of life and frolic in the metropolis. The conduct of the paper will be characterized by an aim to make it spicy and yet high-toned enough to give it prestige in the circles which it will reach. The ideas of its promoters are really clever, and no doubt success will follow its reception by the public.

A very successful entertainment was given at the Trinity Reformed church, Tuesday evening, for the benefit of the Sunday-school fund. It consisted of views from the bio-cinematoscope and stereoptikon. The moving views of the bio-cinematoscope were very fine and greatly enjoyed. The instrument was well handled and the pictures given in a way that showed them at their greatest advantage. The stereoptikon effects were excellent and the audience was treated to a surprise when a large picture of their pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., was thrown on the screen.

Peddlers Fined.

Chief Grant captured two men peddling supposed gold watches on East Ninth street, Tuesday afternoon. They had no license. They were arraigned before City Judge De Mera next morning and fined $5. They turned the city to pay their car fare to New York out of the fine, but changed their mind when the Judge suggested a trip to Elizabeth instead. Central avenue.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES MEET

NEW SCHOOL BUILDING AT MOUNTAINSIDE DISCUSSED.

Principal Edwards' and Committee's Report Interesting Matters—Cranford Will Consider Building a School at Garwood.

The Westfield Board of Education held a meeting in the Prospect Street School, last Tuesday. All the trustees and Principal Edwards were present. A communication was received from the Cranford school trustees inviting the Westfield Board to a conference on the question of the establishment of a school at Garwood. The District Clerk was ordered to reply, stating that the invitation was accepted and that the Westfield Board would be represented at the conference by its special committee previously appointed to take charge of the matter in question. Chairman Green nominated Mrs. L. A. Lightfoot as the fifth member of the board of lady visitors. The nomination was confirmed. The District Clerk reported that the Misses Polk, Stryker, Binder, Jones, Harned, Clark, Apgar, Halsey, Hubbard and Wood had accepted reappointments for the coming year, and that Miss Peabody and Miss Scoville had declined. Miss Wood, the teacher at Locust Grove, offered some suggestions to the Board in connection with her acceptance, and pointed out the need of an assistant teacher in her school. Principal Edwards presented his monthly report, showing 708 pupils enrolled, with an average attendance of 630, and 118 pupils absent from illness. Miss Dower, now teaching in Miss Brewster's room, was engaged for the coming year at a salary of $600, to teach in the High School in place of Miss Scoville. On recommendation of the committee on buildings and grounds the janitors of the different school buildings were re-engaged for the coming year at their former salaries. Mrs. Edgar, Lincoln School, salary $490 a year; Mr. Keppler, Prospect Street School, $400, and Chas. Roll, at Locust Grove, $50 a year. This committee also reported on the question of repairs upon the Locust Grove schoolhouse, recommending the expenditure of a sum not to exceed $200 upon the placing of a heater in the building and the provision of additional desk accommodations so that fifty-four pupils could be accommodated instead of only thirty-four, as at present. Mayor Cory and Charles Forster, representing the people of Mountainside, objected to the proposed repairs, characterizing them as altogether inadequate to the needs of the district. It was their object, they said, to secure the erection of a new building in their district, and to this end they had visited the State Superintendent of Schools and endeavored to get the present building condemned. The twenty-six pupils who come here to school from Mountainside could be accommodated at home if an enlarged building and a grammar grade were to be established. Members of the board pointed out that it would be impossible to take any steps toward the construction of a new schoolhouse without calling a meeting of voters to secure a special appropriation, and as it was improbable that such a movement would succeed at this time, it was agreed to let the matter lie in abeyance until the annual school meeting for the voting of appropriations, and in the meantime to make such repairs upon the building as the committee suggested. An appropriation of $200 was voted for the purchase of apparatus for the use of classes in physics. The principal was instructed to introduce a fire drill into the schools, with frequent practice, so that the drill shall be really effective in case of an emergency.

A STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.

Pleasant and Profitable Affair For St Mary's Church.

The strawberry festival held at the Young Men's Catholic Lyceum last Tuesday under the auspices of St. Mary's church was a great success. Notwithstanding the cool weather the building wrs crowded with people and everything was readily disposed of. The ice-cream and cake table was in charge of Mrs. DeRevere, Mrs. Conover, Miss Slevin, Miss Phillips and Miss O'Keefe, while the lemonade table was presided over by Miss Butscher and Mrs. McIlroy. Miss Lord had charge of the cane table, and Mrs. Reilly looked after the shooting gallery where some excellent scores were made. Those who served as waitresses were Miss Fanny Hillman, Miss Anna Daley, Miss Kate Roach, Miss Mamie Burke, Miss Anna Ryan and Miss Lizzie Day. Mrs. Slevin was chairman of the affair, and she was assisted in the arrangements by Mrs. McCarty, Mrs. Hillman and Mrs. Knowlton.

A feature of the event was the dancing which was continued throughout the evening. The floor manager was Michael Whalen and he was assisted by Michael Mack, Morris Owen and Charles McCarty. The music for dancing was furnished by Eugene O'Beilly.

SUIT FOR WAGES

The Important Point Was as to the Length of Contract.

Justice Newcorn was called upon to decide a remarkable case Wednesday, for no matter whether he believes the statements of the plaintiff or defendent, he finds that he only can make one decision.

The suit is that of Miss Bessie Green against Mrs. Fannie Knight. Mrs. Knight resides on Woodland avenue. Sometime ago she hired a colored woman named Bessie Green as a household servant. The employer says that she hired the servant by the month and was to pay her twice a month while the girl says that she was hired by the week, and was to receive her pay twice a month. Bessie Green left on her own accord after two weeks and a half had passed. Then she sued Mrs. Knight for three weeks pay.

As the testimony was the same on all the facts except that of the length of time for which Miss Green was employed, there remained but that to decide. On considering the matter the Judge has decided that it is impossible to give but one verdict, who ever is right. The payment of the monthly wages at the end of half the month practically makes the contract for that length of time.

SET 'EM UP FOR THE BOYS

LANDLORD SMALLEY SUES EX-SENATOR KEYS FOR A CAMPAIGN BILL.

Somerset County People Interested in the Novel Dispute—The Senator Says He Never Ordered Drinks for the Boys.

In the Somerset court, Tuesday, there was gathered a crowd of Democratic politicians, attracted by a suit against former Senator Wm. J. Keys. He was elected Senator in the fall of 1890 after an exciting canvass. The convention which nominated him met on Oct. 13th of that year.

Charles W. Smalley, proprietor of the County Hotel, of Somerville, at that time, was the complainant. He said on the witness stand that on the day of the convention he was directed by a man purporting to come from Mr. Keys that he should let those who came to his bar have what they wanted and Keys would pay the bill. The itemized bill which Smalley presented to the court was as follows: Soft drinks, $6; wine and whiskey, $8; cigars, $4.60; interest for six years, $6.65; total, $25.33.

Counsel for Mr. Keys inquired why there was so much for soft drinks, and Smalley replied because it was a Democratic crowd.

Senator Keys denied on the witness stand that he ever gave an order for the drinks, and said he had paid anteelection bills ever since his election and he was tired of it.

Prosecutor Dungan, counsel for Keys, called the attention of the court to the fact that the first suit had not been brought in Justice Sutphen's court until October 15th, 1896, and that the bill was outlawed under the act of limitations two days previously. The court reserved decision, but this two days will probably relieve the Senator from paying the bill.

Mr. Keys is a member of the Democratic State Committee and has been a leading figure in county politics for a number of years. He thought the bill was unjust.

ASBURY PARK MUSIC TOO GAY.

The Sunday evening concerts on "Founder" Bradley's beach pavilion at Asbury Park are meeting with opposition from ministers and church people. The band is employed by the city authorities at an expense of $4,500 for the summer.

At the meeting of the Common Council Tuesday the opposition took the form of a petition, and the Rev. Dr. W. E. Jones, of Philadelphia, who owns a cottage there, said that the better element of the people are opposed to the so-called sacred concerts. Last year, he said, the pastors of all the churches in the city entered a remonstrance against secular airs being played by the band on the Sabbath.

"It is a serious matter," he said, "for Asbury Park, and if continued will eventually hurt the city, morally and financially."

"Founder" Bradley, who is a member of the Council, offered a resolution that the Music Committee prepare such Sunday night programmes as shall be appropriate to the Sabbath.

Residential Improvements.

Louis R. Howard, of Sandford avenue, has purchased the large residence on La Grande avenue, near Franklin place, from J. T. Vail, and is now planning to greatly improve the place and take possession of it in the fall. Lancaster & Rogers, the Babcock building architects, have drawn up plans for the alterations which promise to transform the appearance of the place. A potre cochere will be added on the right of the house connecting with a large octagonal piazza, which is to be extended in that direction. The projection over the entrance is to be removed, a bay window placed instead on the second story, and the third story left even. The house is to be fitted with new sanitary plumbing and with a handsome tiled bath-room.

Hurt by a Lead Pencil.

Wm. Cadmus, an employe at Woodbull & Martin's dry goods store, is carrying his hand in a bandage, and all because of a slight accident. He, together with some young men were fooling, when accidentally a lead pencil with a sharp point entered that part of the flesh between two of the fingers, inflicting a painful wound. At first Mr. Cadmus paid little attention to the accident, but very soon his hand began to pain him considerably, and he was obliged to have it attended to. He does not, however, apprehend any serious results from the wound, although he is deprived temporarily from the use of his hand.

Children's Day.

Next Sunday will be Children's Day in all the churches except the Episcopal and Roman Catholic. Elaborate programmes are being prepared in several of the churches.

YOUNG WOMEN ASSISTED

AN INNOVATION AT THE TEA GIVEN BY MRS. W. L. PATTON.

The New Idea Found Favor Among the Many Society People Present—The Interior of the House Decorated for the Event.

A delightful tea was held at the home of Mrs. W. L. Patton, of West Fifth street, Tuesday afternoon. Although the outer world was bleak and uninviting, the interior of Mrs. Patton's home was quite the contrary. The decorations consisted of pink roses and wild flowers, and were artistically arranged about the rooms with pleasant effect.

The tea was an informal one and something of an innovation, for it was the young ladies who poured tea and assisted the hostess. The new idea found general favor with the guests, for the young ladies filled the role in delightful fashion.

At the tea table, Miss Mary Anderson Reinhart and Miss Ethel Bowen poured tea. Miss Addie Parker Jackson was in charge of the strawberry cup. She was assisted by the Misses Constance Patton, Wilhelmina Patton, Elsa Pfeiffer, Helen Brainard, Sarah Richards, Bessie Bowen, Hattie Goddard, Elsie Goddard, Margaret Goddard, Marjorie Fleming, Dorothy Fleming.

Among those present during the afternoon were Mrs. Alfred Slauson, Mrs. A. D. Shepard, Mrs. John Doull Miller, Mrs. E. W. Conklin, Miss Hellwig, Mrs. F. S. Martin, Miss Martin, Mrs. Frederick Mead, Miss Mead, Mrs. Lawrence Myers, Mrs. Samuel Duvall, Miss Erskine, Miss L. B. Krom, Miss Krom, Miss Lyon, Mrs. Charles S. Case, Mrs. Irving Brown, Mrs. D. T. Van Bureu, Mrs. Edward Morris Van Buren, Mrs. F. H. Andrews, Miss Cook, Miss Dewey, Miss Thorn, Miss Newman, Miss Mary Brown, Mrs. Samuel Clark, Mrs. Grosendyke, the Misses Ellis, Miss Newton, Mrs. John Gray Foster, Mrs. Bowman, Mrs. Fleming, Mrs. T. F. Budlong, Mrs. Josiah Browne, Mrs. W. L. C. Glenny, Mrs. H. E. Bowen, Mrs. Stover, Mrs. Batson, Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Miss Reinhart, Mrs. Francis Wood, Miss Katherine Wood, Miss Stewart, Mrs. O. T. Waring, Miss Spicer, Mrs. W. H. Sterling, Mrs. George D. Patten, Miss Patten, Mrs. Isaac Rushmore, Mrs. W. D. Murray, Mrs. Georgo H. Frost and Mrs. W. R. Richards.

BICYCLE STOLEN.

The Wheel Removed From the Piazza of C. J. Baxter's House.

Two bicycles sat on the piazza of the residence of Charles J. Baxter, State Superintendent of Schools, of 930 Putnam avenue, Tuesday night. A debased man entered through the side gate, fell in love with one of the wheels and departed through the same gate with the wheel. This is, in brief, the story of the robbery that occurred in that neighborhood, last evening.

Mr. Baxter lives at the corner of Putnam avenue and Richmond street. His daughters were the recipients of new Crescent wheels this spring. They ride considerably, but yesterday, owing to the dampness of the atmosphere, they did not enjoy their usual spin. The wheels were left on the front piazza. At 9 o'clock, one of the family went out on the piazza on an errand and found that one of the bicycles was missing. It was the one belonging to Miss Adelade Baxter. Her sister's wheel was still there.

The loss of the wheel was immediately reported to the police, but no trace of the bicycle has yet been discovered.

It was a ladies' Crescent, '97 model, No. 278,334. It was enameled maroon, had natural wood trimmings, rims and handle bars, was geared to 70, and equipped with a Messinger saddle.

Work in Missionary Fields.

Rain put a very effective damper on the second of the Missionary Extension lectures, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Local Union, which was to be held at the First Presbyterian church, last Tuesday. The lecture was held but the audience was a very small one. The speaker of the evening was Rev. J. T. Kerr, of Elizabeth, and his subject was "Giving the Gospel to the World of God's Own Enterprise." He spoke of work in the different missionary fields and said that it was the work pointed out by God and as such, it should be looked after by all. It was not for man, he said, to criticize God's plans but to use them.

Miss Adelaide Bunyon and her sister, Miss Alma Bunyon, of Arlington avenue, will return the last of this week from a visit with relatives in New York State.

JERSEY'S COMING BATTLE

THE GRIGGS-VOORHEES BREACH TOO WIDE TO BE HEALED.

Kean's Boom Looming Up—Troubles Ahead for the Republicans Who Hope to Keep the Democrats at Odds on Money Question

"Few men among the rank and file of the Republicans know just how far apart Governor Griggs and Senator Voorhees have fallen," said one of South Jersey's leaders, who was at Trenton the other day. "I tell you the breach is so wide that there is no prospect of its being cemented and in the next eighteen months you'll see the liveliest fight in our party you've seen in many a day. Voorhees will stake his all in the battle, for he has much to gain and little to lose. Should he win he will be at the pinnacle of his political career, for then he will be the most formidable candidate for Governor. If he loses he can still remain a power in the Senate, where he has yet two years to serve. He is strong at home, and has a large following among the rank and file, although few of the leaders are with him. Governor Griggs assumed a grave responsibility—viewing the situation in the light of his ambition to succeed United Senator Smith—when he arrayed Voorhees and Voorhees' friends in opposition. It was neither diplomatic nor polite, and I am surprised that it ever came about, for the Governor has always been given wide credit for the keenest sagacity.

"There is a heap of trouble ahead for us," continued the South Jerseyman, "and for the life of me I can't see how it is going to be healed. The wires are now being pulled for United States Senator and for Governor, and we confidently expect to land both. but we've got to do a tall heap of harmonizing At this day John Kean has all the best of it for Senator down our way It was South Jersey that stood by him in 1895, when he came so near being nominated for Governor. Had his own county of Union stood by him as well he would have captured the convention on the first ballot. It was Senator Voorhees who then made it possible for Griggs to run by dividing up the Union delegation. He held more than a third of the vote from his county, and beside the figure it cut in the ballot it had conspicuous influence upon the delegates from other counties, for when a man goes into a convention without solid backing from his own home his chances of victory are slender, indeed. Now, Voorhees is still popular in Union county, and exerts a very wide influence. He will undoubtedly bring all his strength to bear upon the campaign for Senator, and it is safe to say that that strength will not be exerted in behalf of those Assembly candidates who favor Governor Griggs. Voorhees makes no effort to conceal the true condition of affairs between himself and the Governor, and it's the greatest pity in the world for two such good men to be at swords' points.

HIS VISITOR WAS DEAD.

Farmer Tallman Will Probably Not Survive the Shock.

William Tunis, a real estate and insurance broker, of Somerville, 60 years old, died suddenly of heart disease on the farm of Samuel P. Tallman, near Flagstown, Saturday afternoon. Mr. Tallman was so severely shocked by the death of Mr. Tunis that his death is momentarily expected.

Several weeks ago Farmer Tallman, who is over 70 years old, was severely injured by the accidental discharge of a shotgun which nearly blowed his both hands to pieces. Mr. Tallman acted with remarkable coolness and was driven nearly twelve miles after the accident to the nearest surgeon where he underwent an operation.

Mr. Tallman was seated on the piazza of his home Saturday afternoon suffering with nervous prostration. At which time Dr. William J. Swinton, of Somerville, who is attending him was at his side when a light wagon containing Mr. Tunis and his driver stopped in front of the house.

Mr. Tunis was in a reclining position, and his head hung helplessly to one side. The driver hastily alighted and said that when Mr. Tunis got out of the carriage to look over the farm he fell and fainted. The driver placed him in the carriage again and drove him to the house. Dr. Swinton examined Mr. Tunis and pronounced him dead. As the body was carried into the house Farmer Tallman collapsed, and his physicians say that he is dying.

St. Mary's Commencement.

The children of St. Mary's parochial school are now preparing for the commencement exercises, which are to be held during the latter part of this and said that when Mr. Tunis got out month in the school hall. Last year's exercises were very successful, but those this year promise to be even better.

PALMISTRY AS AN ART.

THE READING OF CHARACTER AT THE FORTHCOMING FETE.

While the Reading of Lines in the Hand is Not a Science, it is Claimed as an Accomplishment in Studying Human Nature.

By force of association and tradition the beautiful art of Palmistry is commonly enough thought of and spoken of as something akin to fortune telling and clairvoyancy; and the palmist is classed with the Wizard and the Gypsy. Wherefore it is that some good people who would not find fault with it as a pastime, a game for the home-circle deceiving neither the teller nor seeker of fortunes, do wildly question the propriety of any public recognition of Palmistry.

Now, in point of fact, there will be no "fortune-telling" at the Fete, nor has it, at any time been proposed by the management, and all references thereto in these columns, whether of news or advertising, have been based on an innocent misconception, and serve to illustrate the force of association above named.

On the other hand Palmistry will be a feature, a charming feature of the Fete. The real scope and character of the art will be demonstrated by an expert, a lady pupil of the most illustrious teacher of modern chiromancy. But it should be clearly understood that it has nothing in common with fortune-telling, with any pretence at reading the future. There is in nothing mysterious or supernatural.

Palmistry is an art in the same sense as is physiognomy or phrenology, differing as they do, from physiology—and exact science. It is, nevertheless, a legitimate subject of study, not without influence upon human reason, even upon human affairs. In forming our judgments of our fellow-men we are guiding how ever unconsciously by the rules of art and science; and the trained Palmist is also a physiologist, a phrenologist, a physiognomist; in fine, a student of human nature, a reader of character; not a "Prophet or son of a Prophet." You may be startled to hear from a stranger, gazing intently at your outstretched palm, that the course of your life has been thus and so; that your likes and dislikes, your tastes and sympathies are such and such; or that given certain conditions you are likely to act in this way or that; for you know in your heart it is all substantially true and correct. But it is quite unnecessary to attribute the reading of your life-story to any magical lore, and you will quickly note that there is no pretence at pointing out the shadows of coming events.

We repeat, then, our assertion that modern Palmistry—while it neither boldo nor asks a place with the sciences—may well be classed as a charming art, a worthy and legitimate branch of the study of human nature. And we would, with confidence, add that it will be presented in the most interesting and becoming manner at the forthcoming Fete.

OPENING OF WALLACE HOUSE.

Historical Exercises to be Held in Somerville June 17th.

M. and received by the president of the Society, Richard F. Stevens. After which Rev. Dr. George S. After the literary exercises the ladies of Somerville will provide a collation.

In case of stormy weather the exercises will be held in some suitable hall.

Borough Fire Alarm Test.

Boroughites need not be alarmed this afternoon at about 3 o'clock if they hear the borough fire alarm ring. It will not be a call to the citizens to turn out and help extinguish the flames that might be rapidly eating up the place, but merely a test of the alarm system. Firemen, therefore, need not respond to that call.

Price of the Building.

According to the lease which the Plainfield Board of Education has of the old Seventh Day church edifice, the Board has the privilege of buying the building, at any time during the four years for which the lease extends, for $7,000.

NEW BULLY IN TROUBLE.

"CACK" CARTER HAILED BEFORE HIS HONOR, CADI DEMEZA.

"Cack" Insisted on Having a Friend Stay at His House, and When the Stepfather Objected There Was a Hot Time There.

Although the general public thought that Walter Carter, better known as "Cack," just grew like the famous "Topsy" of Uncle Tom's Cabin, it appears that "Cack" possesses a mother and a stepfather, but the relations between these individuals and "Cack" have been growing rather strained of late.

Before "Cack," who is well-known in town as an expert crap shooter, paid his famous visit to New Brunswick and hid himself in the New Brunswickian darkness to escape the mob of dusky avengers, the trouble began.

Carter has been going to Somerville for some time and fascinated one of the dusky belles of that town. His remarkable walk quite captivated her and she came to Plainfield to see him about three weeks ago. Solomon Lewis is a respectable colored man living on Battle row, who, some ago married Mrs. Carter, the mother of the famous "Cack," and is the one with whom the trouble has been. Carter took his friend to call at the home of his stepfather and Mr. Lewis objected. Carter invited his guest to make herself at home and words between the two men followed. Carter, it is said, threatened the grey head of his stepfather with trouble.

Lewis informed the police of the incident and was instructed to have "Cack" locked up if he should grow troublesome in the future.

The neighbors have it that the stepfather began to make significant remarks about New Brunswick and the waiters' ball to "Cack" and that these aroused his ire. At any rate, there was trouble and Lewis says that his naughty stepson had the audacity to punch him in the jaw and sundry other places, besides threatening to eat him up and "do" him in true African fashion.

Patrolman Higgins was called it and arrested Carter. This morning he was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza on the charge of being disorderly. "Cack" said that he wasn't and that his stepfather was to blame for all the trouble. His Somerville friend, he explained, had the permission of her mother to come and see him and that Lewis had nothing to do with the case. The Judge set the trial down for Saturday morning at the station house and held Carter under $100 bail for his appearance at that time.

A STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.

Profitable and Sociable Affair Given by a Hope Chapel Society.

The elements without had no material effect on the strawberry and ice cream festival held last Tuesday at Hope Chapel under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, and a large crowd was present to enjoy the good things provided by the committees in charge. The forepart of the evening was devoted to an entertainment and that everyone was thoroughly pleased cannot be denied. The programme opened with a piano solo by Miss Gray, and was followed with several vocal solos by William N. Runyon. He captured his audience by storm and it required a number of selections to satisfy them. This was the case with Miss Addie Parker Jackson who gave some of her best recitations. She found it quite difficult to satisfy the demand of her audience which was well sharpened. Mr. Guest rendered a cornet solo and he was obliged to respond to an encore, as was also Miss Harris who sang a pleasing selection. Each one of the above persons were called several times so thoroughly did the audience enjoy their efforts.

Rev G. Kennedy Newell, the pastor, was the master of ceremonies and he announced the various numbers At the conclusion he invited all to remain and assist the women of the chapel by purchasing freely of the ice cream, cake and strawberries which had been prcvided. The audience followed the above advice and thus the treasury of the society was enriched considerably.

Mrs. S. R. Struthers was the chairman of the affair, and the refreshment committee consisted of Mrs. Sweeney, Mrs. Mundy, Mrs. Gray, Mrs. Young, Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Higgins had charge of the cake, while Mrs. McComas and Mrs. Shepard received the money and tickets at the door.

Water Company Superintendent.

Thomas Dowd, of Plainfield, has been appointed superintendent of the Union Water Company for the small towns between Elizabeth and this city, in place of Bert Kline, who has resigned to take charge of the Aldene Villa.

DISPUTE OVER FIREWOOD

FANWOOD FARMERS CARRY THEIR QUARREL TO THE COURTS.

The culmination of a long standing disagreement between two farmers of Fanwood township was reached Tuesday when Amza Hetfield of that place caused the arrest of his neighbor Leo Scherer on the criminal charge of stealing wood for fuel from Hetfield's woodland.

The two men occupy farms about one mile from the Fanwood station in the direction of Rahway. Hetfield is the owner of about eighty acres, fifteen of which are woodland. Sherer's farm is on Terrill road and adjoins the land of Hetfield. The two men have not been on the best of terms for a year past; and when last winter Hetfield was informed by friends that his neighbor was poaching upon his wood reserves, he decided to keep a lookout and find out the facts for himself.

On February 10th last it is alaged by Hetfield that he discovered Scherer and his son upon his land cutting and carrying away fire wood. When Hetfield accosted Scherer, some hot words passed between the men, the latter claiming that he was upon land leased by him and had a right to the wood.

Shortly afterward Hetfield brought a civil action for damages against Scherer, before Justice Clark, of Scotch Plains, and was awarded a verdict of $100. The case was appealed to the county court, and Judge McCormick yesterday reversed the decision of Justice Clark on a technicality, and non-suited Hetfield. The criminal charge was made against Scherer as soon as the decision of the county court became known to Hetfield.

Scherer was arrested last Tuesday, and, failing to give bonds, was committed by Justice Mosher to the city jail until 11 o'clock next morning, when he was released by the Justice under $300 bond to appear at 4 o'clock that afternoon for examination.

PRESENTED A WORK BASKET.

Miss Pessinger Given a Pleasant Surprise by Associate Workers.

When the Warren chapel sewing-school closed for the season, the superintendent, Miss Pessinger, presented each of the teachers with a suitable present and, in return for this expression of kindness, the teachers gave their superintendent a surprise. They met at the home of Mrs. William Wilson, on Somerset street, Tuesday afternoon and went to the home of Miss Pessinger, on Dunnin avenue, in a body. The object of their visit was to present her with a handsome work basket. Miss Pessinger appreciated the gift and thanked her donors. The assistant superintendent, Mrs. Snyder, was also presented with a work basket, but owing to the fact that she is confined to the house by illness, was unable to be present. Following the presentation the guests were served with refreshments and the balance of the afternoon was passed in a social manner.

AN EARLY PLAINFIELD GARDEN.

Probably the earliest dinner of home grown new potatoes and green peas which has been served of recent years, was enjoyed at the residence of Walter Scott, on Front street, Sunday last.

The potatoes were of good size and the peas of excellent flavor. The early maturity of these vegetables is considered a great rarity hereabouts, and is more remarkable considering the general cool weather.

Mr. Scott's garden is quite an extensive affair, fronting on East Second street, and presents an attractive appearance the entire season, especially when the flowers are in bloom in great variety. The garden is under the personal supervision of Martin Whalen, whose careful study of horticultural peculiarities undoubtedly accounts for its phenomenal early products.

Convention of Letter Carriers.

New Jersey State Letter Carriers' Association will hold its annual convention in Arcanum Hall, Bayonne, on July 3d. Frederick J. Schmidt, president of the organization, has arranged to have the local letter carriers entertain the delegates. Officers are to be elected and a delegate chosen to the national convention, to be held in California.

Mrs. Snyder, of the borough, is confined to her home by illness.

Mrs. Harry Green and daughter, of Manning avenue, have returned from a visit with relatives at Newburgh on the Hudson.

FIGHTING A PEST.

STORY OF THE BATTLE OF AMERICA AGAINST THE GYPSY MOTH.

Remedy Worse than Disease—It Has Cost Massachusetts One Million Dollars that Far to Pay for the Blunder of a French Scientist.

Massachusetts's Assembly has lately made its annual appropriation for carrying on the work of destroying the Gypsy moth. The sum is $150,000, but not large enough by $50,000 to satisfy the Entomological Board, which has charge of the active management of the work, and which alleges that a vast deal depends upon effective fighting of the pest for the coming year.

The whilom experimenting of a naturalist who was interested in silk culture proved a costly enterprise for the state, for it was due to his investigations that the dread pest, which had cost the German and Austrian Empires great sums, was introduced into the United States.

So far, Massachusetts has expended over $1,000,000 in attempting to check its ravages on the forests and shade trees, and the danger is by no means disposed of. It has attracted the attention of the National Government.

In 1869 there lived at 27 Myrtle street, Glenwood, Medford, L. Trouvelot, a naturalist, who had come to Massachusetts from his native city, Paris. He was just then deeply interested in silk-culture experiments, and had brought from Europe some eggs of the celebrated Gypsy moth. One Spring morning M. Trouvelot, while at work in his laboratory in an upper room of his house, was called away for a few moments. A lot of the moth eggs lay on a tray not far from an open window. A passing breeze blew the eggs out of doors.

For several years after the moth escaped it attracted no attention in Medford. People who witnessed, in 1889, the first extensive outbreak of the moth there, and thus became acquainted with its voracity and reproductive powers, were unable to understand how so destructive a creature could have existed unnoticed for twenty years. But the moth was not unnoticed after the ten years, although its identity remained unknown and its spreading attracted no attention outside the locality where it was first introduced. Within twelve years from the time of its introduction it had become a serious nuisance to those living near the Trouvelot house, but it was supposed that the caterpillar was a native. Its lack of conspicuous markings, which to the common eye would distinguish it from other species, and its habits of concealment and night feeding will explain its unheeded distribution.

Within twenty years it had spread into thirty townships. Shade trees were being stripped as by fire, woodland was being destroyed, while brushland everywhere was covered by myriads of the creeping, crawling worms. The destruction was reaching such a stage that people in Eastern Massachusetts got into almost a state of terror over it, and finally, in 1890, Gov. Brackett, in an essage to the Legislature urged that steps be taken in the matter.

In March, 1890, a special law was passed authorizing the organization of a commission to prosecute the work of destroying the moth, and $25,000 was appropriated to that end. A skilled entomologist and a force of men, acting under the supervision of the State Board of Agriculture, soon began labor, but the territory infested was found to be sixteen times larger than at first supposed, and in June $25,000 more was appropriated.

In the actual work of destruction, a comical feature introduced was the appointment of a dozen special policemen, whose duty it was to guard the highway of Medford and Malden, to see that no guilty moth escaped, by attaching himself to a passing vehicle. As a fact, this dignified espionage was valuable, for numerous carriages were peremptorily halted which were covered with the obnoxious caterpillars. These policemen did yeoman service. During the season of 1890 the sections of Medford, Malden, Arlington, Chelsea, and Everett, principally, were inspected by the Gypsy moth commission.

The present commission is headed by Prof. C. H. Fernald, a most experienced entomologist, and a corps of experts and assistants who from long training know about the best methods of the work. From the almost numberless experiments and investigations that have been made in the last six years something definite as regards the most effectual insecticides—spraying, and other systems of treating infected territory—has been arrived at.

IN SEASON.

A NEW STYLE OF BODICE.

French Tailor Gowns Much More Fanciful than the English.

(By Special Arrangement with the N.Y. Sun.)

It is generally conceded, except in midsummer, that the best dressed woman is the one in a plain tailor-made gown; but the productions of this season are not confined to the simple coat and skirt models. The English women are especially addicted to the severe style in tailor-built gowns, but the French woman's tailor dress is a thing of beauty, embracing every opportunity for decoration. One striking example is a green cloth dress with a yellow and green brocaded silk vest, a cloth bolero embroidered all over with narrow silk braid, a high braided collar cut in battlement squares, and a jabot of fine creamy lace falling over the vest. The skirt and sleeves are braided, and frills of lace fall over the hands. White collars and revers of white satin, covered with lace, and velvet belts, embroidered with gold, are seen on the cloth gowns. There are several different styles of collars for the tailor coats. One is a sort of Medici cut out in squares on the edge and trimmed around with braid. A close-fitting Zouave, cut in squares or slanting points on the front edges, is a very popular style for cloth, and some of these little jackets have wide sleeves heavily braided.

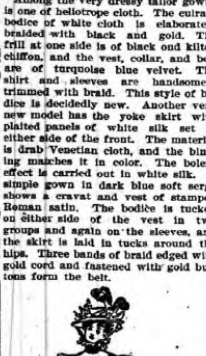
Among the very dressy tailor gowns is one of heliotrope cloth. The cuirass bodice of white cloth is elaborately braided with black and gold. The frill at one side is of black and kilted chiffon, and the vest, collar, and belt are of turquoise blue velvet. The shirt and sleeves are handsomely trimmed with braid. This style of bodice is decidedly new. Another very new model has the yoke skirt with plaited panels of white silk set in either side of the front. The material is drab Venetian cloth, and the binding matches it in color. The bolero effect is carried out in white silk. A simple gown in dark blue soft serge shows a cravat and vest of stamped Roman satin. The bodice is tucked on either side of the vest in two groups and again on the sleeves, and the skirt is laid in tucks around the hips. Three bands of braid edged with gold cord and fastened with gold buttons form the belt.



Pique and linen suits made by the tailor, with jaunty coats and plain skirts, are to be very much worn later on. Braiding is applied on these dresses very much as it is on cloth gowns, but many of them are made quite plain, with the revers faced with some contrasting color in pique, dull blue, or red on a white gown being very popular. Wash silk waists are worn with these, and so are any of the pretty false fronts which can be easily attached to a plain corset cover that will keep them always in place. A narrow belt with a fancy buckle is the finish at the waist line.

GEMS BY JERSEY LIARS.

Middlesex County Said to Outrank All Others in Amazement.

Oh, the Jersey Ananias he doth lie,
He is seein' sights and vishuns—in his eye,
When a little slip betrays him
Not a little does it phase him,
He will hide it with a whopper, piled up high.
He has tales of snakes and bulldogs to beguesth,
And for cat tales he will wear a laurel wreath
He will tell, although 'tis risky,
Of a cat that liked its whisky,

Plymouth Rock That Chews Tobacco.

Strange stories of wonderful happenings in the country districts come from Middlesex County, N. J. In Madison township Charles Hawley, a farmer and chicken raiser, tells a marvelous story about a Plymouth Rock hen, which is his pride. The other day as he was about to put a wad of tobacco into his mouth the fowl snatched it from him and walked away chewing it. Hawley pursued, but could not catch the thief. "It's an honest fact," he says, "that that hen likes terbacker. I tried her afterward, and she will eat whole plugs of it at a time. I have a hard time of it now keeping her supplied, although they do say a hen has no teeth."

Hobo, Bulldog and Snake.

Joseph Morgan, of South Brunswick, has a farm which lies along Lawrence Brook. Being bothered by tramps, he keeps a pugnacious bulldog. Recently a tattered hobo walked into the yard, knocked on the back door and asked for a meal. The bulldog started for him. The tramp started for the back fence. The dog chased him across the fields in the direction of the brook. Mr. Morgan pursued. He saw his dog and his caller disappear behind the bushes that skirted Lawrence Brook. As he hastened along he heard screams coming from the bushes, and concluded that his dog had caught the tramp. When he parted the bushes he saw the tramp hanging from a tree limb over the water. Above him was a large black snake, so he didn't dare to climb higher. If he slipped back the dog would catch him. If he let go his hold he would get an unwelcome bath.

The farmer stood on the bank laughing at the tramp's plight, suddenly the snake began to descend the tree. The tramp, with a cry, let go and fell into the brook. The snake and dog dived after him. That was the last seen of the snake, but the tramp emerged shortly afterward with the dog holding fast to him. The farmer called the dog off, and the tramp fled from the scene, leaving a stream of water on the ground behind him.

Soaks His Bait in Whiskey.

Colonel Pete Rickler, of East Brunswick, is the greatest fisherman in Middlesex County. He claims to have a great secret for hooking fish. Yesterday he made known the secret to a friend over a social glass. "Soak your bait in whiskey," he said. "Fish like it. But be sure and use apple whiskey. They don't like rye." A few days ago the Colonel went fishing and drank all his whiskey before he thought of soaking his bait. He then tied the empty bottle to his line and cast it over. While waiting for a bite he went to sleep. Soon he was aroused by a hard pull on the line. Drawing it in he found that a large bass had crawled into the bottle and could not get out. The Colonel was obliged to break the bottle to get the fish. All East Brunswick wonders at the prowess of Colonel Pete. He has a daughter who has large trustful eyes like a gazelle. She could not tell a lie, and she verifies her father's story in every particular.

Cat and Dog Allies.

The excellent understanding existing between a cat and dog belonging to Matthias Roderick is an enterprising topic in East Brunswick, and particularly on Nelson street, where Roderick lives. The dog will not allow any one to tease the cat, and the cat resents any meddling with the dog. On Thursday morning a strange dog trespassed in the premises of Roderick's dog tackled him, but was getting the worst of the conflict when the cat, which had been watching the conflict from a distance, sprang to her friend's aid, jumped on the back of the strange dog and dug her teeth and claws into his back until he broke away and went howling down the street. Cat and dog then curled up together in a sunny spot and went to sleep.—New York Journal.

His Earthly Effects.

"Well, Uncle Jim," said the lawyer, "the doctor says there's no hope for you."

"Yes, suh; dey tells me I gwine ter cross over"

"Have you made your will?"

"Yes, suh; I done will ter go."

"I mean," said the lawyer, in an explanatory way, "have you got anything to leave?"

"Oh, yes, suh!" exclaimed the old man joyfully. "One wife an de rheumatism!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Old Tin Basin.

Gov. Leedy of Kansas recenty has boycotted the porcelain lavatory with its patent appliances in his office. He set up the water flowing, but was unable to shut it off, and he and the floor were deluged. Immediately he directed his private secretary to purchase for his personal use a tin washbasin.

"I was raised on that," he said, "and I am not afraid of being drowned when I use it.

OIL SHELL TO QUIET WAVES.

A shell for throwing oil upon the stormy seas from the shore, in order to reach wrecked vessels, has recently been invented and successfully tested.

The oil shell is a tin cylinder ten inches long that holds a quart of oil. the oil is kept in place by a brass piston at one end of the cylinder, which is connected by a rod to a wooden plug, which closely fits in the other, which is the rear of the shell.

The wooden plug projects three inches beyond the shell, and is grooved around its circumference and sets a feather to hold the shell in position during its flight. The head of the shell is also weighted with a band of lead to aid it in holding its position while in flight and in maintaining its direction. When the shell in its flight strikes the water the impact drives in the piston head, forces out the plug and liberates the oil.—New York Herald.

He Got His Match.

One cold and stormy evening last winter a prosperous-looking business man stopped in the vestibule of a large office building, on his way out, and attempted to light a cigar. An urchin with an armful of papers also stood within the arch, standing his feet on the stone step to warm them, as he lustily cried his wares.

The wind blew out the last match which the fur-coated broker had about his person, and he turned to the boy and said:

"Here, boy, give me a match."

The lad eyed the gentleman furtively, as he inquired, "Say, mister, is that a demand or a request?"

Instead of being angry at his reproof, the gentleman—for such he was—replied kindly:

"A request, my boy, a humble request; and I'll take a couple of evening papers, too, I guess," he added, as he received the match from the youngster's hand and handed him a quarter, "and you may keep the change."

"That man's got manners if he's a mind ter take time ter use 'em," said the boy as his patron boarded a car.

"That boy won't always have to sell papers if he practices what he preaches," thought the broker, as he sat down to read the news.

A Puzzle for the Barber.

Three brothers bearing a remarkable resemblance to one another are in the habit of shaving on the same barber's shop. Not long ago one of the brothers entered the shop early in the morning, and was shaved by a German who had been at work in the shop only a few days. About noon another brother came in and underwent a similar operation at the hands of the same barber. In the evening the third brother made his appearance, when the German, dropping his razor in astonishment, exclaimed: "Vell, upon my vord! dat man hash de fastest beard I never saw; I shaves him dis morning, shaves him at dinner-times, and he comes back now mit his beard so long as it never vash!"

SHERMAN'S BAD MEMORY OF FACES.

An Amusing Incident Due to His Forgetfulness.

Secretary Sherman is making himself talked about a good deal by his inability to recognize his former colleagues when they come to see him. The dignity of two distinguished members of the United States Senate sustained a severe shock during the last few days, when they called upon Secretary Sherman, and were obliged to introduce themselves to him. Mr Babcock, who has served as Mr. Sherman's secretary for nearly twenty-five years, usually whispers the names of the callers in the ear of his chief when he gets an opportunity, to do so, but when Mr. Sherman has no prompter he makes a mess of it. He never does know the members of the diplomatic corps apart, and when they are introduced to him he cannot pronounce their names. It is quite painful on diplomatic day to see him struggle with the tongue-tangling titles of the Ambassadors and Ministers from abroad.

It is even whispered that the venerable Senator did not recognize one of his colleagues in the Cabinet when they met at the residence of a friend the other day, but this is an old failing of his.

Some evidence of Sherman's preoccupation had recent exhibition when Newlands, of Nevada, called to make play for a consulship for which he seems a constituent was suffering. I was the day Voorhees died. Newlands and Sherman shook hands.

"That was sad news," quoth Sherman, with a look full of the sympathetic, yet far away. "That was very, sad about Newlands dying."

"What?" said Newlands, a bit disconcerted to be thus suddenly thrust into Summerland.

"Newlands, Newlands," repeated Sherman in tones of vague official grief; "the news of Newlands' death. He was a worthy Senator."

"You mean Senator Voorhees," corrected Newlands.

"No, Newlands," repeated Sherman, still vague, yet still tenacious. Newlands came away. He did not press for a consulship. Newlands said that to be thus cut down like a flower was too much for him. Nor did he think the Administration would heed a cry from the tombs in disposing of consulships. So Newlands filed sadly forth, and was dumb, opening not his mouth further.

JUBILEE SOUVENIRS.

Pretty Things in Silver for the Great British Celebration.

In selecting articles to commemorate the long reign of Queen Victoria the silversmiths have again brought silver spoons into vogue. Very handsome teaspoons have been made, with handles ornamented with a medallion of the Queen's head, encircled by "Victoria, Reg. 1837-1897," and surmounted with a fac-simile of the English crown.

An especially beautiful design for a dessert or bouillon spoon has the royal arms in enamel and the bust of the Queen delicately chased upon the handle, the two dates being upon the stem of the spoon, which has a round gold lined bowl.

Designs for dainty little two-tined berry forks have twisted handles, finished at the end with the Queen's face as it appears at present, or was at her coronation sixty years ago. Silver book markers are very appropriate souvenirs for one desiring a useful little article; the also is decorated with the Queen's medallion, the English crown and the dates. Tourists in Great Britain at this season will have no difficulty in securing suitable little remembrances for friends not so fortunate in attending the celebration. Almost everything is to be found, from the little silver bangle to a Victorian chair. New engraving effects have the pap bowl, mug, knife, fork and spoon ornamented with particular designs for the jubilee year.

In souvenir jewelry the Jubilee badge takes the form as a locket, brooch or a charm for a watch guard. It is of gold, with the head of the Queen in the centre encircled by precious stones. At the top is the English crown, with the monogram V. R. I. underneath. The words "Great Britain, India, and Colonies" are carved around in red and blue enamel. Upon the back of this badge is the inscription: "To commemorate the sixtieth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, 1897."

Perhaps the most original and attractive souvenirs are salt receivers of sterling silver, made after the model of the urchin in which the Queen when a baby was rocked. The salt spoon that belongs with this receptacle has the Queen's head chased in the round bowl, and a plain round handle finished at the end with the crown.—New York Sun.

In a Boston suburb a priest of one of the churches announced that a collection would be taken up to defray the cost of coal for heating the church. Everybody contributed but Tim—who gave a sly wink as the plate was presented to him, but nothing else. The priest noticed Tim's dereliction, but surmised that he might have left his money at home.

A similar contribution was levied the following Sunday. As before, every one gave except Tim, who looked sly. The priest wondered, and after service took his parishioner to task.

"Now, Tim," he said, "why didn't you give something if it was but little?"

"Faith, I'm oato yes," said Tim.

"Tim!"

"Yes, father."

What do you mean?"

"Oh, nothing. Just that I'm onto yes; that's all."

"Tim, your words are disrespectful and require an explanation. What do you mean?"

"Oh, faith, father, a-tharying to pull the wool over the eyes, a-tharying to make us believe yes wants the money to buy coal to heat the church, an' yer reverence knows it's heated by steam!"

STUDY OF INSECTS.

DR. LOVE TALKS ON THEIR STRUCTURE AND TRANSFORMATION.

Butterfly's Hollow Tongue Formed by Union of the Mandibles—Make-up of a Complicated Eye—Points About Insects' Wings and Legs.

After explaining the difference between parts and incomplete metamorphoses of insects, Dr. Love said: "Every insect has an upper and an under lip. The mandible lies between them, and if, some cases is developed to an enormous extent. Underneath, it is sometimes modified so that to form the 'glossa,' or tongue. Some of the insects find use for jaws, and some do not, and practically have none at all. The bee, who needs a pair of powerful jaws to crack the vegetable food he lives on, represents the former class. The butterfly, who absorbs his food by suction, as it is entirely liquid, represents the latter. His tongue is adapted to procure his food for him, just as the tongue of the honey bee is adapted to lapping, is the method by which the latter swallows.

"The proboscis, as it is called, of the common house fly is really an expansion of his upper lip, which he thrusts down into his food to convey it to his mouth. In appearance, it is like a leaf doubled over; one-half coming ally laps over upon the other when the proboscis is not in use.

"The tongue of the cricket is really a true tongue. The tongue of the butterfly consists of a tube, formed by the fastening of one mandible upon the other, with a small opening between. Through this the butterfly raises the fluids on which it lives by opening a small sac in its head. In this sac, which is controlled by powerful muscles, he can thus produce a vacuum, and draw up the liquid in which he has inserted his muscular and pointed tongue, the end of which is covered with little papilli, supposed to be the organs of taste.

"In studying the eyes of insects we find that those of the water beetle are among the most striking. When magnified it appears like part of the surface of a sphere, composed of many small hexagonal parts. This is the compound eye, and each of these hundreds of parts is a perfect eye in itself, the head of an inverted cone, the apex of which is connected by a nerve with the retina.

"An interesting feature of the wings of these little creatures is the 'powder' which they carry and which adheres to the fingers of their captors. It is made of a great number of scales from the wings themselves, but is by no means as brilliantly colored as it sometimes seems. Many insects with colored wings have absolutely colorless scales. The appearance of color in the latter is due solely to the light. There are 30,000 lines to the inch on each of these scales, so that the prismatic effect is easily understood.

"Nature provides a series of hooks on the front edge of the hind wings of insects, each hook fitting into a groove on the hind edge of a front wing. The front and hind wings are thus connected together on each side, while the insect is flying, and are unfastened at other times. This explains why you have occasionally noticed one of the species flying, apparently with two wings, and have seen him display four upon alighting. This arrangement is extremely convenient for such little creatures as the honey bee, which has to enter small holes, where a large expanse would be useless.

"In addition to their breathing, nat, as men and animals do, by the lungs, but through openings in all sides of the body. It has an intricate system of tubes running through all parts of its person, through which the air is brought in contact with legs, wings, and so on. These tubes are each protected by delicate membranes. In the fly there exists certain air-pouches, in addition to the tubes, which serve as reservoirs of air.

"Water insects use two methods of breathing. They either come to the surface to perform that function, or, as is frequently in the early stages of their existence, breathe by means of peculiar gills, which draw the oxygen out of the water and transfer it to the blood."

Entirely to Local.

Maurice Barrymore was once in London with a company which he was anxious to have reproduced. He had read it to a manager, and it had been decided that he was to play the leading role. About a week after it was supposed to have been definitely settled. Barry received a note from the manager, asking him to call.

Barrymore called and the manager said: "I like the piece, old fellow, but I don't see how I can use you in the cast. Your beastly American dialect won't do at all, you know. They won't have it."

"Well, that's strange," said Barrymore; "they told me on the other side that they wouldn't have me on account of my beastly English dialect. What am I to do—go recitations on the transatlantic steamers?"—San Francisco Argonaut.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The recent police census of Washington shows a population of 277,483 persons, 87,853 of whom are negroes. At first the significance of these latter figures does not occur to the casual observer. They represent the largest negro population of any city in the United States. Other cities may have a larger per cent. of their population black, as do some of the smaller Southern cities, but none has so many negroes as the capital has. In fact, excepting the cities of New Orleans and Louisville, no city of the South is as large as the colored population of Washington. Atlanta and Nashville are claiming their hundred thousand now, but the census of 1890 shows either of them as twenty thousand or more short of the blacks of Washington. In other words, if the black people of Washington should move down South and build themselves a city it would be the third city in size in all that section.

The present colored population is larger that the entire population of the District in 1800. It is larger than the population of either Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, Oklahoma, or Wyoming, and is greater than the vote for 1896 of Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, Vermont, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, or Wyoming.

It is larger than the entire Italian population of New York State and nearly half the Italian population of the United States, and more than half the entire French population of the whole country. The English, Irish, and German population of New York exceeds it, but it exceeds the Irish population of Boston by 3,000 and that of Chicago by 17,000. New York, Chicago and Brooklyn are the only cities which have more Germans than Washington has negroes, and there are nearly seventy thousand more negroes at the capital than its combined population, which is 18,770.

No city in the Union is equal in population to the colored population of the national capital except Boston, Denver, St. Paul, Providence, Indianapolis, Albany, and Columbus. It is larger than the Irish population of any city in the Union except New York and Philadelphia.

The bicycle is helping to expedite the clerical work of the executive departments at the State, War, and Navy building. Stands for bicycles were erected in the basement of the big stone structure some time ago. Others are now to be added, and a stationary pneumatic-tire pump has been placed in the courtyard. This extraordinary kindness on the part of the Government toward its employees is not wholly unselfish. The bicycle is a method in it, which an official instrumental in having the stands and pump erected explained to a Sun reporter.

"We found," he said, "that the men and women who ride wheels got down early in the morning, and decided that bicycle riding was a good thing to encourage. The cyclists are always on time, usually ahead of time, while many of those who walk or depend on the street cars are not. Then again the clerks who ride bicycles seem to lead a vigor lacking in some of the other employees. They spend more time in the open air, wheeling develops their muscles and brains, and altogether the bicycle is helping the Government, particularly the clerical efficiency."

The especial pet of Washington society at present is the new Secretary of the Turkish Legation, Seifeddin Bey, whose Apollo-like form and features have won for him the name of "The Greek God." He is one the handsomest and most dashing men attached to the Diplomatic Corps for many years, and is a striking figure in the daily promenade of the West End. Although a Turk of pure blood, Seifeddin would pass in any company not acquainted with his lineage for an American, Russian, or Englishman but a Turk. He is of medium size, strongly and compactly built, with a round head, covered with short, crisp, blond curls, and eyes as blue as those of a Scandinavian. His form and features vie with the pictures of the young gladiators of the Roman arena and the busts of Augustus Cæsar. Seifeddin Bey is very much of an American in his manners and dress, and but for the fact that he can scarcely articulate a word of English he would pass for a crowd for a typical New Yorker. His clothes are evidently made by a Fifth avenue tailor, and he is always dressed in the height of fashion. He astonished even the members of the Metropolitan Club last Sunday when he appeared on Connecticut avenue wearing a long black frock coat, a black silk hat, and gloves as white as the driven snow. At the running races at Bennings, patronized by the bonuty and fashion of Washington, who parade themselves in a private clubhouse from the spectators on the grand stand, the young diplomatist, wearing a loose-fitting sack suit and a white slouch hat much the worse for wear, was about the only one engaged in placing bets with the bookmakers and was constantly in and out of the stables studying the points of the runners. He seemed to be thoroughly informed on racing matters and perfectly able to make a bet intelligently despite his lack of acquaintance with English.

PIES THAT WEIGH A TON.

This country has long been pleased to consider itself the land of pies. But, as a matter of fact, a certain region of the English county of Yorkshire produces pies beside which no American pie would dare to make its appearance for many a generation.

Denby Dale periodically makes pies weighing a ton and upward. There was a pie last summer which weighed only fifteen hundredweight.

The last Denby Dale pie was made, cooked, carved and distributed only last summer, in celebration of the jubilee of the repeal of the Corn laws. The meats of which it was composed weighed nearly fifteen hundredweight. Half a ton of steel plates went to form the dish in which it was baked, and the dour for the crust added an equal weight. The oven that received this burden of nearly two tons measured thirteen feet in length by nine feet in width and two feet in depth. When nicely browned, the giant pie, gayly decked with flowers and guarded by mounted police, was drawn in procession by fourteen horses to the place of feasting.

Here, at a fixed hour, it was solemnly carved with a knife close upon three feet long and a fork of proportionate size, and served on commemoration plates. Persons who had paid for the privilege of thus tasting it. The edacious crowd numbered thousands, and few returned from the scene of festivity without a souvenir.

That was the sixth big pie to delight the epicures of Denby Dale. The first, which dates back more than a hundred years, was intended to mark the thankfulness of the inhabitants for the recovery of George III. from mental derangement. Nearly thirty years elapsed before another event occurred worthy of such a celebration. This was the battle of Waterloo. The oldest inhabitant cannot recall the Waterloo pie, but it was, no doubt, a famous affair, for, when another generation had come to maturity, it found a pattern for the great pie of '46, by which Denby Dale testified satisfaction at the repeal of the Corn laws.—New York Journal.

LUCK OF A BRIDESMAID.

She Caught the Bride's Bouquet and Discovered a Profitable Occupation.

Under ordinary circumstances, painting flower pots in water colors isn't a source of immense profit. Nevertheless, there is a girl in Boston who is reaping a rich harvest from it. It all began in this way. The young artist was one of the bridesmaids at the wedding of a friend, and when the bride was lucky one who caught the bride's bouquet when it was thrown to the maids. The idea occurred to her that it would be a graceful thing to make a sketch of the bouquet and give it to the bride; and being a girl with a fresh and versatile fancy, she set the sketch upon her popularity, and made her still more necessary to a wedding. She momentarily expects the frost to strike her, but, meanwhile, she gathers her harvest of shekels and sings hymns of praise to the ancient and honorable institution of matrimony.—New York Sun.

A Cousin by Adoption.

A correspondent of the Bookman suggests an interesting study in which it is hard and interesting: That Irving was a friend of the Knickerbockers of Schaghticoke is well known, but not, I think, the reason why he adopted himself into the family. While Harmon Knickerbocker, who was probably on intimate terms with Irving, was a member of congress, he had occasion to present Irving to President Madison, and in so doing facetiously introduced him as his "cousin-german, Diedrich Knickerbocker, from Schaghticoke." Irving was rather taken aback, but the subsequent so took his fancy that he made use of it as a pen name when he wrote his famous history of New York, in which he refers several times to his "cousin the congressman."

Monkey as an Imitator.

At Cheltenham, England, there lives a retired Admiral and his wife, who have a favorite monkey. One day recently the lady of the house, hearing noise in the dining room, looked in to see what it was. The sight which met her eyes was a ludicrous one. Seated in the armchair, with the Admiral's smoking cap on his head, and for Admiralty spectacles on his nose, was the monkey, and in his hand was the open newspaper, which he shook and patted, while he jabbered and gesticulated with great emphasis at the cat, which lay blinking on the hearth rug. It was a clever and carefully studied imitation of the testy old Admiral's tone and manner when reading to his wife some passages from the newspaper which excited his wrath or indignation picker worth $100,000 nation

A WOMAN'S HEART.

By Carl Baily Hurst.

The driving rain forbade our taking a walk, so we sat in the studio and smoked. The door opened suddenly, and it was late in the afternoon. From the window-seat where I lay I could look down on Broadway and see the crowd of clerks and shopgirls hurrying up town. The noise of wagons and street cars, the babble of voices, and the pattering of footsteps on wet pavements were borne noticeably to the third story of the old building which has stood for thirty years on a corner below Union Square. It is an old rookery, with rooms for artists and whosoever else will live in small quarters and not object to the odor of cooking wafted at all times from the gas-stoves of one's neighbors. The man in whose lodgings I was for the first time had lived there for over twenty years. He told me nothing could make him leave. He had become attached to the shaky stairs, the worn threshholds, and the dusty walls. It was here he had fought for fame—and had lost the battle; yet he would not remove.

We talked of a number of things—of art, of the ignorance of critics, of the capriciousness of fate—when I noticed my friend was not listening to me, but to some sound without. I heard it myself—a woman walking down the hall. She went to the door opposite my friend X.'s lodgings, and after fumbling with the lock a few seconds, opened the door and entered.

X. did not move. He only turned his head toward me, still listening; but hearing nothing more, he leaned back in his chair, saying simply, "She's late."

"In time for dinner, at any rate," I remarked.

"She doesn't live here."

"Oh! Only paints during the day, of course."

"She's not an artist; not even in a dilettante way. She used to paint, I believe; but I do not think she has had a brush in her hand for twenty years."

"Twenty years?"

"For twenty years she has had that room. None besides her has ever entered, except the janitor once or twice to put in a few panes of glass broken by the hall."

"As sane as you or I. I'll tell you about her. It's the story of a woman's heart, and the two people besides myself know why she has that little studio, if, indeed, they are aware she has it at all."

Then he was silent for a minute. I heard the noise of the street, and fancied I heard the woman moving in the room across the way. The story of a woman's heart. I mused—the story of a woman's heart. How many a one thinks he knows its depths or its shallowness, but what man has ever fathomed it? It is a spring of water, I thought. It reflects the clouds and the sunshine. It varies with circumstances. There is nothing constant in it. It smiles back brightly to the man who has brought himself nearest, but it will smile with the same ease and cheerfulness it mirrors his successor. A woman's heart, I laughed; there is no constancy in it.

"Listen," said X. "Not long after I returned from my two years at Munich I settled in the studio which you see me now. About the same time a young man of about my own age took the one across the way. There was more than a passing acquaintance between us. We exchanged confidences, and I learned that a wealthy woman, somewhat older than he, stood to him more or less as a patroness. There was some understanding that when he should become established they were to marry. He was an ambitious person, strong willed, and, I surmise, he decided to fashion the beginner's career to suit herself. But she was not sympathetic. His frequent discouragements she took as natural events in any young man's career. But to him the difficulties seemed enormous and insuperable, and the sympathy he craved he found elsewhere, in the daughter of a boarding-house keeper at whose establishment he took dinner. The patroness was frightfully incensed when she learned of the new intimacy. She stormed, but he said nothing. Then she cried bitterly, and begged him not to throw his life away on a woman who had not the least thing in common with him.

"The little drama stretched itself out for several months, until a violent quarrel separated for good the artist and his benefactress. The woman wanted him to break his recent attachment. She became arbitrary and insisted. The young fellow was already tired of the boarding house keeper's daughter, but this command ing made him obstinate, and throwing down the key of the studio, he swore he would never come near his easel again. When she saw he was really leaving, she calmed and implored him to stay, but he doggedly walked away. She sent him a note or more during the life that she would always wait until he returned. She would keep the studio, and that he must come back to her some time.

"That day he went to the woman scorned by the other, and a few days later together they drifted to the West, where one may be swallowed in the vastness and change, and be forgotten. The affair would have escaped me altogether had I not one day seen the former patroness coming to the studio, which, it seemed, she had kept, and to which she came once a fortnight. She did this for four or five years, until I read in the papers a notice of her marriage. For a year she never came near this place, but the studio was still unvacated. The janitor told me she rented the place by the year, and at the time of her marriage the studio belonged to her for several months longer. When the lease was expiring, she rented the room again, although she did not visit it. Incidentally I heard her marriage was a very unsatisfactory one, and that her husband treated her brutally. Once more she resumed her pilgrimages to the studio. But after her husband's death—for he died about two years after they were married—she kept away for another stretch of months; then she started once more, and she has now come at intervals ever since. She dusts the books and canvases, and keeps the room scrupulously clean. This much she has told me herself, although she is very reticent. But I have often wondered if she lingers over each object of her former love, as she does things generally, and thinks that he might now be near her had she been to him what she might have been. It is probably a solace for her to go there, and to feel that she keeps a place for his return; that she is watching for him, ready to welcome him, and to tell him that she loves him more than in those old days."

Then X was silent. Presently he resumed: "Perhaps he will return. But he has not returned yet. It is twenty years since he left."

"Yes," I said to myself, "a woman's heart indeed is like a spring. It gives forth at all times the same stream of water. The surface may reflect the sky, which passes near it, but in its depths, clear and unchanging, lies that which fell there first."

Neither of us spoke. X.'s story moved me strangely, although I am not over given to sentiment. The rain came beating against the windows, down on the foot-passengers in the street, and on the vehicles. The world seemed very gloomy. Unsteadily a man mounted to the top of the stairs near X.'s studio and entered the hall. He stopped not far away, but he made no sound. X. threw open the door, and I saw a man wasted with disease, thin and wrinkledly clad. The rain dropped from his clothing to the floor. One could read the ebb of life in his face, but it was haggard. He stood with his back to us, looking at the studio door opposite. He seemed not to hear us. He knocked, but there was no response. He knocked again. The door opened suddenly, and a woman stood in the threshold. The man held out his hands and said, brokenly:

"Sweetheart, sweetheart, I have come back for one glimpse of paradise."

With a cry the woman threw her arms about his neck, and, drawing him into the room, strained his wet, disheveled head to her breast.

X. closed his door quietly, and turning to me, said: "I always thought something like that would happen."—Harper's Weekly.

Ignorance in India.

Ignorance and superstition were among the greatest foes that the English Government had to overcome in dealing with the plague in India. It was found out by the authorities that one of the chief causes of the reluctance of the natives to enter hospitals was due to the fear that they would be killed, because they believed that the Queen, in revenge for the insult offered to her statue, had demanded the lives of 30,000 inhabitants of Bombay.—Philadelphia Ledger.

PEN POINTS.

It is not the expensive fashionable ball, but the cheap ball of the stuffy saloon, that causes misery in the end.

The prime of life is when we have learned to laugh at things that once would have made us weep.

Many a family that thinks it is keeping up appearances is keeping up nothing but a signal of distress.

Second thoughts may not be the best, but they are usually too late for the band wagon.

A drama may be too good to be popular with the masses. It is a good deal so with a man.

A true friend is one who will listen to your troubles and not tell you his own.—Truth

TOM'S SINGULAR DEMISE.

He Waited for the Boys to Fix Him Up Before He Would Consent to Die.

For weeks and weeks Tom Sheppard had been a sick man at our mining camp at Black Bear Valley, according to the Louisville Courier Journal. Everybody felt sorry for him, and yet a sick man in a mining camp was a great inconvenience and a burden. One day Judge Watkins went up to see him, and after finding him so perfectly comfortable that he had been for many weeks he said:

"Tom, I don't want to seem coldhearted about this thing, but the boys are beginning to wonder why you don't die or get well."

"Yes, reckon they are," replied Tom, "and you can tell 'em I'm going to die."

"Do you feel it's for the best, Tom?"

"I do. I ain't got much to live for, and might as well peg out now as any time. I've been waitin' for a week or two."

"Waitin'! For what?"

"Fur to die decently. I'm no lord or duke, but I want things fixed up in good shape. I want to be washed up, have my hair cut, and git hold of some decent duds and I won't die until I do."

The Judge told the boys what was required, and that afternoon two or three of 'em knocked off work and that night Tom's face was brought of one, a coat of another, and by and by the sick man was rigged out in the best the camp afford. When all this had been done he said:

"Now, then, I feel more like dyin', but there is one more thing I want. I want Joe Billings to come up with his fiddle and play me a few tunes."

Joe was sent for, and after considerable kicking he got his fiddle and went up to Tom's shanty. Tom was propped up in bed and waiting, and Joe sat down and struck in. The Old Oaken Bucket," "Old Folks at Home," "Nellie Gray," and half a dozen other well-known airs. He had been playing for an hour, his eyes on the invalid, when Judge Watkins looked in and said:

"Cut it off, Joe, Tom's dead!"

And so he was, and when the boys came to observe the pleased and contented look on his face they were agreed that he had died decently and been given a fair start on his way.

THE SULTAN PAINTS.

Not Pictures, but Bits Once When He Goes to the Mosque.

Turkish ladies of quality, and of the quality, paint their faces. The paint is applied with a new brush to a set of small bottles containing the paints, and set in a little pad or cushion. The cushion is adorned with a network and fringe of many colored beads. The practice of painting, however, is confined to the female sex. It is resorted to by the Padishah and the Pashas forming his inner circle. The Sublimity has a thick coat of rouge on his cheeks when he goes on Fridays to the mosque. It is to hide the pallor by which the Turk presentations of rise. The Grand Vizier and Ministers to keep him in countenance, rouge also, and dye their hair and beards.

As the Sultan's hair and beard are still jet black, he doubtless uses a hair restorer, which may affect his mind. He is very cunning, very patient in "pipe-laying," and has managed to become vastly wealthy and to shelve the Sublime Porte. But he is not of sound mind, and is afflicted with any number of manias that conflict with each other. The terror of assassination never leaves him.

Fishes on the Mountain-Tops.

It sounds queer to hear of fishes on the tops of mountains. One of the Welsh mountains has lakes, 1,800 feet high, and well stocked with roach and perch. One wonders how they got there, as they couldn't swim or walk up.

How do they get there, then? The general belief is that birds do it. One sort of bird by carrying the eggs in a well known that waterfowl distribute yellow perch by carrying the sticky eggs on their feet. Bass do not become distributed except by hand of man or by going up-stream. Trout go any where by leaping, but no trout can go up a waterfall. The water enough to float a chip, and pickerel get moved about from place to place the same as perch do

The costliest macadam on record once paved the streets of Kimberley, South Africa. This celebrated roadbed was studded with diamonds, and hundreds of valuable gems were taken from it. A peddler, forty years ago, while hawking his wares from farmhouse to farmhouse, found a shining stone by the wayside, and, thinking it might be of some value, sent it to a geologist, who at once recognized it as a fine diamond. That was the beginning of the great Kimberley diamond mines.

When at a Complex.

Your watch may be used as a compass. Point the hour hand to the sun, and the south is exactly half-way between the hour and the figure XII. on the dial. For instance, supposing it to be four o'clock, point the hand indicating four to the sun, and II. on the dial will point exactly south. Supposing it to be eight o'clock, then the figure X. on the face of the watch will show due south.

The Smallest Screw.

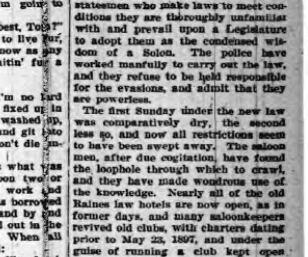
The smallest screws in the world are those used in the production of watches. The fourth jewel wheel screw is the next thing to being invisible, and to the naked eye it looks like a small gimlet. However, it is said to be a small screw, with 280 threads to the inch, and with a very powerful glass the threads may be seen quite clearly.

CYRUS THROP.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Each succeeding Sunday under the amended Raines law demonstrates beyond any shadow of doubt that the new law is a dismal and mirth-provoking failure—mirth-provoking for the saloon men and dismal for those whose duty it is to restrict the sale of liquor on the Sabbath Day. The statesmen who have predicted that the law would compel New Yorkers to go thirsty on Sunday or seek other more criminal climes are, like the doughty Douglass, defied. The ability of saloonkeeper to misconstrue a law and convince those whose duty it is to enforce it that his construction is right would open the eyes of even those statesmen who make laws to meet conditions they are thoroughly unfamiliar with and prevail upon a Legislature to adopt them as the condensed wisdom of a Soloo. The police have worked manfully to carry out the law, and they refuse to be held responsible for the evasions, and admit that they are powerless.

The first Sunday under the new law was comparatively dry, the second less so, and now all restrictions seem to have been swept away. The saloon men, after due cogitation, have found the loophole through which to crawl, and they have made wondrous use of the knowledge. Nearly all of the old Raines law hotels are now open, as in former days, and many saloonkeepers revived old ones with charters dating prior to May 23, 1897, and under the guise of running a club kept open house.



SUNDAY RAINES' CLUB.

"Silver Dollar" Smith's "Young Men's Cosmopolitan Club," situated in Smith's saloon; "The Grannery Club," in the notorious Navarre Music Dance Hall, and other like clubs had a notable recruit in the Broadway Garden. This place, which has been the scene of several raids by the police, and is the gathering place of many of the worst elements in the city, by some means managed to revive an old club with a sufficiently ancient license, and like the other places, is now open Sundays. A sign hanging over the cashier's desk announces that application for membership in the club would be received by the cashier, who, it was learned, was also secretary and treasurer of the club.

When the Republican leaders insisted against the protest of Tammany and the Republican organization in this city, in passing the Raines law amendments, it was suspected that they did so for the purpose of satisfying the demands of the country for a strong law by adding a big exception, and at the same time so wording the amendments as to afford opportunity for evasion in case the city authorities did not care to make an honest effort to enforce the enactment. In other words, the Republican organization of the city, though obliged to accept an unpopular law, is given a chance to escape by the opportunities for lax enforcement. Whether the law is really adequate to stop liquor selling in illegal hours remains to be determined until a vigorous effort is made to enforce it, just as Roosevelt enforced the old Excise law when he first became President of the Police Board. Deputy Chief Cortright, indeed, says that he is satisfied with the way the police have dealt with the new enactment, although he refers to the difficulty in dealing with notorious clubs which, having purchased old charters, are doing a regular liquor business under the guise of a regular club organization.

The Mayoralty contest has set out at such a lively pace that it is almost impossible to follow it. The control of Greater New York for four years will be in the hands of the party fortunate enough to capture it. The enlarged city will spend $70,000,000 a year and have 23,000 persons on its payrolls. One result seems to be foreshadowed by the early agitation that has started, and that is that the next small man will be elected Mayor. Whatever his politics, the man himself must have a character measuring up to the dimensions of the great office. Nearly all the men thus far mentioned for the Mayoralty are of the grade known as "first-class." Even "Lou" Payn names as his first choice Cornelius N. Bliss, Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Bliss may now, therefore be considered as the first choice of the Republican organization. General Benjamin F. Tracy in reserve. It will be remembered that the Platt men urged Bliss for the Cabinet and the President took them at their word and selected him. Would the Platt men be really pleased if the President took them at their word and actually chose Mr. Bliss for Mayor? It may be said that Mr. Bliss entered the Cabinet with reluctance, and prefers to reside in New York. But he has accepted the Cabinet place it was understood that he had enlisted for a full term. Three years ago Mr. Bliss might have been the candidate for Mayor instead of Strong, but he declined to run. Most of the other men named as candidates are, like Low and Schieren, of the highest standing. The only two of a second grade proposed for the office are Congressman Quigg, for whom Mr. Platt has a strong liking, and Lieutenant-Governor Woodruff, who is suggested by Payn as second to Bliss.

NO ROOM FOR ROAD HOGS.

There are so many road hogs on bicycles and in wagons, so many respectable riders who are ignorant of the ordinary rules and ordinances with reference to riding and driving, and such a demand for a definite and reliable statement of the rights and privileges of all who use the highways, that it has been suggested that all these matters should be fixed by statute. There are reason and commonsense in the suggestion. A few years ago bicycle riders did not know and could not know what ordinances governed them with reference to lamps, bells, etc., when they left one borough and went into another. There were no rules at all in some and very severe penalties in others. In 1896 the Legislature passed a law requiring uniform ordinances in all cities, boroughs and townships, and now the law is the same everywhere. There should be uniformity of rules and regulations with reference to passing wagons and carriages, with reference to turning out upon carriages and bicycles meeting, and in short, with reference to all the privileges of the road. Courteous drivers and riders have no difficulty, but the road hogs need to be restrained.—Elizabeth Journal.

STOP THE THIEVING.

The somewhat startling frequency with which burglaries are now occurring in Westfield and other nearby towns, suggests a need for those localities of an organized effort by the local authorities for the protection of property. A night patrol, if properly conducted, with trustworthy men as watchmen, ought to give a fair degree of security. Where such a system has failed, it has general failed because it was laxly administered. With a proper system of time registers, patrolman can be kept constantly on their rounds during the night, and when this is accomplished, the business of the professional burglar becomes at once more difficult and more serious. This is only a suggestion, however. The point to be borne in mind is, that action of some sort is needed at once to check the wholesale pillaging that is going on.

TOO MANY BILLS.

Too many laws; too much government. In New York the Legislature passed this year nearly a thousand bills, and Gavernor Black has signed about 800 of them. In New Jersey the new laws will run well up into the hundreds, although Governor Griggs killed nearly a hundred of the bills passed by the Legislature. What under the sun is the use of so many laws, for all these are in addition to thousands of laws already on the statute books. There are too many laws; they are too complicated and conflicting. Even the courts can't reasonably construe them. The people are governed altogether too much.—Elizabeth Journal.

HIS FAME WANES.

Notwithstanding the fact that Congressman Fowler presumes to keep the newspapers of New Jersey well acquainted with his part in the National Legislature, by frequent distribution of documents in which his name is the principal thing that greets the eye on the title page, the Burlington county editor has erred greviously by referring to the rotound Union county statesman as Mr. Flower. Down in the Port the Congressman may sometimes be referred to as a "peach," but to be spoken of as a perfumed and spectacular plant growth is an appellation hardly expected.

AFFECTING BENEFICIAL ORDERS.

In a recent suit of a member of a secret and fraternal society to recover sick benefits claimed to be due him, the justice nonsulted the plaintiff on the ground that he had not laid his case before the highest court or tribunal known to the order, the Supreme Court of New Jersey, having held that members of fraternal societies must exhaust every remedy known to their order before resorting to courts of law. This is a point that members of lodges and other societies will do well to make a note of.

EDUCATIONAL MATTERS.

CONDUCT OF CITY SCHOOLS CONSIDERED AND DECIDED ON.

Changes in the Corps of Teachers Made Necessary by the New Departments That Have Recently Been Established.

The appointment of the teachers for the next school year was the principal business that attracted the attention of the Plainfield Board of Education at its meeting, last Monday. It was the regular June meeting of the Board, the last before the public schools close for the summer, and there were several details for the Commencement to be arranged.

The meeting was held in the Board room in the Stillman building and all the members, the clerk and Superintendent Maxson were present. After the usual list of approved bills were read and ordered paid and other routine business transacted, the Board considered a bill from the Dunellen Board of Education for tuition of pupils living in the city limits but close to Dunellen. The bill amounted to $20.42 and was ordered paid if found correct.

The regular communication was received from Collector Bird, showing that taxes amounting to $936.72 had been collected, with interest amounting to $73.42, making a total of $1,009.-06, which had been deposited in the First National Bank to the credit of the Board.

A communication from the Mutual Life Insurance Company announced that interest of $950 was due. The interest was ordered paid and also $1,000 toward the principal.

A circular letter from the Department of School Administration, of Wisconsin, was read, telling of the annual convention of School Board Associations at Milwaukee. The Board was invited to send a delegate. The clerk was instructed to acknowledge the receipt of the invitation, and it was remarked that any member who cared to go would be made the delegate. It is probable, however, that Plainfield will not be represented.

Stevenson R. Hope, janitor of the Bryant School, wrote to the Board asking for a vacation of ten days after school closes, stating that his son would look after the building. The Board gave him a favorable reply.

Although the members of the Board have been in session almost all forenoon regarding the appointment of a janitor for the old Seventh day Baptist church edifice, which is now being converted into an overflow school, there was but one formal application made to the Board. It was from H. C. Corea and was placed on file to await action. It was suggested by one of the Board that there should be one janitor for the Wadsworth school and the old church as neither was very large nor required much time.

A check from Superintendent Maxson was received by the Board, representing fines paid to him for damage done to the school books by the pupils.

Mr. Maxson also reported the request of Miss Force, of the Bryant school, that she be relieved of her duty as pianist for the morning exercises and be allowed to continue her other duties at her present salary. As she has been a teacher in the school for twenty-five years, the Board decided that she was justified in making the request and granted it. Mr. Maxson stated that Miss Mabel Mitchell was recommended by Miss Bullock, the principal, and other of the teachers to fill the vacant place. The Board accepted the recommendation and advanced her salary $25 for the extra work.

There was a general discussion over the question as to whether the Board should continue to pay the car fare for the teachers who teach in the Irving school. Mr. Maxson explained that it was done because there were no suitable boarding houses within easy walking distance of the school house and that the car fare had hitter to been allowed to equalize the advantages of the other schools. Mr Lounsbury thought that all should have the same chance, but the rest of the Board was in favor of continuing the old plan.

President Probasco next read the report of the committee on teachers. Miss Sims, of the Washington school and Miss Low, of the Bryant school, had declined reappointment and the committee recommended for their places, Miss Genevieve Leading for the Washington school and Miss Agnes B Freeman for the Bryant school. They also recommended Miss Blanche A. Voorhees to take the place at the Bryant school of Miss Susie Davies, who is appointed to the Lincoln kindergarten and Miss Ines B. Green to supply the place made vacant by Miss Marshal, who declined appointment before the list was made up. The rest of the teachers will remain in the same positions as last year. The report of the committee was adopted without change.

The judges for the English composition and penmanship competitions were next selected as follows:—English composition, Mrs. Israel C. Person, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, and Mrs. Hugh Hastings; penmanship, Frank E. Kinsman, Dr. T. S. Davis, and Rev. Charles E. Herring. The Board then went into executive session.

The financial statement for the month was as follows:—Receipts—From City Collector, $1,009.05; payment on loan to building account, $2,000; total, $3,009.05. Payments—teachers, janitors and clerk, $4,460 59; school books and supplies, $223 53; repairs, etc., $193.76; building account, $9.38; sundries, $356.21; total, $5,194.50 City National Bank, $2,455'87. First National Bank, $1,884 48.

After a brief executive session, the Board met again in open session. J. F. Hubbard was present to explain matters regarding the necessary changes at the old Seventh-Day Baptist church edifice. Mr. Hubbard reported that he could make the changes according to the plans presented for a little less than $4,000, and his bid was accepted. Work will begin tomorrow. The Seventh-Day Baptist Society has agreed to remove the steeple and put in two rows of windows in place of the old ones. The Board will divide the first floor into four class rooms and lay a floor so that other class rooms may be made on the second floor when necessary.

There was also a discussion regarding the plans for the proposed addition to the Stillman building to accommodate the sanitary toilet rooms which have been requested by the Board of Health. The old shed in the centre of the yard will be removed as has already been told in The Press. It was definitely decided that the addition will be built, although the contract has not been formally awarded

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. V., and one of the most widely known men in the state was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing could be done for me and my friends were fully convinced that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June 1894, Mr. Evens, then salesman fo the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured." A Victory for Science.

A TORTURED WOMAN CURED BY CAPSULOIDS.

The Remarkable Experience of a Philadelphia woman. Her Blood Turned to Water and Life Was Slowly Ebbing Away. The New Discovery of Science Saved Her Life.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

One of the first persons in this country to be benefited by Capsuloids, the new discovery of science, is Mrs. Hans Bensall, 2323 Jefferson street, Philadelphia. Mrs. Bensall's blood was turning to water. Her limbs were palsied with weakness, her head was tortured with neuralgia, her back was racked with indescribable pain. She was incapacitated for the ordinary duties of life.

That she lives to-day is remarkable. That she is as full of health, as buoyant of spirit, as radiant of face as any woman the mind of artist ever conceived, borders almost on the miraculous.

"Yes," she said to a reporter, "my case has puzzled physicians. All of the time-worn methods of treatment were tried but they had no effect in my case. The physicians who treated me failed to find the trouble was with my blood, but it proved beyond their reach until this new remedy, Capsuloids, was tried and then I recovered.

"I was married quite young and my trouble commenced shortly after. Despite the watchful attention of my husband and the skill of physicians my suffering increased. I lost appetite, strength and flesh, and pounds. I was so weak the least exertion exhausted me, my head was a nest of torture, my back and limbs ached with pain and I prayed as if death would be a relief. I frequently fainted without any apparent reason. I looked so much like a corpse I frightened me to see myself in a glass.

"Shortly after Christmas of this year I was attacked with the grippe, and was confined to my bed for nine weeks. After I struggled to my feet I seemed weaker than ever and my old troubles were aggravated. I was despairing of life and the thought of death was welcome. When my father heard of Capsuloids, the new discovery, he and my husband determined to try them at all events. Then it was decided necessary to send to England for them where we understood they had produced wonderful cures in the hospitals.

"Fortunately, we were able to secure the Capsuloids in this country, and I began using them. Almost from the first I noticed a physician. Before the first box was finished I felt new life coursing through my veins; my limbs grew stronger, the throbbing pains in my head ceased, my back no longer ached, I felt I was getting well. My husband and my friends were overwhelmed with joy.

"To-day I weigh 117 pounds. My appetite is enormous, my household work a pleasure, and I fully appreciate the great blessing of good health."

Mr. Bensall who was present, fully corroborated the statement of Mrs. Bensall, and the reporter left the house with the belief that the practice of medicine was indeed on the verge of revolution.

This case substantiates the latest theory of leading scientists, that nearly every disease can be traced not only to the blood but to the fact that the blood is deficient in fibrin, the office of which is to attract oxygen, the vital element of life.

Physicians have long sought a method of restoring to the blood this natural iron with but meagre success. Dr. Campbell, of London, discovered that the blood of healthy bullocks contained iron in the same condition as it exists in human blood. To extract it required ingenuous methods, the invention of new devices. Nothing daunted Dr. Campbell persevered until success crowned.

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids are sold by all leading druggists at 50 cents per box, or mailed for $2.50, or sent direct at the same price from the office of The Capsuloid Company, Downing Building, 108 Fulton Street, New York City.

NOVEL BURGLAR ALARM.

THE MARAUDERS' VOICES HEARD THROUGH A SPEAKING TUBE.

H. C. Christianson Made Aware of the Thieves and Then Fired a Revolver and the Former Soon Made Their Departure.

H C Christianson, who lives on the county road near the Fanwood station, has a rather novel burglar alarm, which served him faithfully Sunday, when it gave notice of the presence of two burglars at the back door of his residence. The alarm which did its work so well is an ordinary speaking tube which runs from Mr. Christianson's sleeping room to the kitchen.

Sunday night at about 12:30 o'clock Mrs. Christianson was awakened by a noise and listening she heard the voices of two men in conversation. She aroused her husband, and it was found that the sound of the voices came through the speaking tube from the kitchen.

Mr. Christianson, thinking that the men were inside of the house, raised a window and fired off a revolver to frighten them away. The shooting had the desired effect, as the two men downstairs quickly disappeared, running to the woods behind the house.

An investigation showed that the thieves had not entered the kitchen, but were at work trying to open the back door when the speaking tube upon the inside caught the sound of their voices and carried it upstairs.

RECEPTION TO BICYCLERS.

Y. M. C. A. Members in Adjoining Towns Given a Good Time.

Sixty-seven cyclers came on the bicycle run to Plainfield on Saturday afternoon and they were well entertained at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association. It was after 9 o'clock before some of the wheelmen arrived. The run was to have been on Friday evening, but on account of the weather was postponed to Saturday evening. Having so little time in which to notify the associations, several associations were not represented on Saturday. It was thought by Heywood, the physical director of the local association, that over 100 cyclers would be present, but on account of the reasons already given that number of wheelmen did not show up.

Following is the list of associations represented and also the number present: Rahway, 16; Roselle, 5; Madison, 7; Montclair, 3; New Brunswick, 7; Elizabeth, 21; Summit, 8.

The next run of the league will be made on the 17th of this month, and will be to Madison.

A TRIO OF LOST BOYS.

Cried Because They Did Not See Their Aunt —Glad Her Address All the Time.

Saturday afternoon, Boundsman Flynn found three little boys crying at the North avenue station. Between their sobs, they explained that their elder brother had put them on the train at Jersey City and that their aunt, whose name they did not know, was to meet them here. They did not find her and therefore wept accordingly. They gave their names as James, William and John Monroe, of 363 East Seventy-first street, New York, aged ten, eight and six years respectively.

Chief Grant telephoned to New York to find their destination in this city when the oldest of the three produced a slip of paper with the name and address of his aunt, which he had had in possession all the time but had forgotten in the excitement. Their aunt was Mrs. Mackafee, of 137 Berekman street, and the children were escorted to her home by Chief Grant.

More

Curative power is contained in Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other similar preparation. It cost the proprietor and manufacturer more. It costs the jobber more and it is worth more to the consumer. More skill is required in its preparation and it combines more remedial qualities than any other medicine. Consequently it has a record of more cures and its sales are more than those of any other preparation. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to buy because it is an honest medicine and thousands of testimonials prove that it does actually and permanently cure disease.

Knights Templar Field Day.

The Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of New Jersey will hold its field day at Morristown, on Thursday, October 14th. There will be the drill and dress parade and the banquet in the evening. Trinity Commandery, of this city, has secured its headquarters at the United States Hotel, in which the Grand Commandery has also established its headquarters. The field day was held in this city, last year and proved a very successful affair. This year the people of Morristown will be given a chance to show their hospitality.

Protect yourself against sickness and suffering by keeping your blood rich and pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Weak, thin, impure blood is sure to result in disease.

IS IT A SUSTAINER?

How much manual labor do you think you do in a day? A post-man averages about 353 footsteps. An ordinary laborer 350 tons. A very hard day's work would be 400 tons. A clerk or bookkeeper may fall as low as from 15 to 20 tons. In Weston's recent walk to Albany, 150 miles, in 60 hours, we calculate his work was no less than 1005 footsteps, and his food consisted entirely of

H-O

Oatmeal. As an ideal sustainer, H-O meets every demand.

A Young Life Cut Short.

A large circle of friends and acquaintances will learn with the deepest sorrow of the death of Walter Drake, aged twenty years, which occurred Monday afternoon at the house of his father, David Drake, Prideville. The deceased had been ill about nine days with pneumonia and Monday he grew rapidly worse. For several years he had been in the employ of Dr. C. B. Tilton, the dentist, of Grove street, and he was very popular among the young people of Plainfield and North Plainfield. The funeral will be held from Holy Cross church Thursday afternoon next at 3 o'clock.

"There's no use in talking," says W. H. Broadwell, druggist, La Cygne, Kas., "Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy does the work. After taking medicines of my own preparation and those of others, I took a dose of Chamberlain's and it helped me; a second dose cured me. Candidly and conscientiously I can recommend it as the best thing on the market." The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

LEGISLATED FOR CITY.

COMMON COUNCIL CARE FOR THE WELFARE OF ITS CONSTITUENTS.

Charge Made Against a Fireman—Ben Hall's Case to be Carried to a Higher Court—Not to Interfere With Bicyclists.

The city fathers were all present at the regular June meeting of the City Council held last Monday and peace and harmony reigned supreme. One man occupied a seat in the lobby and before the meeting adjourned he retired. There was not a great deal of important business transacted, but that which was considered was put through in a reasonable amount of time.

Residents of Netherwood avenue, between North avenue and George street, asked for two electric lights, and the merchants of the city asked that the centre of the town be illuminated with eleven arc lights instead of the incandescent lights. Both petitions were referred to the proper committees. The Plainfield Water Supply Company, in a communication, stated that three additional fire hydrants had been located as directed by the Council and were now ready for use.

Petitions were received from J. O. Campbell and Wm. Rockwell, in which they presented their side of the case in the matter of the collection of back taxes under the Martin Act. Mr. Campbell's bill amounts to $205.53, and Mr. Rockwell's is $17.50. The former stated that he was assessed for more property than he owns, but is willing to settle the bill for $100. Mr. Rockwell said that he has a certificate showing that his taxes are paid, and that he only owns half of the property for which he is assessed. Both matters were referred and the clerk was instructed to communicate with the two petitioners, telling them that the matter of settlement had passed out of their hands and would be referred to the Commissioners appointed to adjust such cases.

In a letter the Mayor stated that charges had been presented to him by J. L. Blackford against L. S. Dunavan, a member of the fire department. The charges are that on the evening of May 19th, the defendant assaulted Mr. Blackford by striking him with his fist in the breast, and that by so doing did violate an ordinance regulating the fire department. These matters were placed in the hands of the Fire and Building Committee.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, in a communication, presented several matters to the council for their consideration. The case of the City against Benjamin Hall was cited first. Mr. Marsh stated that the Common Pleas Court had set aside a conviction of City Judge DeMeza in imposing a sentence of fine and imprisonment upon Benjamin Hall, and he doubted whether the above Court had the authority to do such a thing. He asked the council to give him the power to take the case to a higher court for the purpose of ascertaining the right in the matter. Later in the evening the power was granted. Mr. Marsh also reported concerning the case of Michael Watson. He said that Watson had been released upon a technicality purported to have been committed in the office of City Judge DeMeza by a clerk who had accepted a plea previous to the trial of the case.

The last matter reported on by Mr. Marsh was regarding the bonds of the Plainfield Sanitary Company. The bonds were referred back owing to the fact that the location of the plant was not located in the bond. The matter was adjusted and later in the evening the bonds were referred to Mr. Marsh for certification.

Street Commissioner Gavett reported $32 having been received from the granting of sewer permits, and Chief Doane for the Board of Engineers reported the resignation of Abner Bartlett from Alert Hose Company, and the election of R. F. Murray as first assistant and Townsend Rushmore as second assistant foreman of the company. The resignation was accepted and the election of Messrs. Murray and Townsend was confirmed. Chief Doane, as inspector of buildings, reported that twenty-one permits had been granted during the month. This report, together with the monthly reports of the Collector and Treasurer, was filed.

Mr. Barrows stated that the Police Board had been given the option of three places for a police station, but in the judgment of the committee it was thought best for the city to erect a building of its own, and he asked for the committee the privilege of taking the preliminary steps toward the erection of a suitable building for the above-named purpose. The permission was granted and the committee will first learn under what law they can proceed and they will then report to the Council.

On a motion offered by Mr. Baker the bills of the three Madison Avenue Commissioners for $85 each, the bill of Seaman Williams for $25 for services on the avenue, and also the bill of F. A. Dunham for $137.25 for services, were ordered paid. These bills are for work done in attempting to secure the opening of Madison avenue, which failed.

Mr. Stebbins offered a motion that 1,000 copies of the building ordinance be printed, as the supply was exhausted. The motion was adopted.

Mr. Runyon reported on the matter concerning the petition of the physicians of the city asking the council to take some steps to prevent cycle riders from carrying children on wheels. Mr. Runyon said that he had consulted with the Corporation Counsel in the matter and was informed that the city has no right to legislate in the matter.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Baker which fixed the salary of Collector Bird for 1897 at $2,000 for all work outside of the special work of collecting the sewer tax, and for the latter work he is to receive $500.

Mr. Frost offered an ordinance accompanied by a map which provides for the widening of Westervelt avenue, as previously reported to the council. The ordinance was adopted on its second reading and was ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

At this time Mr. Frost asked the Council for the necessary power to purchase a watering cart for street purposes. He said that one could be secured for $200 and it was very much needed by the city in the work on the streets. The request brought out a considerable amount of discussion on the part of the members, some of whom thought it would be just as cheap to hire a wagon. Mr. Frost and Mr. Barrows were successful in convincing the remaining members that the wagon is needed, and a resolution was adopted to the effect that a suitable watering cart be purchased at a cost not to exceed $200. Mr. Dumont voted in the negative on the question for the reason that he thought the appropriation for street work would not allow such an expenditure.

The vote on the substitute resolution granting the Plainfield Sanitary Company the right to establish their plant was divided. Messrs. Newman, Runyon and Stebbins voted in the negative. It was necessary that the plant should be located in the bonds before they could be accepted and in consequence a resolution to that effect was offered as a substitute for the one which was defective.

In accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Barrows the use of the Council rooms is now available for all contested city court cases.

Mr. Frost reported on the petitions from residents along the line of the street railway in which they asked the council to take some steps toward having the Street Railway Company sprinkle the streets through which the road travels. Mr. Frost stated that he had interviewed both Mr. Riker and Superintendent Adleman. From the former he had been given assurances that the company were willing to do what is right, but Mr. Adleman had informed him that the company could not afford to sprinkle their streets at a cost of about $7 per day, which amount it would cost them.

On a motion of Mr. Barrows the ordinance relating to the opening of Sycamore avenue was adopted on its third reading, after which the Council adjourned to meet in two weeks.

Sprained Her Legs

Mrs. Robert Luckey, of Orange street, sustained a severe injury last Saturday afternoon while riding a wheel owned by one of the members of her family. She was thrown from the wheel and one of her leg was so badly strained that she is now confined to the house and unable to walk. Dr. Jenkins is in attendance.

APPEAL TO MINISTERS.

ANTI-GAMBLING AMENDMENT SAID TO BE IN DANGER OF DEFEAT.

Leader of the Crusade Against the Race-tracks Sends a Letter to all Pastors in the State Urging Them to Action.

Rev. Dr. Kempshall, the anti-race-track crusader and president of the Citizens' League, sent out Saturday to all the clergymen in New Jersey the following document:

"Dear Brother—This circular letter is addressed to the pastors of churches in New Jersey in order to 'stir up their minds by way of remembrance' of the vote which is to be cast on September 28 next upon the anti-racetrack amendment to the Constitution, which is now submitted by the Legislature to the people for their approval or disapproval.

"We have good reason for believing that a determined and desperate effort will be made to defeat this amendment. There is no less reason to fear that, unless the friends of this measure are thoroughly awake to the danger and prepared to marshal their forces in full strength at the appointed time, this effort may be successful.

"Our success up to the present point has been gained very largely through the efforts of the pastors of our churches, with the cordial co-operation of the press of the State, in informing the people and arousing them to concerted action against the iniquities of the race-track gambling. We turn to you again in most urgent appeal that you will not relax one iota in your interest and vigilance in this question of so momentous importance to the civil and moral interests of New Jersey. One more determined effort, dear brethren, and by the help of God, victory, final and complete, will be ours. We are only asking of you now that you keep this issue, in full realization of its importance, upon your minds and hearts."

JERSEY'S REPUBLICAN CLUBS.

Delegates to the National Convention Chosen.

The executive committee of the Republican State League of Clubs held a meeting Saturday evening at the rooms of the Republican Club in Trenton and selected five delegates to represent this State in the National Convention of Republican Clubs at Detroit, July 13th. The delegates are B. B. Howell, of New Brunswick; ex-Speaker Louis T. Dercusse, of Camden; Assemblyman Harry E. Gledhill, of Paterson; John P. Landrine, of Jersey City, and Edmund C. Hill, of Trenton.

A resolution in favor of holding national conventions biennially instead of annually was adopted. It was also decided to hold a State convention during the second week in September. The exact date and the place were left with the Chairman. The basis of representation to the State convention will be five delegates from each club.

CRUSHED UNDER A SPRINKLER.

Wheels Passed Over William Corbett's Head and Caused Instant Death.

William Corbett, of Mendham, was instantly killed Friday near Bernardsville. He was driving a sprinkling cart and at noon fed his horses on the road where he was working, taking the bridles off the horses.

Mr. Corbett, who was a small man, was unable to put the bridles on again, and in trying to reach the horses' heads he stood upon the tongue of the cart. The horses became frightened and ran, throwing Mr. Corbett to the ground. The wheels of the cart passed over his head, crushing the skull.

GROWING PLAINFIELD.

If the word of contractors and builders in other sections of New Jersey can be relied upon, Plainfield is growing faster than any other city in the State. On good authority the Press learns that today there is more building going on in this city than in Newark, a city fifteen times as large. So far as the comparative amount of building in such towns as Elizabeth, New Brunswick and Rahway goes, Plainfield is doing a good deal more than all three combined. There is every reason to believe that in another decade Plainfield—that is, city and borough together—will crowd the 30,000 population mark.

Fell and Broke His Arm.

Henry Boose, of Grove street, while playing upon the roof of the Babcock building, Saturday evening, fell off at the rear of the building. Both bones of the boy's forearm were injured and a bad bruise was sustained upon the forehead. He was taken to the office of Dr. Endicott where ether was administered and the bone was set.

WHAT'LL VOORHEES DO?

AN INTERESTING SITUATION FOR THE JERSEY REPUBLICANS.

The Union Senator Bound to Bob Up as a Pesky Problem in the Gubernatorial and U. S. Senatorship Campaign.

One fact was developed at the recent special session of the Legislature which has thus far received but little attention. His importance with relation to the United States Senatorial campaign is bound to bring it out in all its pesky obtrusiveness, however, and it will rise up to vex the Republican managers in the days to come. Toward the close of the late regular session of the Legislature, in which so much peanut politics figured, it was conspicuously noticed that a severe frost has settled upon the relations of Governor Griggs and Senator Foster M. Voorhees, leader of the majority in the Senate.

The demonstration of disaffection came during the Senatorial caucus on Monday night last, preceding the extra session. There was a long, informal talk among the fourteen Republican Senators as to the course to be pursued. It was a well established and thoroughly understood fact that the Governor and the other State leaders desired the Legislature to simply correct the typewriter's error in the anti-gambling amendment and skedaddle home. How well the leaders had things in hand was demonstrated later when the crucial test came. Many of the Senators had felt the withering stroke of the veto pen upon pet measures, and they hoped to gather enough support to resurrect these bills from the "executive graveyard," but they were enjoined by the leaders to leave it all alone because the regular session had done enough mischief for one year. At length it was unanimously agreed that no new legislation should be considered and that the vetoed bills should be allowed to moulder in their grave.

Senator Voorhees was not entirely satisfied. Holding fast to the theory that the proposed judiciary amendment to the Constitution was not new business, but simply the taking up of neglected duty, he made an earnest plea for his amendment. But when put to a vote Voorhees was the only one who gave it an affirmative; all the others were opposed to bringing up any subject whatever except the correction of the typewriter's error.

Surprised by the unanimity with which his request was turned down, disappointed over the turn affairs had taken and chagrined by the apparent disregard of his colleagues for the wishes of the people, Senator Voorhees restrained himself with difficulty. He warned the Senators that a day would surely come when this act would rise up to vex them. He said it was a mistake they would regret some day and he intimated pretty openly that Governor Griggs was back of it all; that the fight had been made, purely personal for political reasons and that the one to blame for the blunder would come face to face with his day of reckoning.

Now, this unpleasant and dangerous family disturbance among the Republicans bodes no good and if the Democrats can only pour oil on their wounds they will find a way open to them to walk off with the two big prizes which the people of the State have in waiting for somebody. The Griggs influence is more likely to grow in strength and virulence in the coming summer when the wire pulling at the county fairs and the seashore resorts begins. Voorhees is a power among the younger element of the party. In very truth it would not surprise many if that were the secret of the opposition to him. He loomed up as a probable obstacle in the state making.

He had led the fight for the selection of his warm friend and colleague, Senator Stokes, as Secretary of State. When that effort failed and Stokes was turned down, Voorhees declined to keep up his spirit and activity. His outburst at Monday night's caucus was not the first intimation of his displeasure. He had showed on previous occasions that he was disappointed with the turn events had taken, particularly as he had played a somewhat conspicuous part in shaping up a course which he calculated would be steered by the Republican ship of State. Now, the question arises:

What will Voorhees do?

Surely he will be needed in the campaign so rapidly approaching. He will remain a member of the Senate to vote for a successor to United States Senator for James Smith. He may again be a candidate for Governor.

Whatever happens Voorhees must be spelled with a big V and the prospects for smooth running for the great Republican machine are not over bright.

Seeking an Assailant.

The Hunterdon County authorities are seeking the person who is charged by John Cronce, a well-to-do farmer living near Oak Grove, whith attempted assassination. Cronce was on his way toward Flemington late in the evening with his two children. While passing a lonely spot a bullet fired from ambush whizzed past Cronce and struck his horse, which fell dead in the road.

TO ENLARGE THEIR HALL.

SAENGERBUNDS FIND THAT THEY NEED MORE ROOM.

An Extension to be Made to the Rear of the Present Building, and the Basement Altered in Many Important Ways.

The monthly meeting of the Gesang and Turn Verein was held Thurs day when much business was transacted. Two members were elected and four applications were received. The members decided to pay a visit to the Aurora Singing Society during the first part of next month, and Henry Haurand, Rudolph Spiegel and Louis Moraller were appointed a committee to arrange for the trip which will be made on some convenient Sunday.

The building committee, of which Robert Jahn is the chairman, made a report and presented plans and specifications for the proposed new additions to the present structure. The extension to the building in the rear will be 24 feet and 44 feet wide. A perfect system of ventilation will be introduced, and in the addition a commodious stage, with dressing rooms, will be erected. The bowling alleys will be made the regulation size and the dining room will be enlarged considerably. A great change will be made in the basement so that it will be large enough to use for any ordinary purpose, such as to hold meetings or social gatherings if the upper part is in use. The entire building will be heated with hot water and every modern convenience, including bath rooms for men and women, will be provided.

Mr. Oakley is the architect and when the improvements are completed they will cost the society about $4,000. Owing to the lateness of the hour last evening the members adjourned for two weeks when a special meeting will be held for the purpose of considering in detail the proposed changes.

A CONVICTION VACATED.

MICHAEL WATSON GAINS ANOTHER POINT OVER THE CITY.

Supreme Court Decides That City Judge DeMeza Had No Right to Hold the Trial in Private Without Counsel Present.

Michael Watson, who has been before the City Court charged with breaking the excise laws more than any other alleged offender in the city, is to the fore again. He has not been in jail for some time but there has been a case hanging over his head for some months which was only decided Thursday.

Watson was charged with selling liquor from his store on Grant avenue, near South Second street, on Sunday, which is against the city ordinance. He was arrested and finally pleaded guilty. City Judge DeMeza sentenced him to pay a fine of $100 and go to jail for a term of sixty days. He was taken to Elizabeth and viewed the world from behind the bars for several days. Then he was released on a writ of certiorari, obtained by S. S. Swackhamer, one of his counsel.

James J. Bergen and Hugh Meehan, who are also counsel for Watson, obtained from the Supreme Court Thursday a decision setting aside City Judge DeMeza's conviction on Watson's plea of guilty. The ground of the decision is that the City Judge received the plea in his private office instead of the City Court room. Watson at first pleaded not guilty, and a day was set down for his trial in the City Court room. Before the day arrived, Watson went alone to the City Judge in the latter's office, withdrew his plea of not guilty, and put in a plea of guilty. The City Judge accepted the plea and imposed sentence of fine and imprisonment. Watson afterwards tried without success to withdraw his plea of guilty. The Court holds that the conviction cannot stand because it was made in the private office of the City Judge without the presence of counsel on either side. S. S. Swackhamer was associated with Messrs. Bergen & Meehan in the case.

The Corporation Counsel says that he has several courses under consideration as to Watson's case. The city may decide to take the case to the court of last resort, or to accept the decision and proceed against Watson by indictment. He was unwilling to give any opinion on the case until he should have had opportunity to read the decision.

Through a Bottle at the Clerk.

Thursday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock Miss McGee, of Somerset street, called at F. W. Rowley's drug store and asked for a quanity of alcohol. She had a bottle with her and she desired that no label be placed on the same to designate its contents.

The clerk refused to give the woman the alcohol without a prescription. This angered her and she threw the bottle at the clerk. It missed its aim and struck the wall.

After a while Miss McGee was removed to the home of Mrs. Randolph, on Somerset street, where she has been stopping for some time. Proper treatment was given her and in a short time she became quiet.

Miss Mary Collier, of East Sixth street, has returned from a visit in Brooklyn.

THE CITY RESPONSIBLE?

CHARLES H. HAND REFUSES TO PAY TAXES UNDER MARTIN ACT.

He Makes Two Strong Points in His Own Favor—The Matter to be Referred Directly to Martin Act Commissioners.

In a mild way, Charles H. Hand, the well-known real-estate owner and operator, has got his dander up and does not propose to be mulcted by the city by paying taxes on a piece of property that, on the authority of the city's own tax officials, was said to be entirely clear of tax encumberances when he bought it. Among those properties that fall under the provisions of the Martin Act is the house and lot known as the Frazee property, at the corner of Watchung avenue and Second street, which Mr. Hand bought some years ago.

Mr. Hand argues that he has every point in his favor as against the enforcement of the Martin Act for the collection of $69, which is said to be due the city for taxes previous to 1880. He says that the property was once sold by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh at a special master's sale and advertised and announced from a public place at the time of the sale as entirely clear of all encumberances, taxes or otherwise. Mr. Hand thinks that when the Court of Chancery guaranteed the title of a piece of property sold under its authority that that is enough and the city is taking upon itself a good deal of responsibility in endeavoring to collect from an innocent purchaser an encumberance which the highest court of the State said did not exist.

Mr. Hand's second point is also a strong one. He insists that the city, the same as a private corporation, must be responsible for the acts and errors of its employes. There is no disputing the fact that all this trouble about delinquent taxes previous to 1880 being paid now by innocent parties, is clearly the fault of the tax officials during the period in which they accumulated. If the records had been kept properly there would have been no complications such as have arisen. Mr. Hand says, and it is the same with others, that when he sought information from the Tax Collector as to tax claims against the property in question, he was informed that none existed. If the Tax Collector, the city's recognized authority on such a matter, gave erroneous information, then it is the plain duty of the city to stand responsible for the errors, the same as would any responsible corporation. Numerous lawyers who accepted information from the Tax Collector in the same manner as Mr. Hand did, and then passed on the title of lands submitted for their approval by prospective purchasers, are also greatly interested in this last point raised by Mr. Hand. If the latter succeeds in having the city recognize the point as well taken, it will release them from the errors that will be charged up against their professional ability otherwise.

Mr. Hand made a statement to the committee on taxation at the Council meeting a few evenings ago, and they were so strongly impressed with the points made by him that it is their intention to refer his case directly to the Martin Act Commissioners. If Mr. Hand does not have the case adjusted without expense to him he says he will carry it to the State Board of Taxation.

RECEPTION AND MUSICALE.

William E. MacClymont's Pupils Had a Social and Musical Time.

The reception and musicale given by William E. MacClymont and pupils at Mr. MacClymont's residence, 73 Washington avenue, Friday afternoon, from 4 to 7 o'clock, was in every particular a pleasing affair. The rooms were attractively decorated with palms chiefly.

The programme consisted of instrumental selections by some of Mr. MacClymont's best pupils, including Miss Lillian Nicholl, Miss Clara Van Fleet, Miss Beatrice Miner, Miss Ida M. Tallamy, Miss May Batchelor, Miss May Doane. Some of the selections rendered were Mr. MacClymont's compositions. "Rosalie" and "My Dream Lady," composed by Mr. MacClymont, were sung effectively by Robert Clark.

The house was thronged with friends of Mr. MacClymont and his pupils, there being fully three hundred present. Mrs. J. C. MacClymont, Mrs. William E. MacClymont and Miss Lillian Nicholl received the guests, and those who presided at the table while tea was served were Miss Josie Dally, Miss Lottie Dally, of New York; Miss Jennie E. Marlow, of Roselle; Mrs. Frank Jones, Miss Nora Williams, of North Plainfield. Miss Ida Shaefer, of Trenton, was among those entertained by Mr. and Mrs. MacClymont.

The pupils acquitted themselves with great credit to themselves and their teacher, and the guests were loud in their praise of the programme and its rendition.

David Smalley, the North avenue butcher, has purchased a lot on East Front street, opposite the Myers residence, and in a short time he will erect a handsome residence thereon.

DUSKY FLATS EPISODE.

ITS COLORED DENIZENS AIR THEIR TROUBLES IN POLICE COURT.

Barber Champion and Mrs. Jackson Indulged in an Exchange of Compliments and Then Raced to See the City Judge.

Paradise Alley has a rival in the chase for notriety in the police court. "Dusky Flats," as that portion of Madison avenue in the vicinity of the old Alert Hose Company's house between Front and Second streets, has been called, is rapidly rising in reputation by the wonderful performances of its denizens.

Three passing colored characters from "Dusky Flats" lined up before the City Judge Friday morning on the charge of disturbing the neighborhood with their profane and indecent language. It is the belief of the people of that district that the first one to reach the Judge's office is the best, which will explain the race for that office Friday.

There was trouble in the "Flats" between Albert Champion, who runs a barber shop and incidentally an intelligence office, and Mrs. Rosie Jackson and her daughter, Annabel, who is known to fame as "Mag" or "Bell." Champion is a little man, agile and spry. Mrs. Jackson has a ponderous form, and, like all large bodies, moves slowly. So it was the Champion who reached the Judge's office first and made a complaint against his neighbors.

The trial was exciding and grew more so as time flew by, for Rosie became excited and it took the combined efforts of her daughter, a friend and two officers to keep her quiet. Champion explained that he had been a good boy but that she had called him improper names. Rosie reciprocated and told how he had said very improper things to herself and daughter. Witnesses were sworn and added their testimony.

Anabel is the dusky belle of the flats and she immediately tried her blandishments on Roundsman Flynn, who administered the oath. The official was not to be captured, however, and all her smiles were then turned on the court.

The Judge decided that Champion was guilty and fined him $10. Mrs. Jackson was also found guilty and fined $6, while the belle of the flats escaped with a reprimand.

TOO DRUNK TO REMEMBER.

But His Victim's Face Bore Evidence of the Assault.

Michael Welch had a forgetful mind when he appeared before City Judge De Meza, Friday morning, charged with quarreling and fighting. He couldn't remember who struck the first blow. In fact, he could not remember whether any blow was struck or not, and his idea of the fight that followed was singularly indistinct and hazy.

John Sloan, the other prisoner, had very forcible rememberances of the affray as his face bore witness. It was scratched and bitten, he said, by Welch. His story was that Welch who lives next door to him on West Third street rushed the grocer Decoration Day morning and afternoon in company with a few friends and was then fighting drunk. Sloan said that he was passing down the yard when Welch grew ugly in his actions and after a few words that Welch and his friend, Doyle, started for him. A lively scrap ensued in which Welch set his teeth in the side of Sloan's face and used his finger nails with dire effect on Sloan's cheek. Sloan's statements were substantiated by his wife nesses.

Welch admitted that there would have been no trouble if he had not been drinking but could remember nothing, he was so drunk, he explained.

The Judge declared Sloan not guilty and discharged him. He was well represented in the case by ex-Judge W. A. Coddington. Welch was fined $10.

LOST A COLLECTION OF A LIFE TIME.

L. E. Howard Suffer $3,000 Loss by an Explosion of an Oil Stove.

L. E. Howard suffered a severe loss by fire at the Peek-a-moose Club ground in Ulster county, New York, two weeks ago today, when his private studio was laid in ashes, with its valuable contents, by the explosion of an oil stove. Mr. Howard had gone to the club grounds three weeks ago to spend the summer there. Though the building was a small one and of little value itself, the contents, including all the mementos, curios, hunting outfits, etc., of a personal nature, were destroyed. A valuable diamond stud, a gold and aluminum nugget chain, and a gold match box set with diamonds. Mr. Howard estimates his loss at $3,000. His many Plainfield friends will regret to hear of the loss, which it will be impossible to replace, as the articles were the collection of a life time.

Fatal Play at Bonfire.

Russell Huff, six years old, of Still Valley, near Phillipsburg, was burned to death last night. While the little fellow was playing around a bonfire his clothing caught fire, and in a few seconds he was one mass of flame. Death came in a short time.

ANOTHER JUNE BRIDE

A PLAINFIELD YOUNG MAN GOES TO NYACK, N.Y., FOR A WIFE.

Miss Nellie May Smith Becomes Mrs. Edward Randolph—The Affair a Pretty Home Wedding—Those Composing Bridal Party.

A very pretty home wedding took place in Nyack, N. Y., Thursday afternoon, when Miss Nellie May Smith, daughter of Mrs. Catherine M. Smith, of that place, was united in marriage to Edward Fitz-Randolph, a rising young business man of this city. Mr. Randolph is a graduate of the Pennsylvania College of Pharmacy and is now in charge of one of the departments of the pharmacy of L. W. Randolph, on West Front street.

The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride, 64 First avenue, Nyack, by her minister, Rev. T. R. Davis. The relatives and friends of the couple, numbering 80, were present at the ceremony, which was performed at 3:30 o'clock. A reception followed and the wedding dinner was served. Dancing followed in the evening.

The bride was attired in cream satin and carried white bride roses. Her maid of honor was Miss Sadie Randolph, of Plainfield, sister of the groom. Miss Randolph wore a gown of white organdie over nile green silk. She carried a bouquet of pink roses.

The best man was Edwin Polhemus, of Brooklyn. The ushers were George Snediker, of Plainfield, and Alfred Perry, of Nyack. The groom presented the best man and each of the ushers with a handsome scarf pin.

The house was charmingly decorated for the occasion with pink and white roses and potted plants. The effect was very pretty. The presents filled one of the rooms at the bride's home and were many and valuable. They included a number of pieces of silver and glass ware and furniture for the new home of the couple.

Mr. and Mrs. Randolph boarded the 8:40 train for New York amid showers of rice, and started on their wedding tour, in which they will visit Philadelphia and several southern cities. On their return they will reside at 145 West Front street, where a furnished home awaits them.

A FLAW IN THE TITLE.

A CHURCH BALKED IN SELLING A VALUABLE PIECE OF PROPERTY.

Great consternation has been caused among the trustees and friends of the Scotch Plains Baptist church over the discovery of flaws in the title of certain of their property, which may render it practically valueless to the church corporation.

The property in question is on Johnston's Drive. It is a plot of a great many acres, known as the Baptist church property, and has been claimed by the church corporation for over 100 years.

A short time ago the church trustees advertised the property for sale, and secured a purchaser, who agreed to pay the price asked, provided a clear title could be furnished.

The New Jersey Guarantee Company was engaged to search the title, and their report, rendered on Saturday, was unfavorable to the church trustees' title. The company expressed itself as unwilling to guarantee the title as it had discovered several incumbrances and other blemishes. Immediately upon hearing this, the intending purchaser discontinued making improvements about the place, and announced his unwillingness to accept the property.

It is understood that if the purchase had been made about $25,000 would have been expended upon the place in building, grading and other improvements. The action of the Title Guarantee Company came as a genuine surprise to the trustees and others interested, as the title was considered perfect by good. There is much discussion now as to what can be done, and some are of the opinion that the State legislature should be called upon to pass a special act clearing the title.

SLAUGHTER OF HENS.

Dogs Brought Death to Andrew Huff's Poultry Yard.

Andrew Huff, of Park avenue, suffered a great loss last Friday night and Saturday morning when sixty-five valuable hens and roosters were killed by dogs. Mr. Huff did not discover his loss until late Saturday morning when he went to the place where his chickens are kept. When he arrived he found the dead chickens lying all about the place with their feet turned upward. Some of them were carried a great distance from the coop. Mr. Huff has an idea as to who owns the dogs that killed his chickens and it is his intention of bringing the owners to justice. There is a law which provides for the destruction of sheep by dogs and Mr. Huff thinks that he is entitled to some compensation for his loss. He now has about twenty hens left.

Mrs. Loomis, of Bethlehem, has been visiting relatives in North Plainfield.

A ROSE MONTH BRIDE.

FIRST JUNE WEDDING CELEBRATED IN THIS CITY.

Forty-two years ago June 2nd, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Lewis were united in marriage in a town far away in Wisconsin, and June 2nd their daughter, Miss Louise Augusta Lewis, was wedded to James Everett Kimball, of this city, at the Seventh Day Baptist church in the presence of their many relatives and friends. It was the first June wedding in the city and a very pretty ceremony it proved to be, for the gowns of the bridal party were beautiful and the church had assumed a floral dress for the day. Everything passed off smoothly and the bridal couple were started on their tour without accident to mark the pleasure of the occasion.

At 7:30 o'clock, the bridal party made its appearance, entering the church through the door to the left of the church. As the strains of the wedding march pealed forth from the grand organ above, the ushers came slowly forward. They were Walter Kimball, of Brooklyn, Charles Dean Kimball, of New York and Amherst College, Cleveland Cady Kimball, of New York and Amherst College, Fred K Kimball, of Plainfield, all cousins of the groom, Frank J. Hubbard and George F. Rider, of Plainfield.

Then came the four bridesmaids, Miss Evelyn M. Lewis, sister of the bride, Miss Eleanor W. Kimball, of Orange, cousin of the groom, Miss Bessie E. Titsworth and Miss Margaret L. Tracy, both of this city. Miss Lewis and Miss Kimball were gowned in white point d'esprit trimmed with pink ribbons. The Misses Titsworth and Miss Tracy wore white Persian lawn trimmed with pink ribbons. They all carried garlands of carnations and smilax with which they formed an aisle to the front of the pulpit through which the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, passed. The bridesmaids were followed by the maid of honor, Miss Mary A. Lewis, sister of the bride. She was gowned in white organdie over green.

The bride and her father, who was to perform the ceremony, followed her to the front of the pulpit where the party stopped and formed in two either side of the bride and groom, who had advanced from the other side, accompanied by the best man, Benjamin F. Langworthy, of Chicago.

The short service was conducied by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, and again the organ burst forth into triumphant strains and Mr. and Mrs. Kimball led the way to the door on the right, through which they passed. They were followed by the others of the bridal party.

The ceremony was followed by an informal reception for the immediate families at the home of the bride on Central avenue, adjoining the church. Among those present were Dr. Charles O. Kimball and family, of New York; Alfred R. Kimball and family, of Orange; H. E. Kimball and family, of Orange; Frank Kimball, of Amherst College; Miss Kate Kimball, of Buffalo; Miss Mary Kimball, of New York; Mrs. W. S. Maxson, Miss Mabel Maxson, Harry L. Maxson, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Stillman, Mrs. C. H. Stillman, Dr. Frank S. Wells, Miss Margaret L. Tracy, Miss Bessie E. Titsworth, Frank J. Hubbard, of Plainfield; Miss Anne Langworthy, of New York; Mrs. Rodney Kimball, of Brooklyn; Miss Fannie Kimball, of Brooklyn; Miss Gertrude Kimball, of Orange; Mr. and Mrs. William Hallock, of Brooklyn.

The church was decorated with palms, daisies, and pink hydrangeas which were arranged in an artistic manner about the platform, pulpit and front of the church.

The decorations at the house were very pretty and consisted of palms, daisies and white peonies.

The gifts were numerous and valuable and included silverware, furniture, and many others, useful and ornamental. The gifts by the bride to the bridesmaids were dainty little stick pins. The ushers all received handsome scarf pins from the groom.

The departure of the newly married couple was not according to the programme. While their friends were awaiting them in the front door, the couple silently departed through the second story window with the aid of a ladder and a friend outside. They took another carriage, which having been decorated with white by the guests, and took a late train for New York. Their destination is a secret. The guests did not know of the departure of the couple until they were gone and so the showers of rice that had been prepared were not used.

After their return from the wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Kimball will take up their residence at 329 Park avenue.

Lightning Killed a Cow.

Lightning struck and instantly killed a cow last Thursday owned by John Kelly, of Clinton avenue. The cow was in pasture at the time and when Mr. Kelly went for her he found the animal dead in the field. The animal was a valuable one and Mr. Kelly feels the loss very much.

THE BOROUGH AFFAIRS.

COUNCILMEN AND MAYOR CONSIDER MANY IMPORTANT THINGS.

Fire and Police Departments Receive Considerable Attention—New Marshals Appointed—Appropriations Ordered Levied

A great deal of important business occupied the attention of the borough Council at the regular meeting held Friday evening, and all of the members were present to attend to it. The financial report of the borough clerk was as follows:

Borough balance, $1,698.23; fire department, $368.02; light, $1,980.65; roads, $895.05; poor deficit, $336.62; paid county and State, $3,443 36; total balance, $1,691.97. There was collected from fines, etc., $107.50. The following collections were reported by Tax Collector Spencer: 1896, $272.09; 1895, $95.05; 1894, $82.17; received from the County Clerk from liquor licenses, $712.50.

The West End Hose Company extended an invitation to the Council to attend an informal opening of the new house next Monday evening and the same was accepted.

The resignation of ex-Marshal Walter G. Smalley was received and accepted.

The Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company in a communication stated that their reservoir at Washingtonville was now about completed and they asked the Council to inspect the same. They desired that the Council try and arrange to be present when the company's engineer could be there.

The residents of Craig place petitioned for an electric light and asked that it be located at 19 Craig place. The matter was referred, with power. The taxpayers and property-owners of Sycamore avenue asked the Council to macadamize their street and stated that they would pay their share, $271 25, toward the work. Later the petition was granted, with the understanding that if the part already macadamized is not to the proper grade the property owners will make it so, and also pay 50 per cent. of the cost of doing the work. J. C. Peck petitioned for a culvert on Myrtle avenue, at the corner of Sycamore avenue, and the same was granted.

Mr. Woolston, in reporting for the street committee, stated that $294.60 had been expended on streets in the borough during the past month, and $1,095 80 had been spent on Somerset street. Of the latter amount one-third will be returned by the street railway company. Mr. Woolston also said that the work of laying sidewalks is progressing satisfactorily and that the labor had given valuable aid in this line.

Mr. Rogers offered several suggestions, which later took the form of resolutions, and were adopted. One was that carpenter work was needed at Warren Engine and West End Hose houses to the amount of $45. At the former place the stalls, ceilings and front doors needed repairing. Another suggestion was that at Fourth of July time several extra firemen would be required to do duty night and day and for the purpose $75 would be needed. Still another suggestion was that the supply of badges for the firemen was exhausted and more are in demand. He said that the most excellent chief of the department had suggested that the new badges be numbered from No. 1 upwards. To secure these badges would mean an expenditure of about $35. The last suggestions were that in accordance with custom the members of the West End Hose Company be presented with a sufficient number of chairs for their house, and that the necessary grading be done about their house. As above stated, resolutions were offered by Mr. Rogers covering all of the suggestions, and all were adopted.

Mr. Burtis offered an ordinance regulating the police department and the same was adopted on its second reading and laid over until the next meeting for final adoption. The same action was taken with another ordinance offered by Mr. Burtis which regulates the office of borough engineer. The former ordinance is chiefly a set of rules which in the main are the same as used in this city.

Mr. McLoughlin stated that the tax maps were about completed and he offered a resolution that the Mayor and clerk be authorized to draw a warrant for $600 which amount is to be used under the direction of the Streets and Public Health Committee for the payment of the maps.

At this time the Mayor appointed William Campbell and C. H. Graeder as night marshals and George Kilner as marshal to take the place of Marshal Smalley, resigned. The Mayor in making the appointments said that the borough was not sufficiently protected, and he felt as though the departments should be increased. The action met with the approbation of the members of the council, and the new marshals were confirmed. In connection with this Mr. Carey offered a resolution to the effect that the collector and assessor be instructed to secure that amount of money. This amount is inclusive of the amount voted at the last election and is as follows: Lights, $5,000; police, $3,300; fire department, $1,800; streets, $3,250; poor, $1,500; water, $1,200; bonds, $675; Watchung avenue bonds, interest, $1,700; incidentals, $1,025.

Mr. McLoughlin offered a resolution that a book of records be purchased for the clerk as it is very much needed. A resolution offered by Mr. Rogers confirmed the election of officers chosen in the fire department sometime ago, and another resolution by the same councilman provided for the grading about West End Hose house. The work will be done under the direction of the street committee.

Two resolutions were presented by Mr. Schutt. One was that a loan of $1,500 be secured and charged to the borough account, and the other was that the action of Collector Spencer in paying the monthly pay roll, $294.60, be confirmed. There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

TO NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

A. V. D. Honeyman Arranging a Trip That Will Be Full of Delight.

The Honeyman party for Norway and Sweden sails June 30th by the Red Star Line S. S. "Kensington." Mr. Honeyman states that his party this year will be smaller than usual, but that it will be over new ground and, in many respects, more interesting than any foreign tour he has ever made.

The party will land at Antwerp, spend the Sabbath there and a day beside, then immediately cross over to England and make a coaching trip for five days in the heart of the Shakespeare country, covering parts of four of the central counties of England. After a brief stay in London, and a stop at Lincoln to see the marvelous old cathedral there, they go over from Hull to Bergen, Norway, and from there make a delightful journey of four hundred miles over Norwegian fjords, reaching Trondhjem as the most northerly point in Norway; a place where in July there is no night. Then they proceed by rail overland through Norway to its capital and across Sweden to Stockholm, to see the Swedish Exposition. From Stockholm the tour is over to Finland and St. Petersburg, with sufficient time at the latter place for a flying trip to Moscow. Returning to Stockholm, the party will go on a three days' trip through the Swedish lakes and Gotha Canal, which is spoken of as one of the most attractive things in the world, and will then visit Copenhagen, Denmark; from there to Holland, making stops at Amsterdam and the Hague; and then down through Belgium to Antwerp, whence they sail home on the "Friesland," August 21st.

Mr. Honeyman states that he has one room for four more, two ladies and two gentlemen.

BEST MAN FULL OF JOKES.

By a Bit of Tact He Monopolized All the Fun Himself.

Mr. and Mrs. James Everett Kimball, who were married in the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Wednesday, June 2d, are spending their honeymoon at Beachcroft, East Glos ester, Mass. They escaped the showers of rice that their friends had planned for them, thanks to the efforts of the best man, Benjamin F. Langworthy, of Chicago, who had provided a ladder down which they crept from the second story window. Mr. Langworthy looked out, however, that they should not go unannounced. He sent their trunk ahead all bedecked with white ribbons and saw that their pockets were filled with rice, even if they were not showered with it.

Thursday morning he sent a pair of old shoes tied up with white ribbon by express to Beachcroft, as a gentle reminder to the couple.

LOVER'S WALK NO HIGHWAY.

Path Randolph Made While Courting Was Not a Public Road.

Vice-Chancellor Reed has refused to issue an injunction in the suit of Cezare F. Randolph against Michael Fox The two are neighbors and reside near New Brunswick. Their difficulty arose because Fox refused Randolph permission to travel over his land in order to reach his mother-in-law's house. The complainant held that the path he travelled was a public highway, but the defendant proved that Randolph himself had formed the path while courting his present wife.

Funeral of Mrs. Marfenz.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Marfenz was held Friday from the house on West Third street, and Rev. H. J. Johnston officiated. The remarks by Mr. Johnston were especially helpful to the bereaved ones. The deceased's husband is an employe of the street railway, and Superintendent Adelman together with all of employes who were not on duty, attended the funeral in a body. The following employes of the street railway served as pallbearers: William Brown, Martin Lantz, Frank Blatch and Edward Hoppock. Interment was made in Newark Friday afternoon.

Mayor Wilson Wants No Rabbish.

Mayor Wilson, of the borough, is determined to prevent Plainfield persons from coming to the borough with their rubbish and leaving it there, and measures to carry such orders into effect have been taken.

TALENT IN THESE GIRLS

MISS JACKSON'S CLASS GIVE THEIR CLOSING RECEPTION.

A Delightful Programme of Recitations and Drills Was Presented in a Creditable Manner in Y. M. C. A. Hall Last Week.

It is rare, indeed, when a more satisfied audience has left the Y. M. C. A. Hall than the one that departed last evening after attending the annual reception of Miss Addie Parker Jackson's classes in physical culture and rendering. Miss Jackson personally took no part, but the results of her efforts were to be seen in everything. The different recitations were given with spirit and showed the ability of the pupils as well as the excellent instruction they had received. Miss Jackson was exceedingly fortunate in selecting such recitations as seemed most adapted to the characteristics of those taking part. Some of the pupils have only been with her a year, but it can truthfully be said that there was not an unpleasant feature to the entire affair and that everybody left very well. The programme opened with an Eastern lady drill, the exercises in which were adapted from various forms of Oriental worship. The young women taking part were all gowned in white. The monotony of color was broken by the red sashes which were worn by all. Those who participated in the drill were the Misses Amy C. Burt, Mabel Bonnell, Katharine Dwight, Euphemia Demarest, Lucie Palmer Davis, Aimee Emmons, Mary A. Luckey, Alice Morgan, Maude Newman, Grace Overton, Rita Pond, Constance Patton, Lucy Pound, Ella Serrell, Elsie Smith and Eleanor Williams.

Then followed "An Hour with Standard Authors." "Marguerite of France," a thrilling poem by Felicia Hemans, was recited by Miss Lucy Pound with much feeling. Miss Euphemia Demarest recited "The Blind Girl of Castel Cuille," by Longfellow, simply yet effectively. One of Eugene Field's charming little prose compositions, "Little Mistress Mercilles," was pleasingly given by Miss Marie Neuman. It was a difficult selection delightfully rendered.

The pathos in "The Swan Song of Parson Avery," by Whittier, was effectively brought out by Miss Amy G. Burt. Miss Aimee Emmons found favor with the audience at the start in her recitation of Tennyson's "In the Children's Hospital." The pathetic story was told in a wa that almost drew tears to the eyes of many of her hearers.

Miss Mary A. Luckey recited a difficult selection by Elizabeth Phelps Ward, "St. Basil's Bell." She carried her audience with her from the start and heightened the dramatic effect of the story itself by her clever portraying of the parts.

In the interval that followed, Miss Jackson was called to the front of the stage and presented with a magnificent bouquet of roses. Each of the speakers received flowers after their selection.

Three character sketches, "A Little Quaker Sinner," by Miss Ella Serrell; "In Grandma's Chest," by Miss Constance Patton; "Aunty Doleful," by Miss Elsie Smith; "Autumn," by Miss Eleanor Williams. They were all excellent and the different characters were brightly and delightfully represented. Again was Miss Jackson's skill evident in the successful rendition of them.

Richard Harding Davis has written a very humorous sketch called "Three First Runs," which was recited by Miss Lucie Palmer Davis. The selection was really very funny and Miss Davis' rendition of it made it seem doubly so. Her portrayal of the supposed famous hunter was most excellent.

"Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" was the name of a beautiful little sketch, recited by Miss Katharine Dwight. It was so sweet, soft, with here and there a touch of pathos, that it seemed most suitable to the girl who gave it so effectively.

Miss Rita Pond recited a thrilling poem, "The Song of the Market Place," most acceptably and deserved the hearty applause that was accorded her.

The programme ended with a monologue, "When Jack Comes Late," by Miss Grace E. Overton, one of the most talented of all Miss Jackson's pupils. The character represented was "Sally Sanders," who the night of the first scene had just become engaged to Jack Hamilton. Jack was just supposed to be departing when she called him back. Her delight at the engagement was delightfully represented, particularly when she thought about the jealously of the other girls. Then she directed Jack to put the engagement in at least five papers. It was to go in the "Herald," she said, and he must be sure that it was in the "Daily Press." Then Jack departed.

The second scene was laid in the same drawing room the next evening. Jack had promised to marry Sally but he had not arrived. "Sally" worried as the minute flew by, was sure that he was false, planned how she was to receive him coolly but when she heard his step in the hall flew to meet him with open arms.

E. Maxwell Honeyman, A. Willis West and Carl Stedman Brown acted as ushers. Charles Steiner collected the invitations at the door.

FINE MURAL DECORATION

THE HOME OF LV. F. RANDOLPH BEAUTIFIED BY A TALENTED ARTIST.

Though the Decoration is in Its Infancy in This Country the Idea is Older Than the Christian Era—Bound to be Popular.

Mural decoration is as yet in its infancy—particularly in America. The idea, indeed, is older than the Christian era—as old, for example, as Pompeii, the walls of whose elegant residences, still standing where first erected, or transferred in portions to the Naples museum, bear testimony today to the art and grace and taste of an age long gone by.

But the direct application of this sort of embellishment has always been limited. The conception of art as applied particularly to the ornamentation of walls were but primitive and partial, and were in any case only to be availed of by the very wealthy. Later, when the Renaissance developed so great an awakening and growth, it became the fashion to adorn public halls and private homes with pictures quite separate from the walls themselves. And this was on the whole the wiser plan. The paintings on canvass and on wood of the 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th centuries are in a much better state of preservation than are the early frescoes. But in our day frescoes are again coming into vogue. It is found that they can be done in a manner that will prove enduring, and they have in some cases a charm of their own such as the framed and movable pictures cannot possess. In the great public buildings very recently erected, especially in America, artistic conceptions and representations have largely been directly conveyed to the side walls, domes and ceiling of great rooms and assembly halls. This plan is now coming more considerably into use, also in the ornamentation of private residences. The old-fashioned stencil-plate work on the walls of dwellings and the conventional designs were very inevitably fade or crumble after a few years have given place in some of our homes to the thoughtful scheme, comprehending in its scope and plan the beautiful, the significant and the permanent.

In Plainfield we have as yet but few examples of this higher class of mural decoration. But these are indicative of progress in culture and taste. One example has just been completed at the residence of L. V. F. Randolph on East Front street. It was designed last winter by Bryson Burroughs, of New York, who (while pursuing a course of study of five years in Europe as winner of the Chanler prize) had given much study to mural art and who has certainly done some superior work.

The design is two-fold, and comprises the walls and ceilings of the two large rooms on the south side of the main hall of the Randolph residence. In the room on the front of the house the theme is that of "Home, or the Family Tie," with its joys and blessings. The scene depicted is taken from the Mask in Shakspeare's drama of "The Tempest." The happy union of Fernando and Miranda, made under the countenance of Prospero, receives the blessing of Juno and Ceres. The oil painting on the wall embodying this agreeable scene is framed by a further design, through which are wrought ideal faces of Ariel, Caliban, Gonzalo and Alonso, together with various other representations of ripened fruits. On the ceiling of this room are four medallions in which are depicted festal and harvest scenes.

In the adjoining apartment, which is the music room, the thought in the decoration is the music thought. The chimney-piece here embraces the ideal figure of Saint Cecilia, with angelic attendants; and the four large medallions in the ceiling are representations of other graceful figures in harmony with the chief design. All these designs are painted in oil, but in quiet tints, the manner and colors being in perfect agreement with the paintings and medallions in the sister room. The medallions are each somewhat more than four feet in diameter—the figures being about half of life-size. All the figures and faces—numbering about a score, and displayed in ten distinct works of art—were painted from life-models by Mr. Burroughs and are marvels of grace and accuracy and drawing and of classical and graceful pose. The surroundings of wall canvas and of furniture and woodwork, as arranged and carried out by C. G. Davis, are in perfect keeping with Mr. Burroughs' schemes.

During Mr. Randolph's absence with his daughters in Morocco, Spain, Italy and other countries this artistic mural work was accomplished under Mrs. Randolph's supervision. At the same time she arranging other pleasant surprises for the travellers in the way of new hard floors, windows, electricity and other accessories of a beautiful home. These were all found charmingly complete on their arrival. The gentlemen and business firms who have assisted in these improvements during the past few months include Messrs. O. S. Teale, architect; A. D. Phillips, electrician; Spicer & Hubbard, Woolston & Buckle, Boughton & Terwilliger, John P. Emmons, G. Q. Packer, J. W. Gavett and C. M. Tporp.

To the decorations thus prepared for the delight of the returning travellers, they themselves have contributed in things of art and beauty gathered in their journeyings through many countries. These consist in parts of divers curious and oil paintings and photographs, and include a very dignified and handsome marble bust of the "Young Augustus" brought from the studio of Larkin G. Meade, of Florence.

THE POSTPONED FETE.

THE DELAY WILL PERMIT GREATER PERFECTION OF FEATURES.

Programme Arranged For Last Saturday Will be Carried Out in a Complete Manner on Saturday of This Week.

The Fete Champetre, planned for Saturday, June 5th, that was to have been the coming out party of the Town Improvement Association, was postponed on account of the weather to Saturday, June 12th from 3 to 10 o'clock. Fortunately, no features of the Fete will suffer by postponement. It is hoped that the delay will only serve to bring nearer perfection some of the arrangements for the entertainment and heighten some of its charms. The pony carriages and boats will be there next Saturday, as will the May pole at 4 o'clock to be wound by the wee ones and at 5 o'clock by older children. The Gypsy encampment with its gaily costumed queen and dark browned men and maidens, who will dance and sing and play, as only gypsies can, the camp fire, flapjacks and wonderful Palmist, whose skill in reading your life from the lines of the celebrated far and near, will all be there, only the better for the waiting. The music will be as sweet, the illuminations as fine, the ice cream, fruit and flowers just as fresh and the supper quite as good as if the Fete had been held last week. We trust the skies will be brighter and the roads harder, that bicyclists may be tempted to share these pleasures, for every arrangement has been made to repair all accidents to wheels and make the cyclists trip one of comfort and unalloyed pleasure.

If there should be uncertainty about the weather, as there was last week, the Fete will still be held, the supper being served on the piazzas and in the house, while the gypsy camp will be moved from the island to the rear of the house, under the electric lights.

JAPAN MISSION WORK

MRS. HILTON PEDLEY GAVE TWO INTERESTING TALKS.

The Dress and Customs of the Japanese Described to Sunday-School Scholars—Young Hymns in the Japanese Language.

Mrs. Hilton Pedley, a missionary of the American Board, who has been in Japan for nearly ten years, is now in America on a short furlough, and has many interesting things to tell about her life in that most fascinating of foreign countries. Sunday afternoon she spoke for few moments to the Sunday-school of the Congregational church, and in the evening the Christian Endeavor Society of the church held a special meeting, at which she gave a more formal address.

In the afternoon, Mrs. Pedley described the dress of the Japanese, illustrating her words by references to the Japanese customs in which she had dressed Miss Sadie Howell and Master Arthur Robinson. She also related little incidents which had occurred in her Japanese Sunday school, and described the room and the young Orientals who composed the school.

In the evening, the lecture room was crowded to its utmost capacity with eager listeners. Mrs. Pedley pointed out upon the map the various mission stations which the American Board has established in Japan, told of the fine mission work done in the country, and then gave her audience many interesting bits of information about the daily life of a missionary in that faraway land. She told of the tremendous difficulties in the way of learning the language, to get a fair idea of which required about five years; and described a day of a missionary's family, with its studying, working, and teaching; of the towns made into the country to preach and teach; of the work in the Sunday-schools; and of the strange but wonderfully fascinating ways of the people.

At both services Mrs. Pedley sang several hymns in Japanese, some of which were set to native tunes, wierd and Oriental enough, but with something strangely attractive about them.

The Pedagogical Library.

Somerset county is second on the list this year in raising the money for pedagogical library, and the additional amount from the State, making $200 in all, will soon be in the hands of the Superintendent. If now the teachers throughout the country would at once send in to the Superintendent the names of such books as they would like to have included in the library, it would greatly facilitate the work of the committee to be appointed for a selection of the library and the arrangement of a scheme for its most profitable one.

A VICTORY AT THE START.

CRESCENT BALL TEAM DEFEATED THE NEW BRUNSWICK Y. M. C. A.

The New Club is Composed of the Pick of Local Cross Players and Put up a Game That Elated All.

The Crescent Baseball Club opened the season on its LaGrande avenue grounds, Saturday afternoon, by defeating the New Brunswick Y. M.C.A. nine in a closely contested game. The game really was exciting, for the visitors took the lead in the third inning and held it to the sixth and then kept the cranks in a continual state of excitement by almost scoring on many occasions.

The new club is composed of the pick of the players of last year's Plainfield Athletic Club and Y. M. C. A. nines. The old Crescent's field was arranged for the game, and the several hundred spectators that turned out for the game were decidedly well pleased with the general appearance of the team and field. A grand-stand with canvas shade had been erected, while a plentiful supply of camp chairs had been provided for the use of the other patrons.

As to the game, it cannot be said that the Crescent's outplayed their opponents, but by the bunching of hits and several costly errors on the part of the New Brunswick infielders, the Crescent's gained their victory. The score would have been larger by several runs but for a pretty running catch by Tallman. There were three men on bases and two men out when George Schoonmaker came to bat. He sent the ball apparently far over the centre fielder's head, but the latter ran and just managed to get it on the edge of the embankment on Richmond street.

Charley Mumford made the only home run of the game by knocking the ball into the chicken yard in far left field. While the New Brunswick fielders were trying to scale the wire screen, Charley flew around the bases amid the shouts of the spectators.

There was much enthusiasm shown. Both umpires were from Plainfield and did their work satisfactorily.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. MacClymont Give a Party in Honor of a Guest.

A progressive euchre party was given last Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William E. MacClymont, of Washington avenue, in honor of Miss Ida E. Schafer, of Trenton, and Miss Lillian Kline, of Elizabeth. The hospitality of the host and hostess was a pleasing feature of the event, while the sociability of the guests was marked. Miss Laura Hammond was awarded a hat pin as the first prize for the ladies, and a pair of silver cuff buttons was presented to William Holmes as first prize for the gentlemen. Miss Kline won the consolation prize, a Faint leroy pack of cards.

After the game dainty refreshments were served and the rest of the evening was devoted to sociability. Those present were Miss Ida E. Schafer, of Trenton; Miss Lillian Kline, of Elizabeth; Miss Nora Williams, Miss Laura Emmons, Miss Margaret Long, Miss Sara Long; Robert M. Clark, E. O. Clark, H. C. VanEmburg, William Holmes, G. H. Smith and George C. Worth, of Plainfield.

Historical Association.

Justice A. P. Sutphen, of Somerville, has been presented with a handsome cane, made from one of the pin oak timbers which originally formed the wooden piers of the old Van Veghten bridge at Finderne. Several of these old timbers were excavated last summer, near the old stone abutments, in laying the piers for the new bridge. The county records show that the wooden piers were sunk in 1710. Engineer Joshua Doughty has had a section of one of the ancient timbers, which is in an excellent state of preservation, made into canes, which will be presented to the members of the Board of Freeholders.

No One Wanted a Scholarship.

The eighth annual examination for the free scholarship in the State College at New Brunswick was set for Saturday. County Superintendent A. W. Hartwell and City Superintendent of the Public Schools Leslie W. Pierson waited almost two hours, but as no candidates presented themselves they adjourned.

A CHARMING MUSICALE.

PUPILS AT THE SEMINARY RENDERED A PROGRAMME.

The Various Numbers Given With Skill, Accuracy and Expression to the Enjoyment of Those Who Were Present.

Monday afternoon a delightful musicale was given in the parlors of the Plainfield Seminary by the pupils of the musical department under the training of Miss May, of New York. The following programme was rendered with skill, expression and accuracy, for not only is Miss May's own command of the piano masterful, but she has the power of imparting to her pupils such a knowledge of music that composers like Schubert, Mendelssohn and Greig were interpreted with real artistic power:

March Militaire.....Schubert
Misses Harriet Elmer Strong and Ruby Kleb
Sunday Morning.....Kullak
Merry Wanderer.....Stiehl
Master Will Schoonmaker.
Song Without Words.....Mendelssohn
Miss Ruby Kleb.
Waltz } .....Greig
Silhouettes }
Shepherd's Dance.....Gregh
Miss Mary Wadsworth.
Minuet.....Schubert
Papillon.....Greig
Miss Harriet E. Strong.
Impromptu.....Schubert
Miss Ruby Kleb.

One of the pleasing features of Miss May's instruction is the teaching of her pupils to memorize their pieces when learned, so that, for the most part, the performers played without notes.

In the absence of two of her pupils, Miss May, herself, gave by request, the "Flatterer," by Chaminade, and "Widmung," by Schumann, with such rare execution that they elicited an enthusiastic encore. Miss May gave in response "Gondilera," by Moskowski.

At the close of the musical programme, Mrs. Charles Sprague Smith, of New York, the instructor in the art department, read a deeply interesting paper entitled, "How to Criticise a Picture." The knowledge of the artist's conception and study of the artist's thought, she considered indispensable to just criticism. An exhibition of the art student's work was given in an adjoining room, while light refreshments were served. In this exhibit the work done by the life class and composition in black and white was of especial merit.

NO TROLLEY FRANCHISE YET.

Bound Brook Council Again Postpone Important Action.

The Bound Brook Borough Council, Tuesday, did not decide on a trolley franchise. It only adopted a street grade upon which the trolley expects to go.

Much dissatisfaction is expressed by the citizens because the writ of certiorari served upon the New York and Philadelphia Company expired Monday and one company expected to have the right of way granted.

The Board adjourned to June 16th.

Willard F. Voorhees and Frederick Weigel, lawyers, representing the Brunswick Traction Company, were at Trenton, yesterday, to look out for the interests of the company in the certiorari proceedings in the Supreme Court, instituted by William Schure, of Bound Brook, in the matter of granting a trolley franchise through that town. The Brunswick Traction Company has the right of way and consent of the Township Boards between New Brunswick and Bound and is making a hard fight to get through the town.

While the bridal party entered the parlor the Mendelssohn wedding march was executed by Miss Mollie Chapin, of Newark.

At the altar they were met by the officiating clergyman who performed the ceremony according to the Episcopal church. The bride was gowned in white corded silk trimmed with lace and ribbons, while the latter wore a gown of white and pink organdie also trimmed with lace and ribbons.

The best man was Benjamin H. Timpson, brother of the bride, who gave his sister away in marriage. Following the ceremony the happy couple were showered with congratulations by their friends and relatives.

After congratulations a wedding dinner was served to the guests. The table was prettily decorated with flowers of many colors.

Later in the afternoon the bride and groom left for an extended bridal tour and on their return they will reside where they were married. The groom is an employ of the United States Trust Company. Both he and his wife were handsomely remembered in receiving two beautiful and costly presents. The other presents were equally costly and useful.

HOSE HOUSE OPENING

BOROUGH FIREMEN AND OFFICIALS HAD A FESTIVE TIME.

West End Hose Company Now Ready to do Battle With the Fire Fiends—Speeches and a Good Time in General Monday.

The formal opening of the West End Hose house was held last Monday and was in every particular an auspicious one. The commodious and pretty little house was filled with the members of the West End Hose Company, Warren Engine Company and friends of both companies, while the presence of the Plainfield Cornet Band was the occasion of a fine selection of music. The meeting was called to order by Foreman Kellar, of the West End Hose Company, after which the seat of honor was given to Chief David Bodine, of the Fire Department. Mr. Bodine in a well-chosen speech welcomed the friends of the two companies to the new house and complimented the home company in having such a complete hose house.

During the festivities speeches were made by former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., Councilmen Curtis and MacLoughlin, ex-Chief G. H. Fairchild, Assistant Chief James D. Anderson and Electrician Julius Stahl. Following the speeches several selections were rendered by the band and refreshments served. After the inner man had been well supplied the cigars were passed around and those present indulged in relating amusing stories. Mayor Wilson was unable to be present, owing to a slight indisposition, and other members of the Council were detained for good reasons.

The house and equipments are now complete and the company ready for duty. They appreciate the efforts of the borough Council to furnish fire protection for that section, and they will endeavor to give the best of service.

OLD DISPUTE RENEWED.

SUPERINTENDENT HOLMES WOULD EXAMINE PULPITS.

Sends a Communication to the School Trustees Which Principal Edwards Endorses—Arrangements for Commencement.

The Westfield Board of Education met in the Prospect street building last Tuesday. Principal Edwards and all the members of the board except-ing Mr. Schoonover and President Green were present. Mr. Welles was elected chairman. The matter of employing a special constable to guard the Prospect street building on July 4th, and to prevent anyone from entering and ringing the bell, was discussed, and was referred to the committee on buildings and grounds with instructions that a constable be engaged. A communication was received from County Superintendent *Holmes, enclosing a list of the text*books which the State-law prescribes for use in schools. Mr. Holmes also brought up the old dispute about the examination of classes in the high school, maintaining that while it was his duty according to law to examine candidates for graduation, he had heretofore been ignored in the matter. Principal Edwards upon being invited by the board to express his views upon the matter stated that in his opinion the position taken by the County Superintendent was correct, and that he should allow that official to conduct the examinations in question. The committee in charge of the arrangements for graduation exercises reported that the exercises will take place on Friday evening, the 18th, in the Westfield Club Auditorium, and that the baccalaureate sermon to the graduation class will be preached on Sunday evening the 20th in the Methodist church by the Rev. Rufus S. Green, D. D. The question of purchasing a new flag for the Prospect street building was discussed and was referred to the committee on supplies. The flag now in use, which was presented to the school, is in very tat*tered condition. The graduation class* this year is the largest in the history of the high school, and the final exercises promise to be of unusual interest. The members of the class are Miss Belle Morrow, Miss Gertrude Noe, Miss Clara Connoly, Miss Hazel Wallace, Lloyd Thompson, John McCormick and Charles Foster. The graduation honors have not yet been announced.

It is now assured that Westfield's contemplated old-time Fourth of July celebration will come off in royal manner. The committee appointed by Bucket and Engine Company has already secured subscriptions amounting to over $300, and are now figuring on the amounts to be expended on the various features of the celebration. The day will be ushered in by the firing of cannon and the ringing of bells. Bicycle races, foot races, horse races, a tub race on Clark's Lake and a base ball game will be among the events. In the afternoon a clam bake will be held in the woods, with a dancing pavilion. In the evening a fine display of fireworks will take place, and a grand stand will be erected for the comfort of spectators. The Union county band will furnish music during the day.

A PERILOUS RIDE.

Little Richard Campbell Gutted a Runaway Horse at South Plainfield.

An exciting runaway aroused the residents of South Plainfield for a time, Monday afternoon. Ellis Campbell drove over from his home at Avon Park, accompanied by his eight-year-old grandson, Richard Campbell. Monday afternoon, on an errand. He stopped in front of Laine's barber shop and went in, leaving the lad sitting in the buggy alone. A drunken man came reeling up the street and fell in front of the horse, which is a very spirited animal. The frightened equine turned and ran up Front street. The lad had presence of mind to keep the horse in the middle of the road. After several fruitless attemps to stop the runaway, Thomas Brantingham and several others succeeded in bringing the ani*mal to a halt after an exciting run.* The only damage done was to the harness, although there were a number of narrow escapes.

SANG A CLEVER CANTATA

FINE MUSICAL PROGRAMME GIVEN AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

"The Daughter of Jairus" Rendered by Talented Local Vocalists Under Direction of Messrs. McCutchion and Fitzhugh.

The large audience that gathered at the First Baptist church last Tuesday was a critically musical one and the general opinion expressed was that the musical service presented was one of the finest ever listened to in this city. It was given under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the church and Charles W. McCutchen, who has charge of the music, offered the services of the members of church choir for the production of that very musical cantata, "The Daughter of Jairus," by Sir John Stainer, of Cambridge, England. The cantata was written for a certain festival held in England and while it has been produced in this country a number of times it was entirely new to Plainfielders. The entire service was under the leadership of E. J. Fitzhugh, who has charge of the church choir, and at the close Mr. Fitzhugh deservedly complimented the members who took part.

Part first of the service was devoted to the rendition of two very pretty anthems, "Whose Dwelleth Under the Defence of the Most High," and "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee," while the organ prelude, "First Lux," and "Andante," by Howard Case, organist, preceded the above selections. The last anthem contained an alto solo which was given by Mrs. S. A. Ward, contralto. The rendition was perfect and the rich sweet voice of the singer has never been heard to better advantage.

The last part of the programme was given to the presentation of the cantata which was given in its entirety. The solo parts were taken by Miss Harris, soprano; G. W. Smith, tenor; and William Holmes, basso. Especially noteworthy was the rendition of that part entitled "The Wailing," by the chorus of women, and the duet for soprano and tenor, while the parts given by the chorus were equally effective.

The cantata contains a great deal of work for the soprano and Miss Harris performed her part with credit. She has a most pleasing voice and it has improved wonderfully since she made her first appearance in this city It has a sufficient volume while the quality and tone is rich and full. Regarding Mr. Smith, tenor, and Mr. Holmes, basso, it can be said that their work was fully up to the standard. Their work last evening was highly praised by all. In the part where Miss Harris and Mr. Smith sang the duet a grand effect was obtained. The chorus work throughout was superb, being clear and strong. The choir was assisted by Miss Petrie, Miss Bowers, Miss Carman, Miss Carroll, Mrs. Biglow, Max well Honeyman, John Steiner, Ever ett Peck, W. K. Dwight, A. J. Moore, of this city; Herbert Forrest and J. A. Rumrill, tenors, of Brooklyn.

The last two named persons are members of Mr. Fitzhugh's Choral Society, in Brooklyn. They strengthened the chorus very much, as did also the others who are not members of the choir.

A very pretty effect was obtained through the decorations, which consisted of potted plants and flowers, arranged about the pulpit platform in front of the singers.

Much praise is due Mr. Fitzhugh and Mr. Case for the very efficient manner in which they assisted in the service.

SWEET GIRL GRADUATES.

EXERCISES OF GRADUATING CLASS AT THE SEMINARY.

Two Bright Young Ladies Receive Diplomas Testifying to Their Accomplishments in the Great World of Books.

The exercises of the graduating class of the Plainfield Seminary were held held Tuesday morning in Seminary Hall, when Miss Caroline Edith Boone, daughter of Dr. W. C. Boone, and Miss Jennie L. Churchill, of Dunellen, received their diplomas, surrounded by their comrades in the school, relatives and a few friends. A pretty back ground to the hall was made by screens draped with vines and roses, against which the girl graduates, in dainty white dresses, made a very pleasing picture. A hymn sung by the school and the repeating of the Lord's prayer were followed by instrumental music, Miss Harriet Elner Strong rendering effectively "The Shepherd's Tale" and "Papilion" on the piano.

Miss Jennie L. Churchill read a deeply interesting thesis on the subject, England's Poets Laureate." She referred briefly to the origin of the poet's laurel crowning in ancient days of Greece and Rome, out of which grew the custom of appointing a poet to sing to order of the Royal events of England's King and Kingdom. The impossibility of commanding inspiration was hinted at, and the criticism made, that instead of unrivalled genuis being the necessary qualification to the office, sympathy with the policy of the government had often controlled the choice. Of the fourteen poets laureate who had served the crown in their verse writing, she referred to the five more distinguished than the others, Ben Jonson, Dryden, Southey, Wordsworth and Tennyson, giving the influence of the poet on the office and the office on the poet. Of these, Dryden was the only one who degraded it, Southey the only one who took it ever seriously. Wordsworth and Tennyson were the only great poets who had honored the office and been honored by it.

Miss Kenyon, the principal, explained that according to the custom of the school a graduate in preparation for college was excused from writing a thesis, and therefore Miss Boone was excused from this task. Two instrumental selections, charmingly executed by Miss Ruby Kieb preceded the presentation of diplomas by Miss E. E. Kenyon. In a few well-chosen words Miss Kenyon referred to the thesis that was read, showing that worldly honor sometimes came when well deserved, and sometimes without merit, but she wished for these graduates an ambition above worldly honor, the faithfulness to duty and loyalty to truth that would gain the approval of One higher than any earthly potentate, and would win an unfading crown. The exercises closed with the singing of "Roses Blow," the farewell of the school to the class.

Miss Churchill intends to enter the Conservatory of Music at Boston for musical training, and Miss Boone is planning to enter Cornell University in the autumn.

FAVORABLE FOR THE TROLLEY.

Fifty Per Cent of the Consents Said to Have Been Secured.

The trolley magnates have secured nearly all of the 50 per cent of the property owners' signatures along the proposed route, says the Elizabeth Journal, and is now probable that the franchise will be asked for at the next meeting of the township committee.

The proposed route of the Elizabeth and Plainfield trolley line is as follows: From the union depot at Elizabeth, out Morris avenue to Sayre street, to Westfield avenue, which is the county road; along said county road through North avenue at Cranford, directly into Westfield by Picton street, to Elmer, to Broad street, down Elm to the depot and thence out North avenue to Plainfield. Surveyors have been very busy surveying all the streets in the township, but the above named route is the one most desired by the trolley company.

RECTOR STAYED TO RUIN

THE PASSING OF A FAMOUS AND COMPLICATED CHURCH QUARREL.

A Once Prosperous Westfield Church Sold by the Sheriff Tuesday After Passing Through a Career of Discussions.

The sale of the Grace Episcopal church property, in Westfield, which took place yesterday, is the last chapter in the history of one of the most remarkable legal struggles ever passed through by a church corporation in this State. The story is that of a rector who was distasteful to his congregation, but who would not leave when asked to do so. An effort was made to compel him to go, and the struggle involved the church in a maze of legal difficulties which grew denser from year to year, and resulted in the dispersion of the congregation and the loss of its once valuable property.

The history of the case is a long one. The land upon which the church edifice stood was originally donated to the corporation known as the Rector, Warden and Vestry of Grace church, Westfield, by the wealthy Mills estate, whose representatives live at Summit. In the deed of gift there was a condition that the land should be forever devoted to maintaining the worship of the Episcopal church. At the time of the gift, $1,500 was borrowed on bond and mortgage from the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, and this mortgage upon the land was consented to in the Mills deed.

The affairs of the little congregation prospered until the vestry in 1890 called Rev. J. B. Jennings to the pastorate. Then a change came. It was soon evident that the church was no longer prospering.

The attendance and revenue were falling off, so the vestry met and requested Mr. Jennings to resign. To this letter the rector paid no attention, and the vestry took the matter to Bishop Scarborough who tried, without success, to arbitrate between the parties.

Some grave things began about this time to be whispered about concerning the rector. Members of the congregation found themselves differing quite often with him upon questions of loyalty to truth that would gain the approval of One higher than any earthly potentate, and would win an unfading crown. The exercises closed with the singing of "Roses Blow," the farewell of the school to the class.

Miss Churchill intends to enter the Conservatory of Music at Boston for musical training, and Miss Boone is planning to enter Cornell University in the autumn.

Not discouraged by this decision the vestry again appealed to the Bishop. This time the appeal was classed differently, and the case was considered merely as one of difference between a rector and his congregation. In such cases the canon law gives the Bishop the right, where he cannot arbitrate, to make such a decision as may seem to him right and just. In accordance with this right, the Bishop made a decision to the effect that Jennings should leave within thirty days and should receive his salary up to the date of his going. The salary had run considerably in arrears and amounted at this time to about $700. The vestry gladly accepted the decision but Mr. Jennings appealed from it. The appeal was tried by the standing commission of the diocese, consisting of clergymen and laymen, and the Bishop's decision was confirmed.

Jennings now carried the matter into the Supreme Court of New Jersey and there obtained a decision to the effect that the Bishop and the commission had not followed the canon law, and that the order removing the rector was therefore void.

This decision was rendered early in 1893. Up to this time the interest upon the mortgage of $1,500 had been paid by individual members of the congregation, but upon the announcement of the Supreme Court's verdict, payment of interest ceased, and foreclosure proceedings were begun by the holders of the mortgage. The congregation had before this all deserted the church, and nothing remained of the corporation except the pastor. By advice of his counsel he went regularly to church on Sunday, rang the bell, and went through the form of conducting services. Elections had not been held; no vestry was in existence, and there was no one who could by law make a new appeal to the Bishop for Jennings' removal.

During all this time the pastor's salary had been running at the rate of $1,000 a year. When it reached the amount of $2,700 he made an assignment of the claim to William Davidson, who easily secured judgments for the amount, as no defense was made.

FIRST C. E. BICYCLE RUN.

A TRIPLE ALLIANCE OF BICYCLING, RELIGION AND SOCIABILITY.

An Innovation in Local Church Circles Proves a Great Success—The Ride to Mt. Pleasant Followed by Brief Service.

A triple alliance was formed of bicycling, religion and sociability, last Tuesday, by the Christian Endeavorers, and it proved to be a powerful one, indeed. The bicycling squad of the Christian Endeavor Local Union held its first run to Mount Pleasant, and successfully combined a prayer meeting, a sociable and a bicycle ride.

Church runs were inaugurated in this city last year, but it was merely the gathering of the congregation for a little spin on the fine roads. Monday night the Epworth League of the First M. E. church held its first bicycle sociable. Last Tuesday the long talked of initiative run of the Endeavorers was scheduled to be held. It was held and its complete success, so far as those who went were concerned, gave the officers of the Local Union something to think about. Certain it is that many went on the run and attended the meeting who could not have otherwise been persuaded to attend a service last Tuesday. The novelty of the affair had its effect, while the bicycle drew many there who would not have otherwise come.

The weather whatever Neagle promised showers for Tuesday afternoon and evening. The showers came in the afternoon all right and laid the dust, but in the evening they were luckily absent. The rain of the afternoon had its effect, however. Many who had planned to go on the run gave it up when they saw the dark clouds. Then the reputation of the road to Mount Pleasant from Avon Park had spread among the Endeavorers and some did not care to ride over the narrow side path or experiment with the rocky and sandy places in the dark. Both these facts combined to lessen the number of participants.

At first it looked as if the Endeavorers were going to be scarce, indeed, and the captain, Miss Ernestine Smith, was in despair. The party grew, however, in numbers, and finally Captain Smith decided that it was time to start.

Headed by Miss Smith and her aide, Robert Randolph, who acted in the capacity of lieutenant, the column of wheelmen and wheelwomen started. Following closely came Miss Elizabeth Allis, the color bearer, carrying the pretty green and white silk pennant of the Local Union. Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Mosher acted as chaperones of the party, which at the start from the Seventh day Baptist church, numbered twenty-three. New recruits joined the procession as it continued up Park avenue, stopping a moment at the Park avenue Baptist church to pick up the Endeavorers who had gathered there. Some had ridden on ahead and others followed and caught the column before it arrived at its destination.

It was still light when the long line of wheels turned off Park avenue and up the road to Mount Pleasant. There was a side path most of the way which was fairly smooth, but, to tell the truth, it was by no means the best riding that could be found. The experienced riders had no difficulty, but the others found side-path riding no easy task. The riders were carefully separated by La Rue Bliss and Stanley Mosher, who acted as aides, and kept the required distance, ten feet, between them. Dismounts were frequent, but the careful management of the run prevented accidents.

The brightness of the setting sun in the west was fast fading as the single line of wheelmen and wheelwomen, wheeling ahead in the lanes, hill that led to the chapel. The pennant waved gaily in the breeze as the officers dismounted and advanced to meet DeWitt DeForrest, president of the Mount Pleasant Christian Endeavor Society, who was waiting to receive them. The other members of the Mount Pleasant Society grouped themselves on the steps of their pretty little chapel and made a charming picture. A welcome hand was extended to the visitors and they were directed to store their machines in the lane to the rear of the home of Mr. DeForrest, which is next to the chapel. Miss Florence G Hawkins, secretary of the Local Union, who had driven up with a number of other Endeavorers, joined the group.

The visitors were all in wheeling costume, quiet and modest, a trifle dusty, perhaps, for the rain of the afternoon had hardly laid the dust.

The bicyclists tramped into the chapel and the meeting was opened by Mr. DeForrest with a song service. After a short address by the leader, an enthusiastic service of testimony

FIREMEN THEIR GUESTS.

DRUMMER BOYS CELEBRATE THEIR FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

City, Borough and Somerville Fire Laddies Invited to Assemble Around the Festive Board—A Jovial Time Was Enjoyed.

The fifth anniversary of the Independent Fife and Drum Corps was celebrated last Tuesday in an appropriate manner and to make the event an auspicious one the corps invited the members of No. 2 Engine Company, of this city, Warren Engine Company, of North Plainfield, and Central Hook and Latter Company, of Somerville, to join in partaking of a supper at the Hotel Tuilleries. The members of the Corps were attired in their handsome new uniforms. After meeting their guests they held a short parade about town after which they proceeded to the hotel where they set down to the feast. While seated at the table there were speeches by Chief Schenck, ex-Chief John Wherley, and Mr. Vandeventer, of Somerville; Chief F. O. Doane, Andrew Jennings, of this city, ex-Chief Fairchild and J. D. Anderson, of the borough, and Councilman Newman, of this city.

The social part of the affair was marked. An unlooked for surprise was given when Mr. Vandeventer, on behalf of Central Hook and Ladder Company, of Somerville, presented the corps with a picture of the members of his company together with their apparatus and horses. The presentation was made in a neat speech. The gift was received for the Corps by Major Frank Manchester with a few appropriate remarks.

After the supper the guests were escorted to the various fire department houses where they expressed many compliments on the fine appearance of everything. Later in the evening all bands visited the headquarters of the North Plainfield company and here the good time was continued. It was rather late when the Somerville boys departed for home but they all agreed that they had been treated royally by their friends.

BIDS FOR SCHOOL ADDITION.

Hummer Brothers Awarded the Contract for $1,362.

A meeting of the commitee on buildings and repairs of the Board of Education was held last Tuesday and received bids were received for the addition to the Stillman School. The committee decided that the successful bidder should be required to furnish a bond in the sum of $1,000 for the faithful performance of his contract, and also decided the amount of the contract should be paid in two payments.

The bids were opened and were as follows: Henry H. Jessup, $1,571; John Emmons, $1,739; Mundy Bros., $1,600; Hummer Bros., $1,562; John Abbott, $1,725. It was decided to award the contract to the lowest bidder, Messrs. Hummer Bros.

The committee discussed the question of repairs on the various school buildings, and decided to obtain estimates in order that the same might be acted upon at the next meeting.

MISSIONARY ENTERTAINMENT.

A missionary entertainment was held at Warren chapel, Tuesday afternoon, under the auspices of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the chapel. The programme consisted of recitations by Edith Squires, Jennie Smith, Jennie Everitt and Frankie Whitely. The superintendent Mrs. McKelvey, read a letter from Mrs. Edward Taylor, formerly a member of the chapel, but now living in the west. Mrs. Taylor enclosed $3 for the society.

The programme concluded with the singing of "Why I Love Jesus," by ten little girls, members of the society. The last part of the afternoon was devoted to the serving of refreshments. Gussie Seader, Minnie Frieze and Mary Seader served the cake, while Theodore Kohler and Henry Wilson passed the lemonade. Mrs. William Wilson had charge of the cake and she was assisted by Miss Hattie Taynor. The pastor, Rev. J. McKelvey, acted as master of ceremonies.

—The latest of the exhilerating summer drinks to be offered to the sweltering public is the "fruit ices" now being served at Armstrong's model pharmacy at the corner of Park and North avenues. On a real warm day this decoction seems to strike just the right spot for the thirsty person. It not only has a cooling effect, but tickles the palate as well. The ingredients are perfectly pure and wonderfully enervating to the system. Step in and give it a trial.

CRUSHED BOTH HIS LEGS.

EDWARD SMITH SEVERELY INJURED BY COLLIDING COAL CARS

Caught Between Two Cars and Saved His Life by Jumping and Having His Feet Pinioned and Crushed in a Cruel Manner

In his efforts to stop a collision between two empty coal cars, at South Plainfield Tuesday morning, Edward Smith had both legs crushed and narrowly escaped with his life. Smith is the man who was robbed some time ago of $500 by his son and several small boys from Plainfield.

Smith lives on the road between South Plainfield and Holly's Corners and is employed by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company. He was working in the yard, Tuesday, when the accident occurred. In one place in the yard two tracks run side by side for a distance and then cross each other. Smith was on an empty coal car that was coming down one of the tracks with considerable speed. On the other track was another coal car moving very slowly. Smith waited until the two cars almost reached the crossing and jumped to the ground in front of the slowly moving car and tried to stop it. Before he could do it, the car was on the crossing and the other car close at hand. Smith was between them. He did not see his predicament until too late to run. As the cars came together, he jumped hoping to grasp one of the cars. The effort was made in time to save his life for instead of having his body crushed between the two heavy cars, he was jammed fast by the legs.

There were a number of other employes in the yard at the time but they could not reach the cars in time to prevent the crash. They soon released Smith from his very painful position and an engine was sent to Metuchen for medical aid. Smith's lower limbs were frightfully crushed just above the knee and it is probable that he will lose both of them. The bones were ground to powder. The cars were wrecked a little by the crash and a heavy hickory beam on one of them was completely ground to splinters by the force of the collision.

Drs. Andress and Dana, of Metuchen, were brought as soon as possible and did all in their power to relieve the injured man. After his wounds were dressed, he was conveyed in a train to St. Michael's Hospital, in Newark

Smith is fifty-five years old. He has a wife and two children, who will be looked after by the Relief Association of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. He has lived near South Plainfield for twelve years.

THE DANDY POLICE.

They Are Now Attired in Stylish New Uniforms.

The Plainfield police made their initial appearance in their new summer uniforms, last Tuesday, when the members of the Plainfield Police Board inspected the patrolmen and roundsmen of the force. The inspection was held at the Pierce Cycle Academy.

All the members of the Police Board and several of the other Councilmen were present. The entire regular force, including Chief Grant, Sergeant Kiely, Roundsmen Frederickson and Flynn and twelve patrolmen, were present and passed through some simple evolutions under the command of Councilman Barrows.

The new uniform consists of a blue single breasted frock coat, instead of the old sack coat; blue trousers, with white stripe at the side, and grey helmets. All the day patrolmen turned out for regular duty in their new uniforms yesterday.

ANXIOUS FOR A CLEAR TITLE.

Trinity Reformed Church Members Hope to Avoid a Mortgage.

The committee appointed by the Consistory of Trinity Reformed church to solicit subscriptions to defray the expenses of building the new Sunday school room under the present church building, met for conference last Tuesday in the lecture-room of the church. Robert Clark, Jr., was elected permanent chairman of the committee and F. S. Cutter secretary. In the absence of Mr. Clark, George A. Van Emburgh was elected temporary chairman for the evening. There were eighteen members of the committee present and all seemed thoroughly enthused on the subject of raising the entire amount necessary to complete the improvement, and thus not place a mortgage on the church property. Each one present was given a subscription blank to solicit money for the object and a start was made by those in possession of the subscription blanks to try to raise the amount necessary.

Look Out For Oscar.

Oscar Vaughn, the new borough dog catcher, is meeting with great success.

SHE KEPT HIM A BACHELOR.

Yet Gave Him the Start in Life That Made Him a Success.

A Michigan lawyer, whose success has been an established fact for years, tells one incident in his life, from which he dates his prosperity:

"I had gone from a farm up in New Hampshire to Boston. In worldly matters I was deplorably ignorant, but in book lore I must have been something of a phenomenon, for so much that I have read was literature such as occupied the thoughts of the scholar a century or so ago. I had said farewell to the folks at home, and positively assured them that when I came back I would be a lawyer.

"I had my whole campaign mapped out, and you can infer I was a novice from my line of procedure. In my mind the Mayor of a great city exercised a sort of patriarchal sovereignty. From what I had read in my old books he was the father of his people. So I went to the Mayor of Boston; not to his office, but to his house, in the evening, and without invitation. He was the court of last resort in some sort of social function, and I was practically paralyzed when ushered into his august presence. The fine ladies about him put the finishing touches on my timidity. As I look back I can recall that I spoke to him at first, then think, and finally suffer indescribable horrors. I was in a state of irresponsible extinction. But it was one of those same fine ladies that came to my rescue. With a tact that would have won her fame as a cross-examiner, she drew me out, delighted with the quaint knowledge that I possessed, interested the Mayor in spite of himself, and he actually put me into an office where I was self-sustaining from the start.

"When admitted to the bar I found an opening in the same office and have always been satisfied that it was the Mayor who found it for me. I tried to induce that fine young lady to come with me, but she was just as tactful in refusing my proposal as she had been in helping me to success. I think it is her fault that I am a lawyer, and I know it's her fault that I'm a bachelor."—Detroit Free Press.

THE CAMEL'S HUMP.

The Latest Scientific Explanation of Its Origin and Purpose.

Where did the camel get its hump? He is known to have had not originally two humps on their backs. So says Professor Cattaneo, of the Italian Institute of Science. The proof that they did not and the explanation of why they have them now is given by this scientist in a recently published monograph, which is the result of scientific study of the subject.

The llama is known to have been used as a beast of burden centuries before the discovery of the western hemisphere, but the camel existed thousands of years before the first llama carried a load upon its back the camel had been domesticated and was used for the transportation of burdens.

It is upon this point that the Italian savant rests his theory as to the formation of that animal's hump. In the beginning, he says, the camel, like the llama, was straight of back, but a hundred centuries, perhaps, of making a pack animal of the camel have brought about the change. At first the skin grew loose upon the camel's back. Then there and upon its knees the skin grew thick and callous. Soon nature began to pad this burdened part with fat and muscle; then for countless generations heredity did its work; little by little the hump grew, until it finally acquired its present size.

The use of the camel in the desert places of the world also played its part in the formation of this portion of its anatomy. For, being forced to go without food for days at a time, nature came to the rescue of the camel and providently stored these humps with fat which should nourish the beast through its periods of privation.—New York Journal.

A Narrow Escape.

A very quiet and unobstructive grocer, now living in Omaha, was, so years ago, a scout and frontiersman in Nebraska and the Dakotas, when buffaloes and Indians were plenty. One day he was out on a hunt for game to supply a party he was guiding, when he encountered a small herd of buffalo. He had brought down two of the big animals and was aiming at a third, when the last, instead of running away, ran directly toward him. He was more surprised than alarmed, as he had a good pony under him, but as he wheeled when the herd surrounded him, the pony slipped and fell. There was only one way to escape being trampled to death; he seized the mane of the nearest buffalo and vaulted on its back. The strange steed stayed with the herd for a mile or more, and then struck off for Reed. Taking advantage of this move, the scout, with his revolver shot it behind the left fore leg, and down it came to the ground. "I was well satisfied with three buffaloes that trip," said the old-time hunter, "and I'd been satisfied with that last one myself."—Golden Days.

CRANKS' COLUMN.

Suggestions that Emanate from Fons of Bicycle Riders.

During the past three years there has been a tremendous boom in the bicycle business in England. New companies have been formed, and old companies have doubled and trebled their capital stock, until the total amount of money invested in making these wheels is something enormous. Now it is seen that the business is overdone. There is a large surplus stock of wheels on hand, and the one way to sell them is to cut the price. Much of that is done there will be a shrinkage of dividends on the vast capitalization, and that means a semi-panic in that line. The only chance is to sell the wheels in foreign countries. But there is small chance of that. France and Germany supply their own demand, and there is no market elsewhere in Europe. This country will not buy English wheels, because they are heavy and clumsy, according to our notions. Altogether, the outlook is stormy in the late across the sea.

Owners of suburben real estate and farmers living near a city should be the last to urge a tax on bicycles. Nothing has exerted so marked an influence upon the rise of land values as the wheel. Thousands of residents of the city owe to the bicycle their first introduction to country life. They see the country under the most favorable auspices, and it is only a question of time when they will take up their residence in the suburbs. This increases the value of building lots, and every year sees farming land mounting in price as it is sought after by builders. Wheelmen demand good roads, and good roads mean good buildings. It has taken a long time for farmers to realize how wasteful they are in spending thousands of dollars every year to patch earth roads, instead of building stone roads that do not need patching, but there is evidence that they are learning the lesson.

Riding with extremely high gears will be overdone before the 1897 season is half over. An 90 gear is too high for all-round use under any circumstances. Numerous riders are starting out this year with 84's or higher. Nothing can be gained by any rider, no matter what his muscular power, by using anything higher than 72 or 74, speaking, of course, with reference to road riding. Extremely high gears have been judged excellent for track work by many well-known racing men, but there should always be a distinction between road gear and racing gear.

Women riders have some trouble with the lacing on the dressguards on the rear wheel. It occasionally breaks or becomes detached, and a writer recommends insulated wire as a substitute. This sounds very well in theory, but experience has proven the contrary. The wire will spread at the eyeholes, and when it does, is almost certain to tear the rider's skirt. With care in renewal, the soft cord dressguard is better than any substitute that has yet been devised.

It is announced by the great Pennsylvania Railroad that hereafter bicycles will be carried free as baggage throughout Pennsyvania and New Jersey. The wheelmen are jubilant over the news, and it is pleasant to record that the company made the concession without any coercion by the law-making powers. One by one the railways are falling into line in this matter.

In Baltimore parks wheelmen are not allowed to coast between 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., and we hear that "they complain bitterly against the restriction." According to their notion, they should be allowed to coast at all hours, the pedestrian to get out of the way or be run over. It is this class of wheelmen who create all the opposition to the sport that is occasionally manifested.

Two wheelmen are employed by the House of Representatives at Washington. Their salary is five dollars a day each, and their duty is to carry copy and proofs between the Capitol and the Government Printing office. This is but one of the many ways in which a little bit of business with a great deal of pleasure.

Those short-sighted people who are in favor of taxing bicycles and applying the proceeds to make smooth and substantial roads should read up on Russia. In that country bicycles are taxed, and her roads are the worst in the world.

It is estimated that a bicyclist can travel over fifteen miles of good road on his wheel with less exertion than he can walk four miles on foot.

A bill for the taxation of bicycles has been defeated by the Vermont Legislature.

"It is imply astonishing the way the bicycle is displacing the horse."

A WISE CROW IS DICK.

The Bird Seemed to Understand His Mistress' Remark.

Mrs. James D. Martin of North Bennington, Vt., has a crow that is a born humorist. It is continually playing pranks on the different members of the Martin household. The bird's name is "Dick."

"Dick" has a strong love for jewelry, and never allows an opportunity to steal a ring or other ornament to pass. Recently Mr. Martin missed a plain gold ring. She at once suspected the crow of being the thief.

"Dick," she said, "where is the ring you stole?"

"Dick" cocked his head pertly to one side, and then looked at his mistress from the corner of his little beady eye. He shook his black head violently, and then flew out of the open window to the limb of a nearby tree.

"There's no use trying to do anything with that crow," said Mrs. Martin. "The rascal has hidden it somewhere, and we will never find it again. I know what I'll do. I'll just have the men kill that crow."

"Dick" evidently had overheard every word, for he peered into the room anxiously, even in a manner for which he is famous. When Mr. Martin entered the room an hour or so later she found the ring lying on a table. "Dick" was demurely perched on the back of a chair.

"So you did bring the ring back, did you?" said Mrs. Martin, sharply eyeing the bird.

"Dick" looked at her for a moment, and then hopping from the chair to the floor, tried in a manner that was extremely ludicrous to beg her pardon.—Cor. New York Press.

A BATTLE IN THE SEA.

Did you ever see bluefish charge a school of menhaden at sea? That is something worth seeing. The bluefish throw their lines forward until they almost surround the menhaden, and then close in on the rear. The menhaden fairly make the water boil in their efforts to escape, while all around the enemy is at them tearing relentlessly.

Into all this commotion comes a great shark, like a pirate for the plunder, a school of menhaden all herded up for its benefit. It swims leisure into the midst of them, opens its mouth, and takes in half a dozen menhaden at a gulp. It swims around and bites out half a dozen more from the school. It gorged itself without effort.

But the menhaden are not nearly as much disturbed by the presence of the monster swimming about among them as they are by the charging bluefish. The shark takes half a dozen fish or more at a bite, while the bluefish only bites a piece out of a single fish, but there is only one shark, while there may be thousands of bluefish, plunging and tearing incessantly and maiming at every stroke.

The fish, of course, but under such circumstances the menhaden has less of fear than it has of contempt for him.

SOLDIERS' BEDS.

The French Soldiers Bed the Best of Any in Foreign Countries.

The soldier's bed varies notably in the different European countries. According to Dr. Virp, the following are the principal varieties, in which, perhaps, we may see the reflection of national characteristics. In England the bed is hard; the soldier lies on a thin mattress that rests half a dozen inches over a frame. In Spain the soldier has only a straw bed, but he is allowed besides this a pillow, two sheets, two blankets and a covered quilt, sometimes even a cover for the feet. It is almost the same in Italy and Austria he has a simple straw bed with one or two covers, neither sheet nor mattress. In Russia, until recently, the soldier slept with his clothes on, on a camp bed; but now ordinary beds begin to be the result of contact with more civilized countries. After this, it cannot be doubted that the French soldier's bed is the best of all, with its wooden or iron bedstead, a straw bed, a good mattress, sheets, a brown woolen coverlet and an extra quilt for cold weather. Thus the bed of the French soldier is the softest of all soldiers' beds, as that of the French peasant is acknowledged also to be the best of all European countries.—British Medical Record.

A Friendly Critic.

Sir John Millais was once attending a celebrated case at Bow street, and was accommodated with a seat in the press box. In front of him sat a youthful new addition to the staff of a leading London illustrated paper. "Don't you think that would be an improvement?" suggested the great artist mildly, pointing out some technical defect in the sketch the youngster was engaged on. The young fellow was highly indignant at first, but eventually adopted the alteration, which so improved the sketch that he turned round and inquired somewhat patronizingly, "Who may you be, sir, who presume to correct my work?" For answer he received a card, on which was inscribed, "John Millais, R. A.," accompanied by the kindly remark, "We are never to old to learn." Perhaps you may be able to give me a timely wrinkle one of these fine days."

BARLEY-RAISING A SIN IN MAINE.

The Farmers will not Grow It to Sell for the Manufacture of Malt.

The brewing of malt and distillation of alcohol are and long have been regarded as very wicked by many people in Maine. But down in the big Aroostook country the farmers, or a portion of them, are actually up in arms against a proposition to increase their prosperity by the cultivation of barley as a crop. Frank Jones of Portsmouth, N. H., who uses a vast amount of barley in his breweries and who is also very largely interested in Maine, conceived the idea that it would be a good plan to have enough barley for his use produced on the fertile plains of Aroostook instead of sending to Canada for most of what he uses, as he does now. The Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture and the State land agent thought the idea a most admirable one. An arrangement was made whereby Mr. Jones, at his own expense, sent several carloads of barley into the Aroostook region, and a land agent Oak undertook to supervise its distribution among the farmers.

One would have supposed that the tillers of the soil would have been grateful for such aid and opportunity as were thus generously offered to them. But they were not. Far from it. Instead of meeting with gratitude and commendation, the State's agent has had to face what is described as "a storm of opposition." The Aroostook grangers are up in arms against barley and malt making. The members of the Houlton Grange have formally condemned barley-raising for beer-making purposes, and as no farmer can be absolutely certain that, if he raises barley and sells it, it will not be used for the manufacture of malt, it is obvious that they have practically pledged themselves not to raise any barley, except for their own use. It is asserted that the grangers in every town in the county have joined the county temperance league in a "crusade" against what was intended to be a beneficent project. The clergymen have joined in the hue and cry against the grain.—Hartford Times.

AN APPLICATION FOR A POSTOFFICE.

A Happy Idea for Husband and Wife not to be of the same Politics.

About four years ago a Republican in a Western town, who kept a general store, helped his wife, who is a strong Democrat, to get the appointment as postmaster. The office was in his store, of course, and naturally stimulated trade. But, as a Republican is now likely to be appointed in her place, the husband thinks he might as well be that Republican, and so has written a letter to his Congressman, in which he says: "I suppose there will be several applicants for the post office here. I think that a change should be made here at once. I have nothing to say against the character of the present incumbent and no charges to make against her. But, George, as you well know, she is one of the most bitter Democrats in this county. She talked and worked for Bryan so openly and persistently that I think it would be well to have her fired at once. I want the place. I don't send you a petition in my behalf because the folks here don't seem to think it would be proper, under all the circumstances. I rely on our old friendship to secure your hearty indorsement.—New York Tribune.

A Comparison.

The very loquacious man had come to a pause in his discourse, and an admirer took advantage of the lull to say:

An Age Limit.

"No, not exactly. He said that I was old enough to have more sense."—Washington Star.

CURRENT COMMENT.

One very suggestive fact connected with the creditable undertaking of Philadelphia in erecting a monument to Washington is the typically delicate and leisurely way in which it has been carried out. The erection of a pedestal for the Bartholdi statue in New York harbor, and of a mausoleum to Grant on the Riverside Drive seemed rather slow work at the time; but these projects were carried on at a breakneck speed compared with the present memorial of the Pennsylvania branch of the Order of the Cincinnati, which was resolved upon as long ago as July 4, 1870. The first ten years produced about $3,600; but, thanks to the business sagacity of the custodian of the funds, Mr. Binney, the subscriptions were so invested, as fast as they were collected, that by 1825 they amounted to $5,100. Then the fact became manifest that, by patient waiting, the remainder of the fund of $150,000 originally desired would collect itself; and this policy seems to have accorded with the local temperment. For another half century Mr. Binney continued to care for the fund, and at his death, in 1875, its accretions, if we do not mistake, had brought it up to more than $100,000. Five years later it had grown to $137,000, and, besides, a new source of increase came in collections of $50,000 to be added to it. The time, indeed, was then ripe for building the monument; for already in 1876 plans had been asked for it, and by 1879 those of Prof. Siemering of Berlin had been accepted. The succeeding eighteen years, devoted to completing the monument without undue haste, have allowed the funds to accumulate still further, and it is said that in all they have reached about a quarter of a million. Thus this monument to the greatest of Americans, erected in the adopted home of Franklin, has its lesson not only of patriotism, but of patience and of the cumulative capacity of money wisely invested.

It is now certain that for some years to come imported sugar will have to pay a duty large enough to afford considerable encouragement to the native production of the commodity. The section of our country, indeed wherein sugar can be profitably grown is relatively small; the two million tons of sugar which, on an average, have been annually consumed by us during the last three years, only about a tenth came from the domestic cane. There is reason to believe, on the other hand, that our capacity of producing the sugar beet is almost unlimited, and that a concerted movement for the development of the beet sugar industry would be of great practical value to American farmers. Some striking facts relating to this subject have lately been set forth in a pamphlet by Prof. H. W. Wiley, Chief of the Division of Chemistry in the United States Department of Agriculture, and formerly director of the sugar beet experiment station in Nebraska.

The products of convict labor, home or foreign, are not welcome in our markets, the opposition coming from producers who do not use convicts and who think they ought not to be subjected to competition with them. Senator Gallinger introduces an amendment to the tariff bill excluding convict-made goods, which is likely to pass, inasmuch as we discriminate against our own and even stop the work of prisoners altogether, supporting them the while in idleness, till it brings on, in many cases, the night of insanity, in which no man can work. Roadmaking and labors of the sort supply the true solution of our domestic problem, leaving foreign countries to starve with their own as they may, only insisting that they shall find a home market for whatever their felons may produce. As they complain of nearly all the features of any tariff which we are able to make, they are quite sure to complain of this, which, however, should make no difference and probably will not.

The warship Brooklyn has had her final trial trip and is in complete order. Now let her get out to sea before she tries to enter a drydock. Our naval vessels seem to do very well on the ocean but they cannot manoeuvre about the drydocks without danger of injuring those structures or themselves, or both.

Ex-Senator Peffer, of Kansas, favors a system under which all freight shall be carried at a single fixed rate, as mail matter is now transported, regardless of distance. Under that arrangement it would cost as much to ship a barrel of mess pork from Wichita to Topeka as it would to haul it from San Francisco to New York.

"See here!" bowled the manager, "does it take you four hours to carry a message three streets away and return?"

"Wy," said the new office boy, "you told me to see how long it would take me to get there and back, and I done it."

Silas K. Wegg (of Chicago)—To-morrow, my gal, we shall arrive in Europe. Now, I don't want you to marry any of them counts or dukes. Just you wait until we run across some king in reduced circumstances.—Pick-Me-Up.

ONLY GRAND ARMY WOMAN.

Interesting Career of Mrs. Scelye, of Texas.

"I was present at the mustering of a woman as a member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Houston, Tex., on a recent visit to that city."

The remark was made by Past Commander-in-chief A. G. Weissert, who went to Texas the last week in April to attend the department encampment.

"You know that our order says only such as have an honorable discharge from the army or navy can be received into membership. This woman had such a discharge. The commander was George B. McClellan Post, No. 9, of which she desired to become a member, submitted the papers to me. The discharge was found to be regular, in all respects. There was no excuse for refusing her request, so she was duly mustered in as the to-day member of the Grand Army of the Republic as any man among the 350,000 comrades. She is the only woman now belonging to the order or who has ever been regularly received as a member. Her name is Mrs. Sarah Edmonds Seelye. She has lived as La Forte, Tex., for some time, where she is highly respected by all classes. She is married.

"In 1861 she was living with her parents at Flint, a little town in Michigan. A young man down here, she had not love him. Her parents favored the match. She was so distressed over therr determination that when Col. Israel B. Richardson, later Gen. Richardson, a division commander killed at Antietam, was organizing the 2d Michigan Infantry, she left home, clad in male attire, and enlisted as a private in Company F as Frank Thompson, and went with the command to Washington, performing all the duties of a soldier faithfully. She marched with the regiment to the first battle at Bull Run, and while the command was not engaged it was part of the force that covered the retreat to Washington. The 2d was connected with Phil Kearney's division when McClellan went to the peninsula, and it played a prominent part in the battle of Williamsburg. Frank Thompson winning the praise of the Captain for bravery. The regiment was one of the best Michigan sent to the war.

"The late Col. D. M. Poe, of Detroit, an officer in the regular army, when he was appointed Colonel of the 2d Michigan, had Frank Thompson detailed as orderly at headquarters. She served as an orderly in the battle of Fredericksburg, was a most skillful rider and carried messages through showers of shot and shell with a fearlessness that attracted the attention and secured the commendation of field and general officers. There was not even a whisper of humbug about the soldiership of Frank Thompson, the woman veteran just made a member of the Grand Army.

"After this woman had been a soldier for nearly two years, standing guard, drilling, going on picket, participating in battles, being detailed on the skirmish line, taking part in great battles she had reason to believe that she was in danger of being discovered. This so preyed upon her mind that she left the regiment without leave, put on women's clothes, and immediately became an army nurse, serving as such until the end of the war."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

FLOUR AT A CENT A POUND.

A Large Business Done in Waste Samples at the Produce Exchange.

Visitors to the Produce Exchange often call attention to the great number of pasteboard boxes filled with flour, which are arranged on the marble-topped tables on the floor of the Exchange. Each one of these boxes contains a sample of a particular brand of flour which some broker has for sale.

None of this flour goes to waste. Every bit of it is sold in the store down in the basement to people who come every morning to buy the flour. They get it for a cent a pound, and they can purchase two pounds or as many hundred pounds. The store opens at 6 o'clock in the morning, and remains open until the supply of flour is exhausted. It is located in a room in the basement, on the Stone street side of the Exchange. Every day, after the close of business, all the flour in the blue boxes, of whatever grade, is gathered up and brought down to the store, where it is put into a large bin and thoroughly mixed. It is said that the mixing of all these grades makes the most nourishing flour that can be produced. The annual income from this source is more than $7,000, and is going to defray the expenses of the Flour Inspection Bureau.

The buyers of the flour comprise almost every nationality. Italians are the largest buyers. Another regular customer is the pretzel baker, who comes around about twice a week and buys up the entire supply of flour for one day, which he uses in making pretzels.—New York Sun.

THE WORLD MOVES.

AND THIS DESPITE EFFORTS OF GOOD PEOPLE TO STOP IT.

The Rev. Minot J. Savage Pitches Into the Dismal Moralists Who Fail to See Anything Good in Life—Hot Shot for Cur-Socialistic Ideas.

The Rev. Minot J. Savage is the latest acquisition of importance to the pulpit of the metropolis. He came from cultured Boston to assist the venerable Dr. Collier, "the learned blacksmith" as pastor of the Church of the Messiah.

Already his sermons are attracting wide attention. Recently he preached upon the theme, "Is it true that the world is really getting worse?" The preacher said, in part:

"There are a great many persons who say that, no matter how bad former times were, the present times are out of joint. They are reformers of a certain sort. They really wish to do humanity a service. They believe that if they can convert the world to their notions the millennium will shortly come. There are temperance orators who insist that there was never so much drunkenness in the world as there is to-day. Then, and this is most remarkable, there are leaders of religious thought in church as who can see nothing good in the present and little to hope for in the future.

"There is a certain type of men who can see everything better in the past than in the present, and this type has always existed. But, in spite of them and in spite of the patriarchs of old, there never was a time when the average length of life was longer than it is now, nor when man's nature was so large. We have heard that 'there were giants in those days,' but nobody has ever seen them. I know, from my own experience, that the mighty-statured men of ancient England, whose armor is now in the Tower of London, were smaller men than I am. I know because I know that I could not wear their armor, and I'm not a large man. And so we must conclude that these statements about the past are only fond delusions held by those who forget all the evils of the time, and remember only its romance and its glories.

"There are some leaders in church thought just now busy in prophesying all sorts of evil days to come. They tell us that the poor are growing poorer and the rich are growing richer, and that, unless the barriers that guard enormous wealth are broken down, evil days will be in store for us. Just what these men propose to do in order to make things better I can't make out. They can fill our eyes with the gloomiest of pictures, but they offer us no satisfactory shelter from the storm that they say is certain to descend. They talk about the misery of the laboring man and the heartlessness of the rich. I don't know just what they mean by the laboring man. I speak as a laboring man, because I work for a living, and I would consider myself fortunate if my day's work were done after ten or even eighteen hours' labor. It is an unfortunate set of terms we have to designate the laboring man. Let me remark, though, that the man who is an enemy to accumulated wealth is an enemy to civilization; and he who is an enemy to civilization is an enemy to society. This is true, because accumulated wealth is the first condition of civilization. If all the men and women were obliged to work as hard as they could for the mere necessaries of life there would be no civilization. Man would be a mere animal. It would be death to civilization, in a technical sense, if everybody had to work for a living. If we had no books, no pictures, no music, any statues, any paintings, some men must be set free.

"There is no use in being envious of those who are richer than you are. The finest things in the world cannot be monopolized. A rich man may be able to buy the work of art, but there will be a loan exhibition, and you and I can go and look at the rich man's possession. A rich man may be able to drive a coach and four, but you and I are healthier, because we can only afford to walk. And love, friendship, and the service of God and humanity—the richest of all blessings are the heritage of the world.

"The percentage of profit to labor today is greater than it used to be. The percentage of profit to capital is less. The condition of the wage earner to-day is better than it ever was, because he gets what he needs cheaper. I don't know anything about the workings of the trusts that some men inveigh against. I do know, however, that, because of these trusts, you and I can get better and cheaper oil and better and cheaper sugar. Many small dealers may have been crowded out of business, but the great public, the laboring men, you and I, have been benefited.

"You owe your very existence to the toil of your fellow men. What we hold in only in trust. Let not the rich man flaunt in the face of the poor, and let not you and I, the laborers, the poor men, destroy that wealth with dynamite or crook at others' prosperity. Let us show to the world that we place our manhood first, and let us work together to make the world better. Let us not delude ourselves that we can get on a pace for the improvement of freedom. The ideal that we all get what we want and the world will stop for us to get it is a lotus-eater's dream. Humanity is on the march. We must keep up with the procession by our own exertions, or the chariot wheels of progress will roll over us and we shall be left behind."

LEGION OF HONOR DECORATIONS.

A Law Passed Limiting the Number of Members to 12,000.

Of all the French institutions, perhaps only one of any national importance is a monument to the consulate. That one is the Legion of Honor, which Napoleon organized while that most transitional of governments was in existence. It appealed strongly to French instincts, has survived all the changes through which France has passed since that time, and its bit of red ribbon is still considered a sufficient reward for most important services to the state. Napoleon III. bestowed the decoration so widely and with so little regard for the character of the men whom he made chevaliers that for a while the order fell into some disrepute. Toward the close of that unfortunate monarch's reign there were about 25,000 civil members, besides all those who had been decorated as soldiers. To restore the prestige of the order an act was passed in 1872 providing that only one new chevalier should be nominated for every two vacancies caused by death. The effect of this is to reduce the number of civil knights to 10,000, but recent ministries have found the awarding of the few favors of this sort at their disposition created for them vastly more enemies than friends. The Moline cabinet has solved the difficulty itself, at least, by introducing and securing the passage of an act repealing the law of 1872, and substituting for it one fixing the number of civil knights permanently at 12,000. There was a long debate in the chamber of deputies on this bill, and the socialists opposed it fiercely, but the measure finally passed by a vote of 344 to 124.—New York Times.

GREELEY'S WRITING.

Two Roosters Imitated His Chirography and the Old Compositor Set It.

There was only on printer who could read Greeley's writing well enough to put it in type. He used to boast that he could read the great editor's wondrous scrawl asnile away.

One night while in the New York Tribune composing room "put up a job" on the old man. They took two roosters, made them walk around on a newly inked form, and then run all over ten sheets of copy paper.

The foreman wrote over it, in Greeley's well-known scrawl, "The Plain Duty of Congress," and put it on old man Lawton's hook. I think his name was Lawton, but if it was not it does not matter much.

The old printer picked it up, swore a little, remarked that they had to shove the stuff on the old man as usual, adjusted his spectacles and began sticking type.

The other printers watched him for a few minutes, but beyond a muttered oath or two he gave no sign. Lawton went on setting type until about half way through the "copy."

Then he was stuck.

He took the copy over to the foreman and asked:

"Jack, what is that word?"

"I don't know," replied the foreman. "You know I could never read that stuff."

Lawton took the sheet down to Greeley and pointed out to him a particularly awful scrawl of the rooster's foot, asking what that word was.

Greeley looked at it a moment, and replied with a frown:

"Unconstitutional,' of course."

Lawton went back to the composing room and finished his task with the utmost sangfroid.

Refurbishing the Fez.

A business in Constantinople, monopolized by the Greeks or Armenians, is the renovation of the fez. This headgear, which is worn almost universally by the male population, is manufactured in France. It very soon, however, loses its pristine jauntiness, and becomes a limp and dejected affair, that gives to its owner a raking air of imbecility not to be borne. In this condition it becomes necessary to resort to the fez restorer, who promptly adjusts the offending headgear over a heated brass pot, shipped like a flower pot. Over this goes a second conical pot, which is made to revolve briskly around the lower one by means of two handles. When this is removed the fez is found to have regained its youthful appearance and vigor, and is returned to its rightful owner, who sends patiently by.—Leslie's Magazine.

Co-operative Applause.

Sarah Bernhardt was playing Fedora to a crowded house. The poison scene, as usual, elicited a tempest of applause from the audience, but ere the clapping of hands and the stamping of feet had completely died away loud peals of laughter burst forth from the upper part of the theatre. The sober-minded people in the boxes and stalls gazed reproachfully at the boisterous "gods," but in a moment, they, too, began to laugh, for in the front row of the balcony and in full view of all stood two one-armed men, who, unconscious of the amusement which they caused, were energetically co-operating to prolong the applause by clapping their remaining hands together.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A WHOLE STATE RUN BY WOMEN.

Farm the Land, Repair the Roads, and Send the Men to Work in the City.

The woman question has been on trial for years in a country the conditions and tendencies of which seems more outspokenly opposed to progress in that particular direction than those of any other land. It may sound strange, yet Russia is the empire referred to.

In Central Russia is the township of Besjukovetschina. There, in 1861, after an epidemic that reduced the peasants to starvation, the women, led by Saschka, ordered the men to leave and go to the city to find work. The women remained alone and began to till the farms. The men were allowed to return only for the holidays.

The woman state comprises a territory of ten square miles, and is divided into seven villages. Saschka and seven other women, the wives of the exiled elders, administer to all public affairs, such as the levying of taxes, the allotment of acres to the various families, the keeping up of the churches, the paying of the shepherds, etc., etc. They also assume the recruiting officer's duties by sending to the city male help, attaining the proper age to town in order to submit to medical examination.

In the Summer the fields of the district afford a peculiar aspect. One may ride over the Besjukovsatschina domain from morning till night without meeting a single male being. All the work, the hardest as well as the lighter manipulations, is executed by women and girls of different ages. With naked feet and arms they trot behind the plough, throw out seeds and gather in the crops. Only a dozen or more sturdy members of the weaker sex engaged in lifting a mighty rock; again, we see others cutting down trees or subduing a bucking horse or a wild bull. Toward evening all bands assemble in the principal village of the seven villages to hear reports of common interest, the women acting Mayors being the speechmakers, who discuss public questions in decisive and businesslike manner. This done, the women go home to attend to their own affairs.

Besides cultivating the fields, they keep the roads in order, and occasionally set up a new cottage or stable.—New York Journal.

DIAMOND JIM BRADY.

The Pad of a Man Who Travels with Precious Stones for Diversion.

Accompanying a party of Southern Pacific officials returning from a conference at Monterey, Cal., that passed through Denver the other day was James R. Brady, who is engaged in the business of railway supplies. Mr. Brady is known as "Diamond Jim by his associates. When he dresses for a pleasure excursion, it is said, he goes about with $40,000 worth of diamonds hidden about his person.

He displays ordinarily a diamond scarf pin, a pair of diamond cuff buttons, and a ring or two. His watch is studded with diamonds, and cost $3,000. The diamonds that are not displayed conspicuously are said to be the costliest. He wears diamonds upon his garters and upon the buttons of his silk underwear have small diamonds set in them, and his suspender buckles are incrusted with gems. The chains of his suspenders are of gold. He carries with him a collection of umbrellas and canes, all of which have golden handles set with diamonds. He also carries matches in a diamond ornamented match case, and his cigars are offered to his companions from an elaborately enamelled and diamond incrusted cigar case. He lets his fad run unchecked in the matter of cuff buttons. He has twelve sets of cuff buttons, nearly as many sets of shirt buttons, and scarf pins innumerable, with the ornaments always diamonds. Of his many diamond rings of curious design, which he wears almost universally by the male population, is manufactured in France. It very soon, however, loses its pristine jauntiness, and becomes a limp and dejected affair, that gives to its owner a raking air of imbecility not to be borne. The Spider Growing Industry.

When mine host in the ideal country inn, which all of us seek but none of us find, brings up a bottle of crusted wine covered with cobwebs and dust, this outward and visible sign is taken as convincing evidence of age. We grieve to have to record that the trust may now be misplaced. A bulletin (No. 7) of the division of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture says that in France and Peninsula an industry has recently sprung up, which consists of the farming of spiders for the purpose of stocking wine cellars, and thus securing almost immediate coating of cobwebs to new wine bottles, giving them the appearance of great age. The industry is carried on in a little French village in the Department of Loire, and near Philadelphia, where "Epeira vulgaris" and "Nephila plumipes" are raised in large quantities and sold to wine merchants at the rate of $10 per hundred, are applied extensively. Strange to industry is one which will not be highly commended.—From Nature.

The Smallest Picture in the World.

Probably the smallest piece of painting in the world is that executed by a Parisian artist. It is painted on the smooth side of a grain of common white corn, and pictures a mill, and a miller mounting a stair with a sack of grain on his back. The mill is represented as standing on a terrace, and near it is a horse and cart, while a group of several peasants is shown in the road near by. The picture is beautifully distinct, every object being finished with microscopic fidelity, yet by careful measurement it is shown that the whole painting does not cover a surface of half an inch square.

GRANT'S DIFFERENT HATS.

Not Aware that His Japanese Servant gave Him so Many Changes.

In that trip after his return from abroad he had a little Japanese servant, who took charge of him as though the General was a bit of machinery and he was the engineer. Some of the newspapers noticed that as the course of one trip Grant had on six different hats, and they laughingly asked him what was the significance of the change. Grant said, "Why, I do not know; I supposed I had on the same hat all the time." Investigation brought out the fact that the little Jap, through the suggestion of some of the ladies of the party or some of the committee, had received ideas as to what kind of a hat the General ought to wear at certain towns. If it was a college town, just before he arrived the little Jap would tip-toe to the General, remove the black hat, place a silk hat carefully on the Generals head, and trip out, the General never losing a word of any conversation. At the next stop, if it was explained to the little Jap that it was a soldier town, he would exchange the silk hat and on went the General's military hat. He made it a rule for the General never to appear at two places in the same hat, and the joke of it was Grant himself did not know anything of the scheme.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

A BICYCLE UNDER WATER.

Used by a Diver When Searching the Bottom of the Sea.

Another use has been found for the bicycle. Having conquered the land, the all-pervading wheel has invaded the water and has proved that it can be of use to a diver while searching the bottom of the sea. In diving operations of the future a part of the outfit of the man who does a diving suit and explores the depths of the sea in search of lost treasure, parted cables, anchors or wrecks frequently will be a bicycle.

David M. Tulloch, a practical diver of a dozen years' experience, who has been employed by the United States Government in many operations along the Atlantic coast and who has also worked in South American waters, was the first man to use a bicycle in submarine work.—New York World.

She Raised the Boys.

Nine men sat in an unbroken row on one side of an Alley "L" car the other morning. Near the door sat one lone woman. Five women were standing, swinging on to straps as the train pulled out of Congress street terminus.

At 12th street two more women came in, standing before a row of men who couldn't see over their newspapers.

There was a mischievous twinkle in the eyes of the solitary young woman sitting near the door.

At 18th street the train slowed up with a squeaking and grinding of wheels. The gates rattled, and with a swing a young man in a fawn-colored coat, with a bunch of carnations in his buttonhole, stepped into the car. He was just reaching for a strap when the young woman at the door touched him on the arm.

He looked around inquiringly.

The young woman was standing, with a perfectly serious look in her face.

"Won't you have this seat?" she asked in a beautifully modulated voice.

But it was only for a moment. In the roar of laughter which followed every woman in the group found a seat.—Chicago Record.

A DOG ASSISTANT.

Wakes the Boarders in the Morning and Announces Breakfast.

An Asbury Park landlady has a dog that calls the boarders to breakfast. At 7:30 in the morning she says: 'Here, Jeff!' Go wake up the boarders."

Jeff mounts the stairs and seats himself in the hall and howls. He "bays the moon" on every landing in the house, and finally makes a tour of the hallways, howling all the time. This is the rising bell.

At 8 o'clock the landlady says: "Jeff, call them to breakfast."

This time Jeff emits joyful barks as he makes his tour of the house. He has a shorter trip back than in his breakfast call, and the boarders recognize it. Jeff only barks that way once a day. The rest of the twenty-four hours he is a quiet house dog, but in the morning is uneasy and suspicious until he is sure of his morning rounds.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

THE MAD KILLER.

Malay Methods of Suicide Sometimes Troublesome to the Public.

In the hush of the glaring noon there sounded an angry scream up the street, three seconds later a yell of pain, and the sobbing cry of a man cut deep through the lungs. It touched off the whole teeming populace like a match in a powder barrel; there was a frenzied rush of swarthy loafers for safety, and a sinking chorus of "Amok! amok!" the street cry of the far East which means many deaths in a short period. Out of a byway a lithe Malay tore blindly down the road, driving his knife into the stomach of a water-carrier as he passed. The carrier fell on his face with a thick cough, and the frantic man spun forward, with starting, bloodshot eyeballs, foaming at the mouth like a rabid dog, a narrow dripping kris in his right hand. He dashed furiously through the deserted stalls, and on through the town, till a big Lascar, fresh from his ship and hungry for a fight, sank his knife under the madman's ribs with the slipping upstroke which is the forte of all Lascars throughout the earth.

These ten minute dramas occur twenty or thirty times a year in Batavia and in most cities of the remote East. The pleasant Malay prefers this method of suicide to any other, and after losing his wealth at a gambling den in the East city slums, or his betrothed through fever, he decides on an amok. It is far less cold-blooded than common self-murder, and the red, rabid frenzy appeals to the hot blood of the race. He buries his kris in the body of the nearest man, and keeps the line of a maddened jackal through the town, killing to right and left, till a readier knife ends him. Eleven victims have been known to succumb to one amok run at times a powerful hillman will cut down a score of bystanders before he meets the point. In all countries of the farthest East you will find that ruin breeds this fever for the Running Kill.—From Answers.

ALDERMEN IN BELGIUM.

They Wound be Voted Slow by American Municipal Heroes.

My guide of varied accomplishments combined, as business men abroad often do, the roles of country gentleman, manufacturer, bank president, school trustee, and—forsooth the gulf between this kind and the typical American "boss" holds the more important position of alderman. In every city the alderman and mayor, or burgomaster, are of high social repute, elected to office because of special fitness for the branch of public affairs they are chosen to manage. Said one, with horror and shame: "We hear that in American aldermen are sometimes—thieves!" The first "alderman of public instruction" to whom I presented my credential in a Brussels commune proved to be a barrister of note, author of several well-known law treatises. In another commune the alderman of public instruction is professor at the normal school, pet-grave and public spirited. The alderman responsible for the Ghent school bills also the chair of political economy at the university, keeps in touch with the methods of other nations, reads the reports of the United States department of labor, and, much to my surprise, identified for me from hearing seen my name in one of those volumes. The faculty of the university at Liege has more than one representative in the "college" of aldermen—a supreme title, losing none of the dignity when applied to the body of brilliant men who administer civic affairs with scrupulous fidelity on broad, wise lines.—Harper's Magazine.

The Whipping Post.

Prior to our Revolution a whipping-post stood in Philadelphia, at the southeast corner of Third and Market streets. They were also to be found in most other American cities at that time. The pillory, which usually accompanied the whipping of criminals, was regarded as a species of public entertainment. The rabble evinced much pleasure in pelting the culprits with eggs, vegetables, and clods that Watson, in his historical annals of Philadelphia, declared that, inasmuch as these punishments were inflicted only on market days, the price of eggs was then systematically higher than common.

Two centuries ago these punishments were frequently accompanied by the barbarity of slitting the nostrils or clipping the ears of the worst offenders. Afterward the Sheriff usually held up the excised fragments of the ears to the gaze of vociferous applause of the multitude. We have no record indicating that nose or ear-splitting ever prevailed in America, but instead thereof the pitiless pelting of the offenders with mud or eggs was a universal custom bequeathed to Old England, and practiced until the date af the revolutionary war.—The Cosmopolitan.

Where the Charge Took Place.

"When you were in the war, did you ever take part in a charge?"

"Frequently."

"And what were your thoughts at the time?"

"That the beans would be all gone before I got there. The charges were invariably upon the cook-house, you know."—Boston Transcript.

Typewriting Injurious.

Now that type-writers are found in homes almost as commonly as the writing desk, it is perhaps pertinent to remind women that the use of the machine is very harmful to a piano player. The sharp staccato movements of the writing machine stiffen the fingers and tend to lessen the suppleness necessary for the piano keys.—Philadelphia Ledger.

ARTIFICIAL FLIES.

The Natural Insect Closely Imitated—Color Carefully Studied.

Artificial fly making is a greater industry than any one outside the trade, save a practical fly fisher, realizes, and as it is work in which women are as capable as men, it follows that feminine labor is much employed by the wholesale firms. The qualities essential to success are a delicate hand, extreme dexterity, good eyesight and plenty of patience.

Besides the hundreds of natural flies that have to be more or less closely imitated, there are fancy flies of almost equal number to be made, for anglers, as a class, have more fads than any other of the sporting community.

In preparing her work the dyer must collect all the necessary materials and place them on a table well exposed to the light, and must also see that the silk and feathers are dyed to the correct colors. This is very important, as unless particular dyes are used the fly will soon lose its original color and look worthless. Some colors, too, change when damp, and all these things have to be carefully calculated.

A vise is attached to the table, and is made in such a way that it is almost level with the chin of the worker, so that she will be able to avoid stooping. The other tools needful—and they are specially made—are a pair of tweezers, a sharp pair of scissors and a needle for arranging the feathers when the fly is completed.

The materials used for salmon flies are very numerous, consisting of silks and wools of various shades, silver and gold tinsel and a vast assortment of feathers. In many respects, however, it is more difficult to dress trout flies than salmon flies, the reason being that some of the former species are intended to represent very minute insects; the body of one fly is most carefully shaped with a fine-pointed quill taken from a starling's feather.

Naturally the smaller flies used for the commonplace fish do not call for so many materials in the manufacture as do the salmon flies, but to tie a midge, and tie it artistically and, at the same time, firmly enough to stand the wear and tear of continuous casting, requires a sure as well as delicate hand. A well-known medical man, who is an expert angler, tells me he has one fly which he has brought more than seventy trout. The name of the man or woman who tied that fly ought to be immortalized.

There is a great art in arranging the small strips of feather for the split-winged flies, so that on the water as the natural insect does. The material used has sometimes to be dyed in two separate colors to obtain the precise tint required. Perhaps the easiest flies to make are those known as "hackle" flies, which have no wings.—From Woman.

THE SENATOR'S THOUGHT.

Puzzled as to What He Should do With the Remainder of His Salary.

Apropos of the leasing of houses by officials a story is told of one of the Senators who lives in modest quarters in Washington. Senator X, it seems, made it known that he was looking for a residence, a furnished residence, and that he wanted to take a lease of it for six years. He was accordingly beset by agents and house owners of all sorts in different parts of town. One of these, more importunate than the rest, was a woman of wealth who owns and lives in a very handsome house, elegantly furnished and decorated with many fine pictures and rare works of art.—Boston Globe. She followed the Senator from pillar to post, and finally, to get rid of her, he promised to go through the house.

"Now, Senator," said she, when they had thoroughly inspected it, and had stopped in the drawing-room to talk the matter over, "I am going to rent this house to you for a mere song, because I am anxious to have some one in it who will look after my treasures while I am away on a trip."

"How much, madam," demanded the Senator, "do you propose to ask for your house by the year?"

"Four thousand five hundred dollars," said the lady, "and at that price I think it is the most reasonable house in town."

The Senator walked to a window, and stood with his hands in his pockets, looking out. He remained in this attitude for so long a time that his hostess grew a bit restive.

"What are you looking at, Senator?" she asked.

"I am not looking," said the Senator, "I am thinking."

"Well, what are you thinking about?"

"My dear madam, I am thinking," replied the Senator courteously, "if I took this house, what in the world I would do with the remaining $500 of my salary."

Observing the Properties.

"Now," said Mrs. Gumrox, "I guess we're all ready for the dinner party."

"Sure you haven't forgotten anything?" replied her husband.

"Oh, yes! There's one little matter that I wish you would attend to for me. I want you to telephone to the confectioner and have him send up two or three pounds of bon mots. I understand they are considered proper to have some between the courses."—Washington Star.

Did He Mean It?

"So he praised my singing, did he?" "Yes, he said it was heavenly." "Did he really say that?"

"Well, not exactly, but he probably meant that. He said it was unearthly."

THE MARTIN ACT.

Some taxpayers in Plainfield propose to test the constitutionality of the Martin act, or the vital feature of the act, which gives valid title to properties sold for taxes in conformity with the act. It appears that about all other points of the law have been adjudicated, except that of giving title, which is the essential principle of the law. No lawyer can safely say in advance what the decision of the Supreme Court or Court of Errors and Appeals in any case will be, and the courts have recently treated the State to some genuine surprises in their opinions. The Martin act is one of the most beneficent laws ever passed by the New Jersey Legislature. The act was framed by Newark and Elizabeth lawyers at a time when Elizabeth had defaulted in her bonds and was bankrupt, when Railway was in the worst condition, when the tax books of Jersey City contained records of millions of arrears of taxes and assessments, and when there were hundreds of thousands of tax arrears in Newark. It was only recently that the act was made to apply to towns like Plainfield, and why the property-owners in Plainfield should object to its operation is not quite clear to people in the larger cities of the State, who have witnessed and who appreciate its great benefits. There can be no reasonable opposition to the law, which could proceed only from chronic tax shirkers or that class of real estate speculators who hold vacant land without improvement and without paying taxes or assessments in the expectation of getting the "unearned increment," accruing from the enterprise of their neighbors, by selling out finally at a big profit to purchasers who will pay off the tax liens.—Newark Advertiser.

SUCCESS OF THE FETE CHAMPETRE.

The women of the Town Improvement Association fairly outdid themselves with their Fete Champetre. It was grand, original and pleasurable, in every essential a complete success. Even the most enthusiastic promoters of the event did not anticipate that it would result in such a conglomeration of spectacular and entertaining effects as was realized and commented upon by the Democratic assemblage who gathered there to enjoy the details as well as to unconsciously contribute their share to the kaleidoscopic picture of life and gayety observed on the broad and finely-cared-for lawns of Mrs. Pierre Mall—the Fete Champetre's sponsor. True, it was only due to the generous and energetic efforts of all concerned in the organization that the event came to such a success, but Mrs. Mall seemed to be the moving spirit and to her, if anybody distinguished mention should be given in connection with words of credit for the achievement of that of which she to be for the benefit of Plainfield people.

REPUBLICANS BEGIN TO STIR.

The Republicans of Union county are beginning to wake up after the rest that followed the national election and are now preparing again to take the field. The county committee held a meeting Saturday afternoon, and organized. Charles N. Codding, of Westfield, was chosen president, H. F. Crane, of Union, vice president, Charles Reed, of Rahway, was made secretary, and Samuel Ogden, of Elizabeth, treasurer. Ed Woodruff, of Elizabeth, and J. W. Murray, Jr., were made the Republican members of the County Board of Canvassers.

G. O. P. CLAM BAKE.

It is the intention of the Republican county committee to hold a big political picnic or clambake somewhere in the county during August and to invite Senator Sewell, Governor Griggs, John Kean, Franklin Murphy, and other prominent leaders of the party to be present. The idea is Chairman Codding's. A committee has been appointed to arrange the details of the affair.

THE HARMONY DINNER.

The harmony dinner of the Union county Democrats will take place on June 26th, at the Clark Hotel in Elizabeth. Senator Wm. D. Daly, of Hoboken, will be the chief orator. Jas. E. Martine, of this city, will also be a speaker.

Hundreds of thousands have been induced to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy by reading what it has done for others, and having tested its merits for themselves are to-day its warmest friends. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

USED AXES AND KNIVES.

A BLOODY AFFRAY BETWEEN TWO ITALIANS AT NETHERWOOD.

Quarrelled Over a Game of Cards and Then Tried to Kill Each Other—One Man in the Hospital May Not Survive His Wounds.

Axes and knives were used with such disregard for life in a little Italian shanty, near Netherwood, Sunday afternoon, that now two of the Italian occupants lie in Muhlenberg Hospital sorely wounded, perhaps mortally hurt. Who handled the weapons with such disastrous results it is impossible to tell. All that is known at present is that there was a fight and two of the participants were badly hurt. One of them is thought to be fatally injured. A little shanty, built of boards, stands some distance from North avenue, near Netherwood avenue. It is there that the men were found.

James Brown is one of the Italians in this city who have become Americanized and is now conducting a flourishing business among his fellow-countrymen. He has a store on Paradise alley and another at the corner of North and Leland avenues. Sunday, Jim, as he is usually called, rode up on his wheel to his Netherwood store, to feed the dog and chickens which he keeps in the rear of the house. While passing the shanty on the way up, he had seen a boy carry some clothing out to a wagon and then return to the shanty. Jim says that he understood that the boy was taking away the clothing of three Italians who were to go to Cranford Sunday night. Then he heard shouts but knowing the excitable temperament of his fellow-countrymen he thought nothing of it.

When he rode back again towards town, another young Italian rushed down to the road and implored him to come in. Brown did not fancy figuring in a fight and refused at first, but seeing that something out of the ordinary had happened, he went in.

There were five Italians in the shanty. One of them, a horrible sight from the blood that covered him, was lying unconscious on the wooden bunk in the corner. Another, with the blood dripping from a deep wound in the side of the head, leaned against the wall. The tall Italian, who looks after the shanty, told Jim that the two injured men had quarrelled over a game of cards. He said one seized an axe and the other a knife and fought until he separated them.

Then Jim hurried down to Paradise Alley and notified Special Officer Dennis Carney, who, in turn, told Chief Grant of the affray. Chief Grant and Sergeant Kiely took a cab at Cole's stable. Just as they turned into East Third street one of the rear wheels dished. Wm. Robinson was driving and pluckily held the horse and prevented a runaway. Then the officers tried again and took another cab.

Meanwhile, the Italian who had received a blow on the head with the axe, walked down town. He was a horrible spectacle, covered with blood. He attracted a large crowd on his way. He was finally met by Patrolman Flanagan, who took him to the station house. Dr. Long was called and found the wound a serious one.

Grant and Kiely reached the shanty and found that the wounded Italian was terribly injured. He was covered with wounds inflicted with a stiletto, and the blood flowed copiously from a score of gashes on his body. The ambulance was summoned and he was conveyed to the Hospital. The other injured man was also taken there.

The three witnesses in the shanty told the officers they had arrived after the fight had started and knew nothing of the circumstances. They were locked up, however, and held for the hearing.

The Italians are able to talk but little English and great difficulty was experienced in learning the circumstances. The man who was murderously assaulted with the knife gave his name as Vincesoso Dito, and the other injured man gave his name as Fancisco Irisia. The tall Italian, whose story to Brown did not agree with his story to the police, was Jordan Tedele. The other two were Joseph Dilucha and Francisco Livelitro.

Chief Grant and an interpreter went to the Muhlenberg Hospital this morning, and heard what the two wounded men had to say. Their stories agreed. They said that they had been playing cards and some words arose over a point in the game. They came to blows and one admitted striking the other on the head with an axe. He, in turn, said that he had used his pocket knife on the body of his companion. They said that their friends had not been in the shanty at the time of the fight but had returned later.

The three Italians, who were locked up, told the same story saying that they had not been there when the fight was in progress. They will probably be released as there is nothing to implicate them in the affair.

—A complaint has been made against John Keeley, one of the well-known hackmen of this city, for violating the back ordinance by soliciting passengers at the curb. His trial is set down for Saturday morning. The complaint was made by another hackman.

Saved By Science.

CAPSULOIDS CURE A NEW YORK MODISTE.

The Story of a Woman who Suffered for Seven Years—Her Case Baffled Medical Skill—Her Recovery Creates Widespread Interest.

Miss E. Vance, of 205 Columbus Ave., a well known modiste, is attracting much attention from the medical world because of her experience with Capsuloids, the new discovery of science.

It was late in the evening when a reporter called on Miss Vance to hear her own version of the story but notwithstanding the long day's work she had just finished he was cordially greeted.

"Yes," she said, "I believe I am one of the first in this country to try Capsuloids.

"Seven years ago owing to hard work and close confinement in cutting and fitting for a large tailoring business my health gave way and I was compelled to begin doctoring and take a rest. My trouble seemed to centre in and about my stomach; the liver was torpid and the stomach seemed a bundle of irritated nerves. I could not digest anything without discomfort: I was weak, anemic and nervous to such a degree that life was almost unbearable; a dizzy cold water, or a spoonful of ice cream taken in the evening would produce at first, a feeling of discomfort in the stomach and then a nervous spasm when it seemed to me my stomach was turning round and round. I vomited the bitterest stuff you can imagine, but the nervousness and weakness and distress which I can only describe by the word, horrible, in and about the stomach, troubled me most. Two years ago I took the grip, and again a year ago last March I was down with it the second attack I became so much more nervous and weak that I then felt like screaming at customers as they came towards me, and one day when alone with three or four of my assistants I flung my scissors to the other side of the room and declared I would not remain on duty another hour. Change of climate, rest, doctoring and many cures were tried but without success.

"Six weeks ago I heard of Capsuloids. When I procured them I obtained iron, I shook my head and said I could not take them.

"To make a long story short, I determined to try Capsuloids, and the improvement in my condition was manifest before the first box was finished. Now I am taking the third box and when I look in the mirror and recall my appearance six weeks ago, I am reminded of those pictures which one sees in advertisements marked 'before and after;' truly, Capsuloids have done wonders for me.

"I have taken them regularly three times a day for six weeks and although there never was a stomach more sensitive than mine, I have not experienced the slightest irritation or inconvenience. To-day I consider myself in perfect health, my stomach is strong, can eat cream and other articles of warm food at any hour of the day without feeling any inconvenience. I feel strong, enjoy my food, sleep well am free from nervous and the old feeling in the stomach has entirely disappeared, while the liver seems to be doing its work with perfect regularity."

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids cure disease by renewing the iron in the blood which is lacking. When a Capsuloid is taken into the stomach the gelatine dissolves immediately, the blood takes up the iron and becomes rich and red. Oxygen is attracted from the air cells of the lungs and the germs of disease are destroyed. It has been clearly proven that few diseases are exempt from this method of treatment, even those long considered incurable disappearing in a most surprising manner.

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids can now be secured of all druggists, the price being 50 cents a large box, or $2.50 for six boxes. If the druggist has exhausted his supply they can be procured by remitting the price to The Capsuloid Company, Downing Building, 108 Fulton Street, New York City

CYCLE COASTERS HURT.

Two women cyclers whose names were kept a secret attempted, on Saturday afternoon, to coast down the steep declivity and were thrown from their wheels and injured so badly that they were taken in carriages to a physician to be patched up. One of a party of three wheelmen, from Elizabeth, attempted the same coasting feat upon the hill Sunday, and when about half way down was flung to the side of the road, striking upon his head and cutting it badly. With the aid of his friends he managed to reach the Fanwood station where he took the 4:57 train for Elizabeth, a sadder and a wiser man.

To Remain at the Hospital.

Miss Emma R. Hartranft completed on Saturday her two years' course in the Training School for Nurses at Muhlenberg Hospital. But for the present she will remain at the Hospital, the managers having secured her services as graduate nurse to take special care of the operating room. Miss Hartranft's selection is a well-deserved compliment to her, and at the same time the arrangement is an advantage to the medical staff as thereby they make sure of the scientific care and service in the operating room which is deemed essential to modern surgery.

"There's no use in talking," says W. H. Broadwell, druggist, La Cygne, Kas., "Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy does the work. After taking medicines for my own prostration and those of others, I took a dose of Chamberlain's and it helped me; a second dose cured me. Candidly and conscientiously I can recommend it as the best thing on the market." The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

CRESCENTS DEFEATED.

CRACK SOMERVILLE BALL TOSSERS LAID THEM LOW.

The Plainfield Boys Were Weak Behind the Bat, But in the Pitcher's Box They Had a Strong Player in McLarney.

The perfect weather last Saturday afternoon did not attract all of the people to the Fete Champetre, for a large crowd assembled on the La-Grande avenue base ball grounds to witness the very excellent game between the Crescents and the Somersets, of Somerville. In spite of the fact that the home team lost the contest, the crowd was very well pleased with the exhibition. It is confidently believed that the home team lost the game through the inability of having a catcher that could hold McLarney, the new pitcher from Staten Island. The latter is one of the best pitchers ever appearing in Plainfield, and it was plain to be seen that he could easily have downed his opponents had their been a suitable backstop. A man named Kippling, from Roselle, went behind the bat for the first few innings, but he was soon displaced by George Mitchell, who did much better. The latter with a little practice would make a good catcher for McLarney and no doubt the two will be retained in their positions.

The Somersets played in great luck throughout the game and they took advantage of every little error made by the Crescents and made a total number of runs which the home team could not overcome. In the three different innings the Somersets made three runs in each and the total number of runs was thirteen, while the most made by the Crescents in one inning was four, with a total of eight. There was plenty of good batting and fielding mixed with a number of wretched errors. The two teams lined up as follows: Crescents—Townley, ss.; Bolsterli, 3b., c.; McLaughlin, 1b.; Symons, lf.; Kippling, c., 3b.; Lederer, 2b.; Mumf rd, cf.; Sutphen, rf.; McLarney, p. Somersets—Kelly, ss.; Francis, c.; W McLaughlin, p.; Mulligan, 3b.; Tirbey, cf.; Vandevoort, lf; Davenport, 1b.; Watts, 3b.; Morris rf. The score by innings is as follows:

The umpires were Fred Winn and Edward Erickson.

A LOW DOWN TRICK.

A White Woman Robbed the Pantry of Nuptial Nicknacks But Had to Settle.

'Twas a low down trick on the bride, at best, but luckily there was one unseen spectator and so the guilty party was made to settle after all. Last Thursday evening, Miss Paulina Coles and Eugene Johnson, two colored residents of Plainfield, were married in the Mt. Olive Baptist Church. After the wedding, there was a reception at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Walter Allen, 109 Plainfield avenue.

While the guests gathered in the front rooms and wished the couple success, somebody walked in the back door and visited the pantry. There was a great array of good things there and the visitors had plenty to choose from. At last, selecting a half a ham and eight quarts of ice cream, the visitor departed by the back door, unseen except by one of the family who watched operations from behind a door.

The visitor was a woman living not far from that neighborhood. She was soon called to account and threatened with arrest at once if she did not pay for the articles that she carried off on the night of the wedding. The required settlement was made and the matter was allowed to drop.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. V., and one of the most widely known men in the state was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing could be done for me and my friends were fully convinced that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June 1894, Mr. Evens, then salesman to the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

The objects of the organization are the purchase and sale of groceries, dry goods, hardware, tools, farming implments, machinery, horses, cattle, sheep, swine, milk and general produce and the manufacture of butter and cheese.

The place where the principal office is to be located is at North Branch. Other places designated where the business will be carried on are South Branch, Raritan, Somerville, Bound Brook, Lebanon, White House, Jersey City, Brooklyn and Easton, Pa.

A large store will be located at North Branch, for the use of the members. They will purchase fertilizers in quantities and deal in everything that a farmer buys or sells.

It is reported that a large store is to be opened in Somerville. The capital stock is $2,000 and the business will begin with $1,000 paid in.

SERVICES FOR CHILDREN

FLOWERS, SONGS AND RECITATIONS FILLED THE CHURCHES.

The Annual Custom of Devoting One Sunday in the Year to Special Services for Juveniles Was Appropriately Observed.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises at Grace M. E. church Sunday morning were the best ever held at this church. The church was prettily decorated about the platform with choice roses by Andrew Wilson who had charge of this part of the programme. The programme as rendered was as follows: Introductory address, Lizzie Hoagland; chorus, "A Garland for Jesus;" recitations, "Give Us a Chance," Arthur Van Arsdale; "Do Your Best," Malcolm Van Arsdale; "The Town of Used to Be," Lottie Benner; "Do All That You Can," Mabel Garey; "The Darling," Mildred Long; "Blooming for Jesus," Jennie DeMott, Anna Hoagland, Pearl Angleman, Ethel Most, Stella Kline, Ethel Noe; "If I Know," Alice DeMott; "Flowers Bring," Alice DeMott, Jennie DeMott, Ethel Noe, Kittie Rutledge, Ethel Most, Grace Titus. A dialogue entitled "The Young People's Republic," was given by Miss Lizzie Hoagland as "Liberty," and the following as stars: Grace Clark, Alice Layton, George Van Arsdale, Mabel Benzer, Lillian Haberle, Mabel Loomis. During the service a short address was made by the pastor, Rev. H. J. Johnson, and violin solos were rendered by Clarence Mills. There was also special music by the choir who used for the first time the new anthem books which were received last week. The committee in charge of the exercises consisted of Mrs. Most, Miss Marguerite Schuck and Mrs. A. A. Taft.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

Children's Day was indeed a pleasant one at Trinity Reformed church. A beautiful floral display was arranged by teachers of the Primary department, Mrs. Reighton, Mrs. Tier, Mrs. Sheppard, Miss Berkaw, Miss Arnold and Miss Grace Smith. The special services were held in the morning and the Primary department, in charge of Superintendent Mrs. J. M. Tier and her assistant, Miss Arnold, marched in the church from the lecture room, passing up the aisles to the front row of seats, reserved for them. After singing by the choir and prayer by the pastor, Albert Yeager, a manly little fellow of the Primary department, welcomed everybody in a little address he had committed to memory. The entire school then sang very acceptably hymn 167. Then followed a recitation entitled "Nellie's Mission Class," in which six misses of the Primary department took part, as follows: Hattie Randall, Hazel Martin, Lena Bohan, Anna Randall, Lucy Cordell, Rosie Randall. This was followed with singing "The Rocky Hill top" by the Primary department of the school.

At this point a very pleasant digression was made from the programme and the parents of nine little babies presented their children for baptism and dedication to God, the pastor officiating. Following this beautiful sight was a recitation by Anna Holder, entitled "On the Hills of Nazareth."

"A Coronet of Flowers," recitation, by Luella Day, Pauline Buckley Etta Trombley, Gussie Kreitling, Lulu Vail, Pansy Lacy, was then given, followed with more singing by the little people, entitled "Up the Mountain, Down the Valleys." Another recitation by eight little maidens, Bessie Randall, Lulu Vail, Minnie Nischwitz, Gussie Kreitling, Annie Bodine, Emma Yeager, Ida Tier, Mildred Caleen, was greatly enjoyed by all. Pastor Schenck then gave an interesting talk to the little folks, followed with singing by the entire school.

Superintendent Anthony was compelled to remain at home on account of the accident he met with one day last week and he was greatly missed by all. There was a large attendance at both the morning and evening services and the day was thoroughly enjoyed by the scholars and all in attendance.

FIRST M. E CHURCH.

Children's Day exercises were held in the First M. E. church, Sunday afternoon, by the members of the Sunday-school of that church. The address of welcome was read by Miss Gertrude Anderson. Recitations were given by Gertie Guyer, Helen Whitney, George M. Rittenhouse, Jr., Raymond Lyman, Amy Morcum, Eddie Bingaman, Violet Knight and Helen Joy. An exercise, entitled "Flowers," was given by seven members of the primary department.

"The Young People's Republic" was an exercise that made up the second part of the services. Those taking part in it were Ray T. Snodgrass, Roland Horne, Elmer Cutting, and the Misses Etta Raybert, Cora Shepard, Flora Campbell and Edna Harris.

The church was prettily decorated with daisies and roses.

CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

A special children's service was held in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church Sunday morning. The pulpit was tastefully decorated with flowers. A large choir of children's voices led the singing, and the pastor, Rev. Dr. Wm. R. Richards, preached an eloquent sermon on the significance and the opportunities of childhood. At the close of the sermon an offering was taken for Sabbath-school missionary work. At half-past 2 o'clock the children gathered in the Sunday-school room and enjoyed a service of song and responsive readings. Superintendent Murray read a letter of greeting to the children from Dr. James A. Worden, of the Presbyterian Board of Sabbath-school Work, and another letter from a boy in Utah, whom the school is helping to educate. A short address was made by Rev. Dr. Livermore, of New Market. The scholars then presented their mite boxes containing offerings for Sabbath-school missions, and the pastor dismissed the school with a benediction.

ALL SOULS' CHURCH.

Children's Day was appropriately observed in All Souls' church, Sunday. At the regular morning service the pulpit platform and desk were banked up with roses, peonies and daisies, and overhead running vines were prettily festooned. Before the sermon, eight little children were baptized. The handsome silver baptismal bowl, which was used in the service for the first time, was a gift of the church. Upon its side is engraved the following inscription: "To the Glory of God and in loving memory of Mrs. Sarah Stout, a benefactor of All Souls' church. Died, April 7, 1896." Much pleasant interest was aroused by the fact that Kenneth Safford Gaston, the first child to be baptized, is the son of the first couple who were married in the church. The pastor, Rev. A. C. Nickson, preached an appropriate sermon on "The Religion of Little Children."

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

At the First Presbyterian church, Sunday morning, the Children's Day exercises were held, and the Primary Department took a prominent part in the programme. There were several recitations and the members rendered a number of special songs. A feature was the reading of Dr. Worden's annual letter relative to mission work. Miss Grace Overton read the letter in a very pleasing manner. The pastor, Rev. C. E. Herring, made an appropriate address which the children all enjoyed as well as the older ones. The singing of special music by the entire school was a pleasing feature. During the service a pretty duet was rendered by Miss Charlotte Messersmith and Miss Kittie Glen. Altogether the service was one of the best yet presented and all in attendance fully enjoyed it.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

There was no regular session of the Sunday-school of the Park Avenue Baptist church, Sunday, the Children's Day exercises being held in the morning in place of the regular morning service. The address of welcome was given by Miss Nellie Giles. There were also recitations by the Misses Marion Shotwell, Retta Nash, Delise Purdy and Marion Dickenson. The pastor of the church, Rev. J. W. Richardson, made the address of the morning, which was of an appropriate character. The church was tastefully decorated with roses and daisies, banked about the desk and platform.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Children's Day service was held in the Congregational church, Sunday. The decorations were chiefly of daisies and roses, and were unusually taste ful. The primary department assembled in their own room, and marched to their place directly in front of the pulpit, with flowers in their hands, and singing "Here we come, here we come over hill and dale." The service included the christening of several little children, the presentation of Bibles to baptized children who had reached the age of seven years, a quartette by the choir a tenor solo by Robert Clark, songs by the school, under the leadership of the precentor, Frank O. Bristol, and the graduation of a class from the primary department. The class includes Edna Conde, Maud Emmons, Myra Emmons, Edith Glaentzer, Annie Jerolman, Eddie Grant, Arthur Robinson and Carl Steiner, but only five were present. These marched upon the platform, repeated the "Shepherd Psalm," the Creed, and the Lord's prayer, listened to a short address from the pastor, Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, and were presented with testaments, the gift of the school.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

The special services at the First Baptist church were held in the morning. The exercises by the children preceded the regular church service, when a short but pleasing programme was presented consisting of welcome address, by Jerry Manning; vocal trio, "What the Birdies Teach;" recitation, "The Seed is the Word," Beulah Van Winkle; chorus, "While Sabbath Bells," by the Primary Department. The regular service then followed and there was special music by the church choir with vocal solos by Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward, William Holmes and G. W. Smith. There was an interesting and appropriate sermon by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Yerkes. The decorations were pretty and the flowers used were from the conservatories of C. W. McCutchen and L. W. Serrell.

MT. OLIVE BAPTIST CHURCH.

The following programme was presented by the Sunday-school at the Mt. Olive Baptist church, Sunday afternoon: "The Child's Creed," primary department; recitation, Orabella Gibson; song, Anna Fisher; recitations, Edna Scudder, Ethel Kline, Ella Phillips, Etta Kingston, Sadie Doyle, Annie Connett and Anna Rose; addresses, Rev. Dr. Yerkes and Rev. P. S. Gibson; song, primary department. The primary department was in charge of Miss May E. Howlett, superintendent, and the general exercises were in charge of Superintendent M. C. Dobbins. At the close a handsome bouquet of roses was presented to the superintendent by the Sunday-school.

WARREN CHAPEL.

Appropriate and interesting were the exercises held at Warren chapel Sunday afternoon under the auspices of the Sunday-school. The programme was as follows: Singing by the school and primary department; address, Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, telling of Miss Rachel Maier's work in Africa; recitations, "'Tis Such a Beautiful Story," Mamie Squires; "Jesus Loves Little Children," Edith Squires; "My Work," Pauline Smith, Anna Herlitz, Maggie Maier, May Seader, Ida Wilson, Lottie Brown; "The Children's Mission," primary department; reading of letter from Miss Rachel Maier, of Africa, to the members of Warren chapel, Superintendent Lovell; address by the pastor, Rev. J. O. McKelvey. The collection for Foreign Missions amounted to $18.35.

NO ALMS, THREATENED.

MAN OF MANY PLACES HELD UP MR. HUI ON SOMERSET STREET.

Ezra Baldwin, a Composite Sort of Character, Made a Demand for Money and Said He Would Use Force With Next Request.

Ezra Baldwin is a composite sort of character as he hails from Newark, Philadelphia and Atlantic City. Saturday night he hailed Frez Hui, the barber, who was going to his home in the borough, and demanded money. Now Baldwin waits in the borough lockup.

He was going down Somerset street and had almost reached the borough line when he encountered friend Baldwin. Baldwin seized him by the sleeve and demanded money, so Hui says. Hui refused and ordered him away. Then Baldwin, it is alleged, told the barber that if he didn't give him money this time, he would do him next time, knock him down and take the money. The reason why he did not do it then—he explained, was because there were too many people around.

Hui departed on his way and met Chief Marshal Wilson, of the borough, told him the circumstances, and Wilson promptly put the man under arrest. He was locked up and will be turned over to the city authorities today.

Monday Hui appeared before Justice Newcorn and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Baldwin on the charge of assault with threats.

Baldwin was arraingned before Judge DeMeza Monday p. m. and was sentenced to 60 days and fined $100.

A. H. Patter, with E. C. Atkins & Co., Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "I have never before given a testimonial in my life. But I will say that for three years we have never been without Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in the house, and my wife would as soon think of being without flour as a bottle of this Remedy in the summer season. We have used it with all three of our children and it has never failed to cure—not simply stop pain, but cure absolutely. It is all right, and anyone who tries it will find it so." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

UNDER A LOVER'S KNOT.

A HAPPY NUPTIAL UNION CEMENTED BY VOWS OF LOVE AND FIDELITY.

Charming Marriage of Miss Bessie Evelyn Titsworth to Frank James Hubbard—Joined at the Bride's Home.

Under a bower of white carnations and smilax, Miss Bessie Evelyn Titsworth, daughter of Joseph M Titsworth, and Frank James Hubbard, son of Assessor Joseph A. Hubbard, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's father, on West Seventh street, June 9th at 7 o'clock p. m. It was a home wedding, but a very pretty one.

The ceremony was performed in the music room, under a bower of streamers of smilax and white carnations, while over all was a true lover's knot of white satin ribbon. Palms, smilax and pink roses were used in the decoration of the remainder of the room with very pretty effect. The bridal party entered from the parlor on the right of the hall. The ushers were first. They were William C. Hubbard, brother of the groom, Dr. Marc L. Clawson and Dr. Frank T. Clawson, cousins of the bride, all of Plainfield. Then followed the maid of honor, Miss Ethel Titsworth, sister of the bride, charmingly gowned in pink silk gauze. She carried a bouquet of pink roses. Last of all entered the bride leaning on the arm of her father. She looked very beautiful in a gown of white satin, with Venetian point lace and pearl trimming. Her tulle veil was caught up with the engagement ring. Her only ornament was a diamond and pearl brooch, the gift of the groom. She carried a bouquet of white bride roses.

The groom entered at the other door and was escorted to the center of the room by the best man, Charles E. Lawrence, of Brooklyn, an old college friend of the groom. Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, was the officiating clergyman and received the couple. The simple ceremony was performed and the couple knelt for the final blessing.

The ceremony was only witnessed by the relatives and very near friends of the couple.

A reception followed the ceremony from 7:30 o'clock to 9:30 o'clock, and the many friends of the couple gathered in the bride's home to congratulate them on the step just taken. The hall was decorated with smilax and roses while a chain of daisies extended along the balastrade. The parlors were decorated with smilax, palms, jack roses and other cut flowers. The dining room was also artistically decorated as was the table, from which a supper was served later in the evening.

A handsome array of presents was displayed in one of the upper rooms, including silver and glass-ware, china, furniture, and many other valuable presents. *Among them was a bed-*quilt pieced by a great aunt of the bride. It was a wonderful work, containing 22,481 different pieces. There was also a tufted sofa pillow, made by one who had been a member of the family when they were children, which contained pieces of gowns belonging to the mother and grandmother of the bride and many of her other relatives.

Mr. Hubbard, the groom, has been residing at 109 West Fifth street, and is a rising young civil engineer in this city. Both he and the bride attend the Seventh Day Baptist church in this city. Their place of residence on their return from the bridal tour has not yet been decided. They will make their home somewhere in Plainfield.

THURBER—FISK.

The Bride a Sister of Mayor Charles J. Fisk.

A large and fashionable gathering from New York and vicinity was present June 9th at Riverside, the country home of Mrs. Harvey E. Fisk, on the Delaware river, near Wilburtha, to witness the marriage of Miss Bertha Fisk and Dr. Samuel Wood Thurber, both of New York. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Edward E. Thurber, father of the groom, who is the pastor of the American church, Rue de Berri, Paris.

The bride's gown was of white satin en train, the front seams of the skirt being edged with point applique. The bodice was made entirely of point applique. The sleeves were puffed. A shirring extended the length of the sleeves, also edged with the point applique. The veil was of tulle, fastened by pearl and diamond ornaments. She carried a bouquet of bride roses and white carnations, bordered with maidenhair fern and tied with white satin ribbon.

The bridesmaids were Miss Bertha Terrell, Miss Moore and Miss Vail, of New York; Miss Ames, of North Easton, Mass., and Miss May Fisk. The maid of honor was Miss Evelyn Fisk. The train bearers were the bride's two sisters, Miss Dorothy Fisk and Miss Anna Fisk. The ribbon bearer was Master Harvey E. Fisk, Jr.

PLIGHTED LOVE FOR LIFE

FASHIONABLE CHURCH CEREMONY IN SMITH-PLACE NUPTIALS.

Hymen Finished in Marriage That Which Cupid Progressed in Love—The Union of a Happy and Popular Young Couple.

One of the most fashionable weddings of the season was that of June 9th when Miss Estelle Place, daughter of former Mayor and Mrs. Charles Place, of Grove street, and Bertram Llewellyn Smith, a banker, of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, were united in marriage by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, at the Crescent Avenue church. That large and handsome edifice was thronged with Plainfield's society, while a large number of guests were present from out of town. The church was opened at 6:45 and from 7 to 7:30 the following select programme of classical music was rendered on the organ by William E. MacClymont, Agc., who appeared for the first time in the gown of the Guild Society of which he is a member:

All-ero Apassionati from Sonta No. 8.....Guilmant
The Golden Wedding.....Gabriel-Marie
Nocturne in E flat Minor.....Chopin
Intermezzo from Cavaleria Rusticana.....Mascagni
Overture to the "Black Prophet".....Rossini
The trump of liberty sounds; it's warning—Night—Gems of the army—Shadows flow; a ghost—Appearance of prophets—Chorus of the damned—The spirit of freedom—Arrival of the Mayflower—The sunshine marred by oppression—The distant tramp of the armies of freedom—Grand Finale.

At the appointed hour, 7:30, the first notes of the Lohengrin wedding march were sounded and the bridal party entered the church from the main entrance. The ushers, Arthur Raymond Smith, brother of the groom of Fishkill; Walter Swift Place, brother of the bride, Dr. Frank M. Hallock and George Schoonmaker, of Plainfield, made their appearance first, and following them were the bridemaids, Miss Helen Adelaide Place, cousin of the bride, of Fishkill, and Miss Caroline M. Hunter, of Plainfield. Both were richly gowned in white organdie with Valenciennes lace over pink silk and trimmed with pink satin, and each carried a bouquet of pink roses. The maid of honor, Miss Elsie Smith, sister of the groom, of Fishkill, came next. She was gowned in white silk trimmed with lace and ribbon and she carried a shower bouquet of pink roses.

Then came the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away in marriage. She was exquisitely gowned in white duchesse satin trimmed with point Guipure lace and on her hand was a diamond circlet ring, a gift of the groom. A most charming bride, indeed, was she, and she was fondly admired by all as she gracefully passed up the aisle.

At the altar the bridal party was met by the groom and the best man, Clarence Alexander Smith, brother of the groom, who entered from the front of the church. All formed in a circle about the altar, which was prodigally decorated with potted plants, palms, ferns and white pink roses, banked in an artistic manner. While the ceremony was being performed by Dr. Richards, Mr. MacClymont played several favorite selections. The responses by the bride and groom were very distinct and could be plainly heard in any part of the edifice.

After the ceremony the bridal party reversed and the bride and her husband led the way down the aisle, while the Mendelssohn wedding march was being executed. They acknowledged graciously the recognitions of their many relatives and friends as they passed by.

Immediately after the wedding a recep ion was held at the Park Club from 8 to 10 o'clock, during which hours the pretty little club house was thronged with relatives and friends of the contracting parties. The decorations, pink and white, were the same colors that prevailed at the church, and these colors were beautifully presented through the use of the choicest flowers arranged in the most attractive manner.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith were showered with the best wishes and congratulations of a host of admiring people.

During the hours of the reception a pleasing wedding supper was served and later in the evening the bride and groom left Plainfield for Montreal, Canada, where the will travel among the various places of interest. On their return they will reside at Fishkill, where the groom's father has presented them with a handsome residence. The groom is a graduate of Williams' College, and is now engaged in the banking business in Fishkill.

The groom's gifts to the ushers were sunbursts of pearl stickpins, while the bride presented to her maid of honor and bridemaids breastpins in the form of gold ivy wreaths set with emeralds.

The gifts received by the bride and groom were very expensive as well as useful. They consisted of furniture, silverware, goldware, cut glass, etc.

CRUSADE AGAINST IVY.

THE POISONOUS VARIETY IS TO BE DRIVEN OUT.

The Plainfield Board of Health Has Been Asked to Take Some Action to Prevent its Spread Around Here.

Those who have suffered from the effects of poisoning, or mercury, as it is sometimes called, can appreciate the feelings of those who have started a campaign against that poisonous vine. Plainfield, or rather the out-skirts of this city, are overrun with it. It grows in yards, on trees and beside fences in vacant lots and private lawns. There are many who do not feel its effects, but to others it is a source of constant dread. Complaint has been made to the Board of Health and now the matter has been brought to the attention of the Town Improvement Association, which will take it in hand should the Board of Health refuse to take action in the matter.

Certain people are so constituted that they are very liable to poison from the vine. While with some it is necessary to touch the leaves of the vine, others are poisoned by the moisture it exhales and which is blown by the wind in their direction. It is the latter that suffer most from its effects. There are a number of people in this city who, every year, suffer terribly from ivy poisoning without ever touching the leaves on the plant. It is hoped, then, that their friends who are now starting a movement to compel all householders to look about their property and cut out and destroy the dangerous vine that now spreads unchecked in every direction.

While mercury is to be found to some extent all over the city, the districts in which it is the most flourishing are in the vicinity of Plainfield avenue, and around Putnam avenue, Kensington avenue and Carleton avenue. It grows on trees and fences and nearly extends its clinging arms.

The attention of the Board of Health has been drawn to it as a public nuisance and as being dangerous to the health of many of the community, but so far there has been no action taken on the subject. Some of the members of the Town Improvement Association have learned of the trouble and will bring the subject before a meeting of the association and promise that a determined effort will be made to completely rid the city of the weed, so unpleasant in its effects.

THE OMINOUS YELLOW CARD.

It Silently Tells of the Presence of a Contagious Disease.

Residents of Orchard place, between Liberty and New streets, are complaining over the imposition Friday of a case of scarlet fever in their neighborhood.

For several weeks past a Hebrew peddler has been boarding with Kalman Roehberg, a fellow-countryman, who has a grocery store on West Third street. About a week ago, the peddler rented the premises at 452 Orchard place from Thomas Clacy, his tenancy to begin on the 15th inst.

On Thursday the peddler asked his landlord for the key of the house, saying he wished to show his wife over the premises. A wagon drove up to the house Friday afternoon and left some clothing and bedding. A woman and a sick child were shortly afterward brought and placed in the house.

Then Health Inspector Addis came and tacked up a yellow placard giving warning of a contagious disease. Investigation by some interested neighbors and a Press reporter showed that the woman and child were the wife and daughter of Roehberg, the West Third street storekeeper with whom the peddler had boarded while in this city. The child is suffering with scarlet fever, and it was on this account that the Roehbergs secured its removal from their premises.

The owner of the house has been informed that he cannot now compel the removal of the sick child, and it is likely that the neighbors in Orchard place will have to endure the sight of the hateful yellow placard in spite of their protests and indignation.

BRIDGE CONTRACTS.

William T Kirk Will Build the New Structure.

The Bridge Committee of the Union County Board of Freeholders, together with the members of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, met Friday afternoon for the purpose of letting out the contracts for the erection of the Watchung avenue and Sycamore avenue bridges. There were about twenty-eight bids present, but William T. Kirk secured the contracts for building both bridges, and F. Farrio was awarded the contracts to do the mason and stone work. On the Watchung avenue bridge Mr. Kirk's bid was $8,200 and on the Sycamore avenue bridge it was $3,500. Mr. Farrio bid $5 per cubic foot on the Watchung avenue bridge and the same on the Sycamore avenue bridge.

Both bridges must be completed on or before September 15th, and papers were signed to that effect by the successful bidders.

BERRIES AND CREAM.

THEY WERE SERVED IN PROFUSION AT TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society Gave a Successful Festival in the Church Parlors, Last Thursday—Those Who Assisted.

This is the season of strawberry festivals for the berries seem better than ever before and they are now in their glory. Consequently, festivals are numerous. It is rare that a more enjoyable one has been given than the one held in the parlors of the Trinity Reformed church, last evening, by the members of the Ladies' Christian Work Society. It was well attended, although the threatening weather kept many away.

The tables, on which the strawberries and ice-cream were served, were under the charge of the Misses Grace Smith, Cora Laire, Adelaide Baxter, Grace Emmons, Gertrude Tier and Jennie Dunham. Mrs. Frank Church acted as cashier, while Mrs. P. M. Demarest and Mrs. E. T. Van Winkle were in general charge of the eatables.

Then there was a candy table under the supervision of Miss Emma Gillem and Miss Laura Emmons, a cake table looked after by Mrs. Anna Gillem, and an apron table in charge of Mrs. Robert Clark and Mrs. L. C. Sheppard. The lemonade booth was presided over by Mrs. Harry M. Marshall. "The Strawberry Pie," which was a name for a grab-bag, was looked after by Miss Elizabeth Dunn.

During the evening Bert Harold presided over the piano and entertained the visitors with a number of selections which were well rendered.

The festival was a success but it is impossible to state as yet the amount of money that was cleared.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE.

Funeral of the Late Walter Drake was Held in Holy Cross Church, Yesterday.

The funeral of the late Walter Drake was held from Holy Cross church Thursday afternoon at 30'clock and the attendance of relatives and friends was very large. Many who desired to attend were unable to do so owing to the large number of people present. Rev. T. Lozan Murphy, rector of the church, officiated, and the service of the Episcopal church was used. The floral offerings were profuse and beautiful. There were three large pillows, and a harp, all from friends and Somerset Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., of which the deceased was a member. A beautiful cross was offered by the employer of the deceased. The members of the lodge were present in a body and Harry Barton, L. Rosenstell, Charles Layton, Harry Bennet, Geo. Townley and John Sheppard, of the lodge, acted as pall bearers. Interment was in the family plot in Plainfield Avenue cemetery. At the grave the lodge conducted the service according to the ritual of the order. I was very impressive and the members who took part did well.

VALUABLE PROPERTY CHANGE.

William C. Kelly Has Sold His Park Avenue Block to Sigmund Frucht.

One of the largest real estate deals which has been consummated in this city for some time, was completed in the law offices of City Judge DeMeza, Thursday, when the valuable business block on Park avenue, between North avenue and West Second street, changed owners. Sigmund Frucht, of Park avenue and West Second street, was the purchaser, and bought the valuable tract from William C. Kelly, of Park avenue.

The property which is included in the deal are the stores now occupied by Miss A. E. Lincoln's florist establishment, James Dunn's grocery and L. A. Hummer's meat market.

The consideration was $20 000. It is understood that there will be no change in the tenants at present and that Mr. Frucht will make no attempt to rebuild any of the stores.

EUCHRE CLUB ENTERTAINED.

The Thursday Night Club Held Its Last Meeting of the Season.

A very successful season came to a very successful end Thursday, when the members of the Thursday Night Euchre Club gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Tier, of Bank place, for the last meeting until next fall. Besides the regular club tables, there was a table for the guests who were invited in honor of Miss Core, of New York, who is the guest of Mrs. Tier. At the guests' table the prizes were won by Miss Core and Fred Sandford. The first prizes in the club were won by Miss Ada Chandler and Theodore Mantz. The winners of the second prizes were Miss Mabelle Force and David Krymer. After the progressive whist the rest of the evening was taken up with dancing, music and refreshments.

Another New Residence.

Another new residence is being added to the pretty group at West End Park. Arthur A. Stryker, of West Front street, is having a new $3,500 home built next door to his present residence. The house was designed by Lancaster & Rogers, and is a two-story and attic frame dwelling of rather novel design. The first floor is clap-boarded and the second and third shingled.

TALKED AGAINST TIME.

SWACKHAMER DELAYED THE CASE UNTIL HIS CLIENT CAME.

The Case Was Tried in Elizabeth Thursday and Was a Long Delayed Suit Between a Servant and Her Mistress, of Plainfield.

After months of delay and trouble, the case of Gartland against Ellis has at last been decided and the plaintiff given a verdict for the full amount, $14, over which this long and weary fight has been made. The costs have exceeded the amount of the suit many times, and the case has grown into one over a question of principle.

The suit was one brought by Miss Mary Ellen Gartland against her former employer, Mrs. Laura B. Ellis, of Fanwood, to secure wages alleged to be due for services at Mrs. Ellis's home as a domestic. The circumstances of the case briefly are that Miss Ellis employed Mary Gartland as a servant in the household, taking her on trial. After three weeks she was discharged, Mrs. Ellis refused to pay her, declaring that she was incompetent. Then Miss Gartland brought suit to recover the three week's wages. She employed Ex-Ass. Swackhamer of the firm of Swackhamer and Williams, and the suit was brought in Justice Wescorn's court and tried before a jury. A verdict for the full amount was brought in.

The case was appealed and set down for trial in October. Ex-Judge W. A. Coddington, who represented the defendant, had the date of the trial changed so that it might be tried by jury. Mr. Swackhamer was not notified and a verdict was given for the defendant. Mr Swackhamer applied for a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted. After some delay the new trial was set down for January, but had to be adjourned on account of the illness of the defendant.

Thursday morning, at 10:35 o'clock, the trial came up, but the plaintiff had not appeared. Thinking that she might arrive on the 11 o'clock train, Mr. Swackhamer opened the case and started to talk against time until his client should arrive. Instead of occupying the usual three minutes, he took up twenty five minutes, and then sat down exhausted as his client came hurrying in the court room.

The case was tried and both counsel made eloquent appeals to the jury. After being out five minutes, the jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount.

MARRIED IN THE CHURCH

TWO COLORED RESIDENTS UNITED IN MATRIMONY.

The Ceremony Was an Elaborate One and Was Witnessed by the Many Friends of the Couple—Bridal Party.

One of the prettiest June weddings in colored circles was celebrated at the Mount Olive Baptist church last Thursday, when Miss Paulina Coles, daughter of Rev. Haskins Coles, of Virginia, and Eugene Johnson, of this city, were married by Rev. P. S. Gibson, pastor of the church. The edifice was thronged with a large audience a great number of whom were white people. The church was decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers.

Previous to the hour of the wedding Horatio Randolph entertained the audience with a selection of music on the organ, and when the signal was given at 8:30 the ever-popular Mendelssohn wedding march was played as the bridal party entered the church. The procession was led by the ushers, William Burden and Frank Kelsar, and following them were the groomsmen and bridesmaids, Miss Nora Wolker, Miss Julia Randolph, Miss Nellie Pierson, and Jesse Henry, Isaac Fields, Fred White, of Plainfield, and Burt Oliver, of Newark. The bridesmaids were all gowned in white with ribbons and lace trimmings. Next came the maid of honor, Miss Lulu Douglass, gowned in white trimmed with lace and ribbons, while a beautiful chain of roses were draped about her neck and waist. The flower girl, Florence Bowser, was gowned in white and she was also decked with roses of various colors. As she passed up the aisle here and there she droped a rose. Following her came the bride, accompanied by James Myers, of Philadelphia, who gave her away in marriage. The bride wore a rich gown of flowered organdie trimmed with duchesse lace and satin ribbon, while she wore the usual veil and orange blossoms.

The groom and best man, Jesse Henry, entered the main part of the church from the front and met the *bridal party and the officiating clergy-*man at the altar. The ceremony was an impressive one and was performed perfectly by Rev. Gibson.

As the bride and groom left the church followed by the rest of the party the Lohengrin wedding march was played.

A reception followed at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Walter Bina, No. 306 Plainfield avenue, where the bride and groom will reside. There were present at the reception guests from Newark, Philadelphia and Plainfield. A supper was served during the evening, and at a time was fully taken of the congratulations and enjoying the sociability of the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson received a valuable collection of wedding gifts including silverware, furniture and many other useful things. The groom is in the employ of E. H. Ladd, Jr., of Franklin place, while the bride was a valued employee of Mr. Pinto, of this city. The happy couple were very handsomely remembered by their friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch. At a late hour they left the city for a short wedding tour and their friends showered them with old shoes and rice as they departed.

A Remarkable Discovery.

W. O. Overbaugh, who is employed in the bicycle hospital of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company, made a queer discovery several days ago. A case of sundries was received and they were removed, leaving the excelsior packing in the box. Then the cover was nailed on again and the box put away. A strange peeping noise was heard in the direction of the box and after a long search it was located in the box. The cover was removed and there, under the excelsior, was found a wee chicken. How it got there nobody appeared to know, and Overbaugh adopted it and is now raising it.

Risberg Convicted.

The trial of John Risberg, of this city, who was indicted for misdemeanor in helping to procure the death of Mrs. Mary Noble by a criminal operation, came to an end in the Newark court, Thursday. The jury was charged and Thursday afternoon brought in a verdict of guilty. Mrs. Amelia Francisco, who pleaded non vult to the same charge, is now awaiting sentence.

A Home for Himself.

It is a two story frame house with attic, equipped with all the modern improvements. The plans for the house were drawn by Lancaster & Rogers, of the Babcock building.

A VIEW OF THE GROUNDS WHERE THE FETE WAS HELD.

SCRAPS O'ER THE BROOK

MANY DISTURBING ELEMENTS COME UNDER POLICE SURVERLLANCE.

One Man Thumped Over the Head With a Beer Bottle, While Another Is Thrown Into the Street on Account of Board Bill.

Saturday night and Sunday morn- there seemed to be many disturbing elements in the North Plainfield atmosphere. Between 11 and 11:30 Saturday night a crowd was congregated in Charles Bock's restaurant on Somerset street. In one of the back rooms were James Conway, of West Fourth street, and Frank VanNest, of the borough. The two became engaged in an argument of some kind, when suddenly there was an outburst and those outside were attracted by the breaking of glass and loud talking. The crowd pressed in toward the back room and saw Conway in a bleeding condition about the head, the result of a severe cut. Young VanNest and his companions made their way toward the front door so as to escape, but before they could get away Marshal Kliner was on the spot and arrested VanNest as the guilty man.

Those present say that VanNest lost his temper in an argument he had with Conway and that he picked up a beer bottle and threw it at Conway, striking him in the head. The lacerated wound bled profusely and most of those present became frightened thinking that Conway was critically injured. VanNest was placed in the borough lockup and Conway was taken to Dr. Boone's office and had his wound dressed. The doctor discovered that the wound was not a serious one, but he was obliged to take several stitches in the laceration. Sunday morning VanNest was released on bail to appear for trial today.

The second disturbance occurred about 1 o'clock Sunday morning on Race street. Sheridan Jones, colored, lives on the above street and he, too, engaged in an argument regarding a board bill. The war of words grew intensely exciting and when Jones came to his senses he found himself lying in the middle of Race street near his boarding house. Investigation developed the fact that the persons with whom he had disagreed had jumped on him, beat him into insensibility and left him in the roadway. It is said that the marshals know who the violaters of the law are and that they will be arrested soon.

DEATH OF ALBERT A. DRAKE.

Passing of a Prominent Westfield Man From This World.

Albert A. Drake, an old and well known resident of Westfield, died at his home in that place at 4 o'clock Sunday morning, after a two weeks' illness. Last Sunday an operation was performed by the attending physicians, Drs. Cooper, of Westfield, and Green, of Elizabeth. It was generally supposed that his condition was improving, until the announcement of his death was made. Mr. Drake was in the 64th year of his age, and is survived by a wife and one daughter, Mrs. Drake is a sister of Mrs. Joseph W. Sandford, of West Seventh street, this city.

Mr. Drake was born in New York city. After receiving his education he entered as clerk in a wholesale grocery. He afterward went into the office of his brother, forming a partnership under the firm name of J. M. Drake & Co. During the war he was made captain of Company G, 57th New York State Volunteers. He had a handsome estate of about 50 acres in Westfield. He was an organizer of the Westfield Athletic Club and a member of the New York Stock Exchange.

A Child's Lucky Escape.

While Antonio Narrar, a one year old child, was playing on Front street, South Plains, Saturday afternoon, he was run over by a horse and buggy driven by George Rose. The little fellow fortunately escaped with a cut on the face and a serious fright.

Miss Kate Baxter is at home from Vassar College for the summer vacation.

PINNACLE OF SUMMER EVENTS WAS THE FETE.

Carried Out With a Dash and Completeness That Made it a Magnificient Success.

The Country Home and Grounds of the Fete Champetre's Sponsor, Beautiful by Nature's Touch Alone, Were Charmingly Attractive When Modeled by Mind and Hand in Appropriate Detail by Those Who Had Interested Themselves in the Success of the Affair—A Large Turnout of Patrons and a Consequent Reaping of Profits by the Promoters For Plainfield's Benefit—Those in Charge of the Different Details.

Nature and Plainfield favored the Fete Champetre that was held Saturday afternoon and evening on the lawn surrounding the summer home of the late John Taylor Johnston. It was a success, a complete success, and the hopes of the women of the Town Improvement Association, who labored so hard and so faithfully toward that end were more than realized, while their treasury received a substantial increase that will probably amount to nearly $2,000, if not more.

It was by far the most elaborate outdoor event of the kind ever planned and carried out in Plainfield. Everybody lent a hand and donated their services wherever possible. It combined the efforts of many Plainfield homes, for there was plenty to do and the fact that it was all done so well showed the interest which has been taken in the movement started by some of the progressive women of Plainfield toward improving the appearance of the city. The object of the Fete was to raise sufficient money to put the city park in presentable condition and it succeeded.

Now that a day has elapsed since the last guest bade a lingering farewell to the scene of the Fete, it all seems like a wonderful dream. In the afternoon were the crowds of visitors thronging every part of the grounds, most of them bright in holiday attire, everybody happy and smiling. Around the booths and tables that had been arranged under the trees were clustered the aides, kept busy attending to the wants of the guests. Under the tall evergreen trees that bounded the path in the rear of the house were the tables where the supper and light refreshments were served. The charming waitresses hurried in and out between the animated groups, while a steady stream of visitors passed through to view the other scenes.

Down by the brook all was animation. The boats were a constant attraction and the smooth surface of the little lake was lively with the merry boating parties that dotted it. The colony of Gypsies that had taken possession of the island, found favor with all, and the rustic bridges that led in that direction across the brook saw many people pass that way. The dances and the singing were all delightful and the listener could hardly believe that he was not in some enchanted land instead of in staid old Plainfield. Curiousity to know the future filled the palmist's tent and there it was laid bare to the eye of the interested ones for a short space. And there been a dozen palmists they would have been kept busy.

At intervals through the afternoon and all the evening the strains of sweet music were wafted over the lawn from the gaily decorated bandstand, where the Plainfield Cornet Band, under the charge of Prof. Guttman, was installed. There was the hum of voices, broken now and then by the steady tramp of feet as a detachment of the Plainfield High School cadets marched along the pebbly paths to relieve their sentinels that kept guard about the grounds. The sun shone on the bright barrels of the muskets they carried and was reflected back by the shining swords of the officers. The latter, in their dark-blue dress-coats and white duck trousers, looked very natty, indeed.

As the shades of night began to fall, hundreds of Japanese lanterns began to shed their soft radiance over the place, while in the trees, surrounding the green, electric lights peeped out like giant fireflies. A monster log fire blazed with fitful gleam in the Gypsy encampment, while flaring torches aided in the illumination of that part of the grounds

As the night advanced, the crowd increased and the tables, on which the ice-cream was served, were filled. The guests strolled about the grounds or rested on some bench to watch the never ceasing procession. Other young people wandered away from the light to retired nooks to watch the Fete from a distance.

The hours passed, the cadet relief marched by, and still the people came and went, while all was activity in the different departments. The moon, though half hidden by thin clouds, chose to be one of the party and lend her beams to light up the place Then the visitors began to depart and carriaze after carriage rolled away homeward, while the sharp ring of the bicycle bell warned stray pedestrians to look out for the departing wheelmen who had spent the evening at the Fete. The work of clearing up began, the lights were extinguished or allowed to burn out. The policemen, who had stood guard during the day, departed and the Fete Champetre was over. A solitary bullfrog sounded mournfully in the lake and all was quiet in Johnston Park.

Last winter, the Town Improvement Association discussed the plan of improving the condition of the City Park. The spirit was willing, but the treasury was low. Then Mrs. Pierre Mali, the president of the association offered the use of Johnston Park, her summer home on East Front street, which comprises over a hundred acres of beautiful fields and woodlands, to the association for a gigantic garden party. The idea was a good one and found favor. The offer was accepted with thanks and the Fete Champetre or rustic feast, was planned. As the time grew near the plans took form and everything went forward. Mrs Mali was indefatigable in her efforts to bring the Fete to a successful termination, and she was ably second by the other women of the association. The men were interested in the scheme and so all of the best local talent was utilized.

The officers of the association are as follows: President, Mrs Pierre Mali; vice presidents, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph and Mrs. A. S. Patterson; recording secretary, Mrs S. R Krom; corresponding secretary, Miss Elizabeth Stewart; treasurer, Mrs. Alexander Gilbert.

The committee, which was in charge of the decorations of the entrances was composed of Mrs. Craig A. Marsh, chairman; Mrs. George Wharton Edwards and Mrs J. W Reinhart. The entrance was modeled after two French towers and was designed by George Wharton Edwards, of this city.

The committee in charge of the music was composed of Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers, chairman; Mrs. Pierre Mali, William E. Cock and William N. Runyon.

The press committee, which so successfully accomplished its duty of telling the public about the Fete and its attractions, was composed of Mrs. Benjamin J. Shreve, chairman; Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Miss Harriet B Shreve and H. P. Reynolds.

The wheelmen were specially provided for at the Fete, the commodious stables beyond the island being converted into a bicycle stable. The wheelmen were directed around the smooth roads to the stables, the road being lighted in the evening with huge headlights. Mrs. D. W. Pond was the committee in charge. William H. Rogers and Charles C. Lister had personal supervision over the bicycle stable and repair shop which was run in connection with it. 250 wheels were checked there.

Mrs. S. R. Krom was a committee to look after the printing of the tickets and menus. The tickets were little circular cards, with cords attached and the visitors were instructed to hang them where they might be seen. So it was that every one had the little green badge except the police and the cadets. The scheme worked very successfully.

Mrs. M. H. Eaton was committee on omnibuses. Stages ran to the grounds from the Y. M. C. A. building so as not to interfere with the hackmen.

The illumination of the grounds was done under the charge of J. Parker Mason. His method was very pleasing and successful. Two hundred electric lights were used, the current being furnished for nothing by the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company. The lights were wired in the trees by A. D. Phillips. The Japanese lanterns were of two styles. Some of them were the new French lanterns. Five hundred of the lanterns were used.

The decoration of the boats was done under the charge of Miss Edith Hyde. Flags, bunting and, in the evening, lanterns were used.

The pony carriages, that carried the little tots around the grounds, were under the superintendence of Miss Edith Smalley. Dr. W. H. Murray and William F. Arnold also looked after the safety of the little ones.

The fleet of boats were under the command of John Doull Miller. He had the boat house prettily decorated during the day and illuminated at night. He was assisted by the following who acted as oarsmen: Edward Kline, Bryant Harman, Carrol L. Runyon, James P. Murray, Carl Pfeiffer, Carl Walz, Harry Opdyke, Bronson Smith, Van R. Schuyler, Alfred Love, Arthur Talmage, Rudd Shepard, Burfit Shepard, Howard Tracy, John B. Dumont, Jr., D. M. VanVliet, Joseph Myers, E. H. Frost, Irving Oakley, R. A. Beebe, Paul Kimball and Irving Joy.

The Gypsy encampment was one of the principal attractions of the Fete. There were several tents in the grove on the island, while seats were arranged about the island for the convenience of the guests. Flapjacks were cooked and served there. An old Pennsylvania wagon, loaned for the occasion, was used as a seating place for the Gypsies when singing. Twice during the afternoon and twice in the evening the Gypsies gave their dance, a wild rush and whirl that was made very effective by the gay colored Gypsy costumes worn. In the evening the scene was lighted by the huge log fire that gave a weird appearance to the party of whirling dancers in their brilliant dresses.

Those taking part in the dance were the Misses Katheryn Reinhart, Annie Murphy, Mabel VanDeventer, Halla VanDeventer, May Tracy, Adelaide Ball, Elsbeth Ball, Mary Hull, Dottie Long, Grace Barlow, Alice Thompson and Marion Henderson; Alfred Holmes, Harry Curtis, Carl Stedman Brown, Harry Johnson, Harry Patten, Howard Turrill, Orville T. Waring, Fred Ball, Allan Wilson, A. Willis West and Arthur Murphy. During the dance Mrs. Wm. L. Saunders came to the front and sang the Bolero song, "Maid of Cadiz," in an effective manner. The accompaniment was furnished by Miss Marion Dumont on the piano and an orchestra composed of Lindley M. Hillman, Chas. Davis and Walter H. Serrell.

When the Gypsies gathered in the old Gypsy wagon to sing, their number was increased. Miss Daisy Elsberg acted as soloist, while in the chorus there were the Misses Cornelia Faber, Francis Phillips, Gertrude Haviland, Cora Haviland, Alice Holmes and Ada Smock, besides those already mentioned. Chas. E. Faber and D. O Tiffany were in charge of the entrance to the camp.

The committee under whose charge all the details for the Gypsy encampment were arranged consisted of Mrs. Chas. W. McCutchen, chairman; Mrs. A. Walter Haviland, Mrs Wm. Saunders, Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Jr., and Mrs. W J. Roome.

One of the other principal features of the Fete for the afternoon was the winding of the May pole. At 4 o'clock the little children gathered about the pole, all dressed in white. They were under the care of Mrs. Lewis G. Thompson. They were the Misses Elinor Waring, Helen Timpson, Ada Garrabrues, Ruth Fredericks, Elizabeth McKee, Helen Joy, Ruth VanVliet, Louise Saunders, Jean Saunders, Alice Titus, Katheryn Titus, Margaret Lowe, Margaret Drayton, Anna Fisk, Dorothy Fisk, Madeline Reed, and Frederick Mead, Johnston Mall, Morris Timpson and Ogden Rogers. After a pretty dance about the May pole they wound the many colored streamers about the pole.

An hour later, another dance was held in which the older children took part, under the charge of Mrs. W. L. Patton. It was more complicated than the other one and the colored ribbons were woven about the pole. Those taking part were the Misses Eva Brown, Margaret Van Deventer, Frances Van Deventer, Wilhelmina Patton, Trottie Smith, Florence Tay lor, Gennie Derrie, Jennie Dunham, Mildred Thayer, Marie Finch, Charlotte Finch, Grace Wilcox, Marjorie Fleming, Dorothy Fleming, Maida Hyde, Grace Peck, Ethel Kenney, Roxie Love and Grace Miller.

On the path to the left of the house was an arbor which was transformed into a pretty booth, tastefully decorated with vines and flowers, principally roses. This was the fruit and flower booth. Mrs. J Parker Mason was the chairman and her aides were Mrs. John Doull Miller, Mrs. E. T. Barrows, Mrs. Pinto, Mrs. F. H. Andrews, Mrs. Fred Yates, Mrs. Edward N. Van Buren, Mrs. W. C. Delaney, Mrs. Marion Ackerman, Mrs. J. W Reinhart, Mrs. F. G. Mead. Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., and the Misses Edith Smalley, Daisy Shepard, Edith Hyde, May Waring, Florence Waring, Marion Dumont, Elizabeth Stewart, and Katheryn Reinhart.

Under the branches of a tree nearby, Miss Gertrude Walz and Miss May Evans presided over the lemonade stall.

Nearer the house, tables were arranged on the lawn and here the ice cream department reigned supreme This department was in charge of Mrs. Henry Lapsley and Miss Kate Martine.

The waitresses were the Misses Ethel Plummer Bowen, Bessie Bowen, Lula Howard, Margaret McCready, Jessie Bushnell, Josephine Lapsley, Florence Patterson, Stephanie Krom, Margaret Goddard, Harriet Goddard, Mary Anderson Reinhart, Mattie Wadsworth, Constance Patton, Sarah Richards, Emma Corlies, Florence Britton, Clarice Case, Helen Brown, Helen Martin, Elsie Martin, Elsie Harrison, Ida Stewart, Ethel Van Boskerck, Edna Strong, Sarah Schuyler, Mary Mann, Blossom Randolph, Dorothy Wells, Margaret McCutchen, Virginia Hageman.

Across the lawn on the other side of the house were the supper tables.

The following were the ladies in charge of the tables: Mrs. O. T. Waring and Mrs. G. W. Van Boskerck, chairman, and Mesdames Pierri Mall, W. W. Howland, D. M Van Vliet, J. G. Foster, Robert A. Clausson, L. H. Bigelow, Robert Lowry, H. M. Stockton, W. D. Murray, N. Pendleton, Rogers, J. T. Baker, J. H. Carman, R. M Glover, Marion Ackerman, C. E. Leonard, Miss Tweedy, Mrs. Titus and Miss Stevens.

The aides were: Mesdames Charles E. Brooks, A. D. Shepard, Thomas Minford, W. Palmer Smith, H. B. Opdyke and the Misses Hellwig, Cozles, Randolph, Halloway, Ryder, Hall, McCready, H. Brainard, M. Sterling, E. Sterling, Louise Bushness, C Kampman, Edith Gilbert, Pierson, Flora Griffin, Clapp, Madeline Day, Taylor, Horne, Haviland, E. Treat, Bushnell, Bonny, I. Bass, Drayton, Dryden, Swayze, Lulu Bryant, Edna Tapper, Grace Miller, Margaret Vermeule, E Van Deventer, R Bass, Lena Bass, Rambo, Bessie Cox, Edith Van Boskerck, Lulu Holly, Helen Weaver, Randall, Gertrude Bushmore, H. B. Shreve, May Cahoone, Lois Eastman, Wotherspoon, Gibbs, E. McClure, K. McClure, Nancy Lawson, Katie Wood, Emma Miller, Josie Bushnell, Laura Lovell, Helen Lovell, Cordilia Miller, Anna Miller, Fuller, Lucilli Bockwell, Agnes Minford, E. Little, F Cahoone, the Misses Gibbon, Mrs. F. Moore, Mrs. Roger Murray, Mrs. Pfeiffer and Mrs. Charles Stover.

The list of patronesses included the following:—Mrs. A. D Shepard, Mrs. Edgerton, Mrs. Charles Hyde, Mrs. Lawrence Myers, Mrs. J. Parker Mason, Mrs. William Palmer Smith, Mrs. D. P. Hall, Mrs. Roland Cox, Mrs. C A. Marsh, Mrs. Walter Stewart, Mrs. J. T. Baker, Mrs. S. A. Gilman, Mrs. Charles Fisk, Mrs. Ernest L. Peck, Mrs. Isabel Tweedy, Miss Florence Tweedy, Mrs. George H. Frost, Mrs. Stephen Hart, Mrs Emma S. Brown, Mrs. Charles Schoonmaker, Mrs. O T. Waring, and Mrs. Charles A. Reed.

The committee on police consisted of Councilman E. T. Barrows. All the police of the city volunteered their services for the Fete and did duty at the grounds and in that vicinity under the command of Sergeant Kiely.

The members of the Plainfield High School cadet corps volunteered their services as guards. Twenty of the company turned out. In the afternoon, they were commanded by Lieutenant Henry W. Brower. Lieutenant Sydney B. Tinsworth was the commanding officer during the evening and acted as officer of the day. Whitney Frazee acted as bugler for guard mount.

At present, it is impossible to state the exact number of visitors to the Fete. It is very probable that they numbered nearly three thousand. It is estimated that the Town Improvement Association will clear nearly $2,000 on the Fete.

The attempt to secure the patronage of the cyclists was successful and there were many wheelmen and wheelwomen in the grounds, a number of whom came for supper and spent the evening. Miss Gage, of Elizabeth, organized a party of seventeen who rode up from Elizabeth and spent the evening.

There were a score of assistants at the gates who gave their help. Henry Lovell and George Schoonmaker braved the mosquitoes at the lodge entrance and sold tickets, with a short rest at dark when they assisted in lighting the Japanese lanterns.

Those in charge of the gypsy encampment had a little surprise for the latter part of the evening. While the log fire was blazing merrily, on the point that projects out into the lake, fireworks were set off behind the fire, which gave the appearance of rising out of the centre of it. Throughout the evening, colored fire was burned about the island while a cornet called the visitors to come and see the Gypsy dances.

FOUGHT ABOUT A GIRL.

FOWLEY WENT HOME WITH HAMILL'S GIRL, AND TROUBLE CAME.

Six Offenders Against the Good Order of the Community Hailed Before Judge DeMeza and Punished and Lectured.

The mystery of the police, Saturday morning, concerning a fight near the brook is a mystery no longer. The participants were arraigned last Monday before City Judge DeMeza and all were either fined or sent to jail.

The circumstances, as related in court last Monday, were that all six of them attended a party on Orchard place, and did not leave until 5 o'clock in the morning, all pretty well under the influence of the stimulants taken at the party. They walked down the street and some of the younger ones began to quarrel. It seems that Michael Crowley had gone home with Thomas Hamill's girl earlier in the morning. Blows were struck, and soon Crowley and Patrick Wallace, who was of the party, were rolling in the gutter. Daniel Fitzpatrick ran to Crowley's rescue and pulled Wallace off, when Wallace's brother, Robert Wallace, took a hand and did up Fitz in a jiffy. Daniel Sullivan and Thomas Hamill watched the fun.

Then the scappers adjourned to Sycamore avenue, where the fight was renewed Wallace repeated his former action and laid poor Fitz out in an unconscious condition. Crowley thought he was dead and came down town and gave himself up to Roundsman Fredericksen, who investigated.

Meanwhile Fitz came to his senses and Sullivan washed off the blood, which covered his face, at the brook. Then they all departed homeward, to be arrested Sunday on the charge of fighting.

Robert Wallace pleaded guilty and the rest not guilty. The charge was for being drunk and disorderly, quarrelling and fighting and being generally disorderly.

The Judge, after hearing the testimony, decided that they were all guilty. Robert Wallace, he picked as the chief offender, and sent him to jail for sixty days. Patrick Wallace was fined $15, Crowley and Hammill $10, and Fitzpatrick and Sullivan $5. Fitzpatrick appeared in court with his face all cut and scratched while he was home from the result of Wallace's blows and kicks that he could hardly walk. The evidence showed that Sullivan was with the crowd but did no fighting.

UNDER HORSE'S HOOFS.

An accident occurred on Park avenue, near Second street, this morning in which Mr. Chamberlain, of Madison avenue, on a wheel, and Eldridge Kline, colored, in a wagon, were the principals. Mr. Chamberlain's wheel slipped in the mud and water which was in abundance, and both he and the wheel went under the horse's feet. In the fall Mr. Chamberlain's face came in contact with the hind feet of the horse and was badly scratched and scarred. He was picked up and taken to Armstrong's pharmacy where his wounds were dressed. Later he was taken home. Mr. Kline, who drives for Mr. Work, of 407 West Seventh street, is not blamed by those who saw the accident for he was driving slow and made no attempt to run into Mr. Chamberlain.

CHAPTER ONE AWHEEL.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE'S FIRST BICYCLE SOCIABLE A SUCCESS.

The Young People of the Methodist Church Turned Out in Force and Enjoyed a Spin Over to Metuchen.

When fair Luna rose above the horizon last Monday she beheld, for the first time in her experience, a bicycle sociable arranged by the young people of a church. It was the occasion of the first of the runs gotten up by the young people of Chapter No. 1 of the Epworth League, an auxiliary of the First M. E. church, of this city. It was an innovation in the line of church entertainments and sociables, and its popularity was evidenced by the large attendance on the run.

The night was just right. Just cool enough to make it pleasant exercise to keep riding and yet not chilly enough to be uncomfortable. The start was made ere the rays of the sun had disapp ared and the ride continued through the twilight and into the night when the full round moon came out to lend her pale beams for the illumination of the road. There was not one in the party but preferred spending the evening in that manner to comfortable costume than sitting about a warm room trying to be sociable.

The participants in this first bicycle sociable were requested to gather in front of the First M. E. church, where the start was to be made. It was soon after 7:30 o'clock that the stirring notes of the bugle assembled the riders and Captain James A. Stafford, secretary of the League, declared it time to start. There were forty young people altogether, clad in wheeling costume. There was nothing startling in any of the costumes and all was as quiet and modest as could be wished.

James A Stafford was in command with Ray T. Snodgrass and Charles Sprague as his lieutenants. Robert Davis acted as bugler. Mr and Mrs. J. T. McNaughton chaperoned the party. Captain Stafford had laid his plans beforehand and everything went forward without a hitch. The riders were kept together through the efforts of the lieutenants and a moderate pace was maintained.

There was only one accident and that was the wrecking of a cyclometer when two of the wheelwomen came together.

When the party reached Holly's Corners, the lamps were lighted and a brief stop made. At the Oak Tree bridge, a halt was called to see the view from that spot. At Pumptown, there was another rest, and then the party went on to Metuchen where refreshments were enjoyed. The ride home by moonlight was a delightful one, unmarred by accident or an unpleasant feature. Plainfield was reached in safety and the party rode to Leggett's pharmacy where they were hospitably treated to some of his delightful soda water. The party disbanded there.

GIFT TO SUPERINTENDENT WARDE.

North Plainfield Teachers Express Their Good Will by a Presentation.

Last Monday evening an agreeable surprise was given to Dr. A. D. Warde, superintendent of the North Plainfield Public High School, when the teachers of the school called at his home on Manning avenue and presented him with a very handsome silver inkstand, including pen, penholder and silver-mounted blotter, and the gift was accompanied with a list of the teachers' names neatly written in a small book. The presentation was made by Miss Luella A. Crowther who expressed the feelings of appreciation of the other teachers in a short address. Dr. Warde was so completely surprised that for a few minutes he was almost speechless. Finally, he responded in his usual happy manner and thanked all of the teachers heartily for the gift. Following this bit of pleasantry a social time was passed and the serving of refreshments was a feature of the event.

EARLY CHILDHOUD STUDY.

Its Importance Shown in the Work of Miss Hellwig's Pupils.

The importance of studying foreign languages in early childhood was demonstrated at the closing exercises of the Plainfield French Kindergarten, which is connected with the Misses Scribner & Newton's school. The three points especially commented on were: Purity of pronunciation, extensive amount of work accomplished, and last, but by no means least, the evident fondness of the children for their work which has been a happy feature of the year's course throughout. Miss Hellwig, who is one of the principals, has given this matter careful consideration and the results achieved certainly prove that the right chord has been struck.

—The Berean class-room at Warren chapel has just been newly papered and painted and it presents a very attractive appearance.

—The Christian Endeavor Society of the Church of Christ will hold their meeting next week on Wednesday evening instead of Tuesday on account of the Christian Endeavor Union meeting in the Congregational church.

Class song.
The time of parting comes
E'en in our school life here—
In dreams alone we'll live
The days to us so dear:
Ye days of sunny pleasure,
When we shall know ye not
Remembrance will recall ye,
Ye ne'er shall be forgot.
O! friendship of our school days
Your praises all will sing!
We'll cling to ye forever
And to you tribute bring;
When dreams shall be dull be back ward.
Tho' years have sped along.
We'll gladly think of school days,
The time of youth's glad song!

THE TOTS LEARN'D MUCH

ENTERTAINING CHILDREN'S MORNING AT THE "CHESTNUTS."

Closing Exercises Gave Evidence of Careful Instruction on the Part of Teachers and Quick Learning by the Scholars.

Children's morning at the Plainfield Seminary meant the closing exercises of the Primary Department, given Monday morning at "The Chestnuts," on West Seventh street, to which a limited number of friends were invited.

The English part of the programme was under the management of Miss Ayune Macready, the English teacher in this department, and the French songs and recitations had been taught by Mlle. Luxemberg, the instructor in French. The clear enunciation and expressive elocution of the performers, very little girls for the most part, reflected great credit on the teachers, whose training had prepared them to perform their parts in a manner so satisfactory to parents and friends. The following programme was given to the delight of the audience, childish grace commingling with thorough drilling:

English recitations—
"The Sun and the Star".....Henrietta Work
"The Boy That Was Half-past Three,"
Kate Tieman
"The Doll's Wooing".....Alice Titus
"Daisies".....Katharine Titus
"A Little Goosey".....Anna Carragnes
"The Duet".....Ruth VanVliet
"The Back-a-By Lady".....Clara Clark
"The Stay Lamb".....Dorothy Fisk
"A Good Play".....Nathalie Work
"Time to Rise".....Elinor DeGraff
"Bed in Summer".....Marion Brown
French song—
"La Belle au Bois Dormant,"
Dorothy Fisk, Kate Tieman, Nathalie Work and Henriette Work.
French recitations—
"Madame Sans Souci," Dorothy Fisk, Kate Tieman, Gertrude Pearson, Henriette Work and Nathalie Work.
"Le Soir".....Gertrude Pearson
"L'Hirondelle".....Dorothy Fisk
"Le Noir (Trialogue,)"
Gertrude Pearson, Kate Tieman and Henriette Work.
Doll's Drill.....Twelve Little Girls
Song—"Mabel and the Flowers" Mandolincello
Florence Beebe, Angela Brady, Louise Curtis, Grace Kaufman and Gladys Kaufman.

The French song, "La Belle au Bois Dormant," was especially pleasing, the smoothly flowing French words, the music and the voices all blending in effective charm.

The Doll's Drill was a dainty bit of marching, performed by twelve little girls, who with dolls in arms, stepped with measured tread to the sound of music. Little Miss Marion Brown and Miss Helen Work led the two files of armed children, who on tiptoe went through a variety of motherly motions, caressing, chiding, kissing, admiring, patting, tossing, trotting and singing, the whole ending in an emphatic "Hush!" uttered in concert by the little doll tenders, which signified that their dolls were asleep and their drilling done.

At the close of the exercises, the writing and sewing of the children were exhibited in an adjoining room. The penmanship showed good training and commendable progress, and the sewing, in regular gradation from over handing to button holes, was interesting to every woman who knows how much tidiness, thrift and comfort go with the ability to sew well.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. A Bicycle Party.

Miss Daisy Elsberg, of Prospect place, gave a bicycle party to about thirty of her friends, last Monday. The party started from home on Prospect place in the borough and rode over to Park avenue and out that wide thoroughfare to Pumptown and Metuchen. Some of the party went all the way to Metuchen while others waited at Pumptown. On the return refreshments were enjoyed at Miss Elsberg's home and all the party adjourned to the Park Club house where an informal dance in bicycle costume was held.

Jennings assigned the claim because he himself was all that was left of the corporation against whom the action for salary was brought. After he had assigned his claim, process in the suit to collect the salary was served upon the pastor himself, which was a rather humorous situation.

While these judgments were being secured, the mortgage foreclosure proceedings were also being carried on, and the judgment creditor were made co-defendants with Grace church corporation in the suit.

A new and surprising movement was made by Mr. Mills, the representative of the estate which had originally donated the land for the church.

Mr. Mills appeared in Chancery and prayed that whatever surplus remained after the payment of the mortgage should be used for the original purposes specified in the deed of gift—namely, to maintain the worship of the Episcopal church.

Chancellor McGill held that Mr. Mills had no case.

The suit was then carried to the Court of Errors and Appeals, the highest tribunal in the State, and there a decision was rendered about six months ago in Mr. Mills' favor.

This decision renders the judgments against the church property worthless, and means the defeat of Jennings' cause.

For a long time no Episcopal services whatever were held in Westfield as Grace church was wholly deserted by its congregation and was frequented only by the rector.

In March, 1894, however, the remnant of Grace church congregation met and organized religious services. St. Paul's parish was erected and incorporated in April, 1895, and the following month it was admitted into union with the diocese as a church in regular standing. There are, therefore, in existence at this time two Episcopal churches in Westfield, the rector, wardens and vestry of Grace church, which is Mr. Jennings, and the rector, wardens and vestry of St. Paul's church. The latter has an efficient rector in Rev. Wm. S. Barrows. Its services are held regularly in Etta Hall, on Broad street.

The property of Grace church is sold to satisfy the mortgage. Under the decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals, the proceeds in excess of the amount needed to pay the mortgage, will be used for carrying on Episcopal services in Westfield. It will as a matter of fact be placed in the hands of St. Paul's church, which will be the natural custodian of such a fund.

Grace church is in a ruinous condition from the years of neglect that it has suffered.

FIRST C. E. BICYCLE RUN.

and prayer was held in which the true Endeavor spirit prevaded. After the meeting, the visitors were invited to stop for a social time and refreshments which were bountifully served.

The clouds had almost entirely disappeared and the full round moon was just peeping above the horizon when the visitors gathered in front of the chapel once more. Everybody was pleased with the success of the run and experiences of the ride were exchanged.

The Society at the Seventh-Day Baptist church was most largely represented. All the other societies in the city, except three, had one or more members in line. There was only one tandem in the party and that came from the Society at the First Presbyterian church.

Near the chapel, the road was particularly rough and sandy so many of the party walked to the home of Mrs. Reune Randolph, half a mile away, where a halt was called until the moon rose sufficiently to light the road. Soon, the moonlight made the scene almost as light as day, and the party started on their return trip. The ride was enlivened by bright remarks from the Endeavorers. Nobody wanted to go home when Park avenue was reached and so the run was continued to Oak Tree and Pumptown, a delightful spin in the moonlight, and then back to Plainfield where the party disbanded.

JRISIA FEARS THE END.

IF DITO DIES HE WILL BE HELD FOR MURDER.

One of the Italian Combatants Last Sunday at Netherwood is Failing, and the Assailant is Getting Uneasy.

The two combatants at the Italian shanty, who played the principal parts in the bloody affray at the shanty on Sunday afternoon, still lie in the Muhlenberg Hospital as a result of the wounds they received. There seems no doubt but that they were the only ones implicated in the trouble. One of them lies very near death's door, while the other appears to be rapidly recovering.

Vincenzo Dito was the most seriously injured of the two. He was stabbed about the body and legs with a knife. Francisco Jrisia admits that he stabbed Dito, but says that it was done with a penknife. There are numerous cuts about the body of Dito, and some of them are dangerous. The lungs were just missed and a number of important arteries were cut. Dito lost a great deal of blood, and it is feared some of the wounds will prove fatal.

Meanwhile, as Dito has been gradually sinking, his comrade has been recovering. Jrisia was struck in the head with an axe, wielded by Dito. Jrisia claims that Dito struck the first blow with the axe and that he only defended himself against the attacks of Dito. It was first thought that Jrisia's skull was fractured but it seems that he escaped very luckily. He lost a great deal of blood from the deep cut in the side of his head which made him very weak. He is a man of fine physique and great strength and was in good health at the time of the fight. This has aided him greatly in resisting the attacks of illness.

As Dito grows weaker, Jrisia grows more restless. He probably realizes that there will be a serious charge against him if his companion should die and is naturally worried about it. It has been feared that Jrisia will make an attempt to escape should he find that his victim was dying and to prevent that an officer is to be detailed to the Hospital to look after the Italians.

—The work of tearing down the steeple to the old Seventh-Day Baptist church edifice, which is to be converted into a schoolhouse, has been begun and the steeple is rapidly being dismantled.

NEW PLAN OF MISSION WORK.

Trinity Church Society to Assist in Foreign Missionary Work.

The Christian Endeavor service at Trinity Reformed church last Monday was one of great interest to all present. The president, Alfred K. Willett, was in charge, and after conducting the opening exercises, he asked Rev. Cornelius Schenck, to introduce the speaker of the evening, Miss Duryea, secretary for China of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed church. Miss Duryea is so thoroughly interested in the subject of missions that she imparts the interest and enthusiasm to all with whom she comes in contact. She related many incidents in connection with her work, showing the saving grace and help of the Master. She urged all to push on the work of saving souls and thus obtain the blessings which the Master has in store for His children.

At the close of the speaker's remarks she presented a plan whereby anyone present could become a stockholder in an organized society for the support of missionaries in foreign lands. Rev. Cornelius Schenck suggested that the collection received be devoted to the purchase of a coupon which would make the society a stockholder. The suggestion was adopted unanimously by those present.

Will you give up all that health means to you? If not, look out for impure blood. Cure boils, pimples, humors and all scrofulous tendencies by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable and do not purge, pain or gripe. All druggists.

Died in the Far West.

The many friends of Insley Gardner will learn with sorrow of his death which occurred at his home in Helena, Mon., Monday, May 31st, after an illness of a year, with paralysis. JOINED IN WEDLOCK.

MISS NORA A. CASEY AND JOHN J. GALLAGHER MARRIED.

The Ceremony Was Performed in St. Mary's Church Tuesday, Followed By a Reception at the Bride's Home.

St. Mary's church was filled by a large concourse of people at 5:30 o'clock Tuesday evening to witness the marriage of Miss Nora Agnes Casey, daughter of Patrick Casey, to John Joseph Gallagher, of this city.

The church interior presented a very beautiful appearance. The altar was decorated with cut flowers and ferns and all the candles upon it were burning.

At exactly 5:30 o'clock the bridal party entered the church and to the strains of a wedding march, walked to the front of the altar, where the groom and best man awaited them.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Smith, pastor of the church.

The bride was given away by her father. Her gown was of white silk with chiffon and pearl trimmings.

The bridesmaid was Miss Nellie Casey, a sister of the bride, she wore yellow ordandie and carried a basket of yellow roses decked with ribbons.

Daniel J. Shea, of this city, was best man. Miss Mary J. Smith presided at the organ and furnished excellent music.

No invitations were issued to the church, and the many friends of the bride and groom crowded the edifice to its utmost capacity.

After the ceremony the couple were driven directly to the home of the bride's father, corner of New and West Third streets, where they held a reception to which only relatives were invited. In connection with the reception there was an elaborate wedding supper. The presents were numerous and very handsome. At 9 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Gallagher left amid a shower of rice and old shoes for a wedding trip lasting two weeks.

Both are well known and very popular in this city. Mr. Gallagher has been employed for five years at the Potter Press Works.

On returning from their wedding journey, the couple will take up their residence on West Third street, in this city.

CHANGES IN THE MAILS.

POSTMASTER HETFIELD HAS MADE A NUMBER OF IMPROVEMENTS.

Better Postal Service Is Now to Be Given to the Plainfield Public—Four Direct Mails to Philadelphia Added.

Through the constant efforts of Postmaster Hetfield, the mail service given to the people of Plainfield is steadily improving in every direction, the change in the delivery system, by which there are now four deliveries instead of three, was noted at the time. Now Mr. Hetfield has made some alterations in the time of the arrival and departure of the mails and has so arranged them that their number has been increased.

The changes in the mails to and from New York are but slight. The incoming mail, arriving here at 6:15 p. m., has been left out. The only changes in the outgoing mails to New York will be that the mails hitherto closing at 5 a. m. and 5 p. m. will close at 7:20 and 5:15 p. m., hereafter.

The mail to Somerville and Easton will close at 7:20 a. m., instead of 7:30 a. m., and a mail closing at 12:15 p m. has been added to that service.

The greatest change is in regard to the mails to Philadelphia and points south. There used to be but one direct mail to Philadelphia, Washington and the south, and that was started only several months ago. The rest of the Philadelphia mail had to go to New York to be sorted and then was sent to Philadelphia. Now there will be four direct mails to Philadelphia, closing at 8:40 and 11:30 a. m. and 1 and 2:30 p. m., and four direct ones in return, arriving at 7:20 and 9:29 a. m and 12:15 and 6 p. m. Then there will also be a through fast mail for Washington and the south, closing at 6 p. m.

Caught in the Car Tracks.

A wagon containing Mr. Maltby and family, of West Dunellen, broke down Tuesday afternoon at the corner of Watchung and North avenues. One wheel caught in the car tracks and it was completely wrecked. The occupants of the wagon were thrown out, but fortunately no one was injured. The wagon was taken to Stevens' blacksmith shop on East Second street where it was repaired in a little while.

To Delinquent Tax Payers.

Persons who have failed to pay their taxes to the city for the year 1895, must settle with the collector on or before Thursday of this week, or their names will be advertised in the newspapers next day.

GAVE STARTLING FACTS.

ARTHUR KROM DELIVERED AN ADDRESS ON STERILIZING MILK.

The Address Was Made at a Public Meeting of the Town Improvement Association—A Very Valuable and Liberal Offer.

A public meeting of the Town Improvement association was held Tuesday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. building, at which Arthur Krom, of this city, gave a very interesting and instructive talk on "The Need of Sterilizing Milk." Mr. Krom stated that bacteria is not, as some people suppose, a small animal, but a beautiful little plant having animal power of locomotion. He considered that the present scarlet fever epidemic is due to impure milk, and that it was not a more serious one, he held, is due to good luck more than anything else. He said that some dealers sell anything for milk which comes from any old place. He did not think that there is a cowyard within a radius of ten miles of Plainfield that is kept as it should be, and, to his own personal knowledge, he knew of farmers who had hidden their cows when the state inspector was around, and he thought that the cows must be in a very poor condition when they would not pass the inspector.

The method of dispensing milk from cans, the speaker held, was a very poor one and should be condemned. Mr. Krom said that as a general thing the help about most cowyards were allowed to wear old clothes that are not clean and they are careless about keeping themselves clean. The stalls, he contended, were not kept clean and the light and ventilation as a rule is poor. In general, he thought that the people of this city must be very tough to be able to stand such treatment. He thought that if a roster of the people who had died from consumption as the result of drinking impure milk could be obtained, it would surprise the people of Plainfield. Mr. Krom then exhibited and explained a number of charts showing the various kinds of germs which are common and which produce contagious diseases. He said that one germ in a quantity of milk under favorable conditions would multiply quickly into millions. He held that twenty per cent of the cows in this locality have tuberculosis, a disease that makes milk unfit to drink.

Mr. Krom then introduced the subject of sterilizing milk, and stated that a suitable laboratory could be established at an expense of $150 or $200, and if such a place should be established, he said he would offer his services free for six months or a year until the laboratory could be placed in good running order and a suitable man secured to run it.

After the address the subject was discussed by the members and it was finally decided to refer the matter to a committee of three who are to investigate the advisability of establishing a laboratory and report at a future meeting. A vote of thanks was given to Mr. Krom for his most interesting talk.

An Afternoon on the Mountain.

About twenty members of the Primary Teachers' Union enjoyed an outing Tuesday in the mountains. They were conveyed from the city to the foot of the mountains by trolley, and there they walked to the objective point, a short distance beyond Mountain Park Inn, which place they reached just in time for dinner. All hands assisted in preparing a tempting repast, and before partaking the group arranged themselves to have their picture taken. After all had indulged in a good dinner, the rest of the day was passed in playing games and sociability. Before the happy company parted they all joined in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Changes at Princeton.

President Patton, of Princeton University, has announced a number of changes in the corps of instruction. Prof. Willard Humphreys was promoted from an assistant to a full professorship in German. The chair of psychology, held by Prof. Mark Baldwin, was changed from Stuart, professor of experimental psychology, to Stuart, professor of psychology. Two new chairs were created, one in history and one in French. Prof. Arpold Guyot Cameron, recently of Yale, was elected professor of French language and literature. Prof. Andrew Campbell Armstrong, of Wesleyan University, was elected to the new chair in the department of history.

Beware!

Dr. Murray, of the Health Board, is calling the attention of citizens to the fact that the willful concealment of a case of contagious disease is punishable by a fine not less than $25 and not exceeding $50.

W. C. Kelly, of Park avenue, has returned from a flying trip to Chicago.

BOTH ARE MARRIED NOW

STRANGE COMPLICATIONS IN MR. STITES' MARRIED LIFE.

His First Wife Claims That He Deserted Her and Never Would Support Her—His Second Wife Is Equally Married.

Nine years ago a couple were married by Justice Nash in his office. All was not love between them and four years later the wife married again, claiming that her husband had deserted her and had married another woman. He had not made another venture in the matrimonial sea and returned to bring a charge of bigamy against his former wife. The Grand Jury would not indict her and the complaint fell by the wayside. The last act in this little matrimonial drama was played on Sunday, May 9th, when the husband also married again. His marriage was kept a secret for some time.

October 21, 1888, Kate Sprigg, of Howard street, and Theodore E. Stites, of Grove street, appeared before Justice Nash and were married.

On October 4, four years later, Mrs. Stites, who claimed that her husband had deserted her and refused to support her and had heard that he was then living with another woman and two children in Pennsylvania, was married to Rufus Benson, with whom she has lived happily ever since. When Stites heard of her marriage, he returned and made a complaint against her in the charge of bigamy. She was held for the Grand Jury of Somerset county and appeared before the jury at Somerville. The jury refused to hold her on the charge and the matter was allowed to drop, although it is said that he tried to unsuccessfully raise money enough to bring suit against her.

Time flew by and he met Miss Clara Giddis, of Greenbrook road. He called often and sometimes took her driving. On Sunday, May 9th, he hired a buggy and took her for a drive. They had grown very intimate. The destination of the drive was Springfield, where they were quietly married.

None of the relatives of the bride knew of the marriage until some time afterward when the truth leaked out. The bride's parents had objected to the union on account of Stites' former unfortunate experiences in that line and because they feared legal difficulties with Mrs. Stites No. 1. When they learned that the knot had already been tied, there was a little scene and then the bride and groom were forgiven and Mrs. Stites No. 2 was received by her parents.

A reporter called at the home of Mrs. Benson who admitted that she had been married twice, but thought that the act was all right as he had never supported her, but that she had been called upon to support him.

The reporter also called at Mr. Stites' home and learned there from his present wife that the second ceremony was a fact. She had little to say about the matter.

ITALIANS IN JAIL.

They Recovered From Their Injuries and Were Taken to Jail.

The two Italians, who were recently engaged in a brutal fight at the Netherwood shanty and who have been confined to the hospital since that time, were released Wednesday, and Chief Grant placed the men under arrest. They were taken to Elizabeth and are now confined in the county jail.

It will be remembered that on the Sunday in question the two men were playing cards at their home in Netherwood and they disputed a certain play that was made. Words were turned to blows and they engaged in a fight with knives and an axe, with the result that both were nearly killed. Chief Grant made a complaint against the men charging them with atrocious assault. The men admit the crime, but when the court calls them to account it may be that they will be unwilling to say anything.

WEDDED FIVE YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Mohring Celebrated the Anniversary Pleasantly.

Louis Mohring, of 78 Linden avenue, gave his wife a surprise party last Tuesday in celebration of their fifth wedding anniversary. Mrs. Mohring's surprise was a complete one, as she received no intimation of what was going on until the guests, to the number of about thirty, appeared and took possession of the house. Games and sociability were indulged in until 11 o'clock, when a supper, prepared by Miss Nettie Dunn, was served. After the supper dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

IN AID OF THE MISSIONS.

CLOSING MEETING OF SOCIETY OF PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

A Programme of Music and Readings Was Given at the Meeting—Reports Were Also Read—The Participants in the Event.

Tuesday afternoon the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church held its final meeting for the season. It was a special meeting, with a very enjoyable programme, and was held in the lecture room of the church, which was prettily decorated with flowers.

Mrs. Frederick K. Fish, president of the society, presided, while Miss Emma Virginia Fish, the secretary, acted as organist. The meeting opened with devotional services. Miss M. G. Morse, of the Congregational church, was played on Sunday, May 9th, when the husband also married again. His marriage was kept a secret for some time.

October 21, 1888, Kate Sprigg, of Howard street, and Theodore E. Stites, of Grove street, appeared before Justice Nash and were married.

On October 4, four years later, Mrs. Stites, who claimed that her husband had deserted her and refused to support her and had heard that he was then living with another woman and two children in Pennsylvania, was married to Rufus Benson, with whom she has lived happily ever since. When Stites heard of her marriage, he returned and made a complaint against her in the charge of bigamy. She was held for the Grand Jury of Somerset county and appeared before the jury at Somerville. The jury refused to hold her on the charge and the matter was allowed to drop, although it is said that he tried to unsuccessfully raise money enough to bring suit against her.

Time flew by and he met Miss Clara Giddis, of Greenbrook road. He called often and sometimes took her driving. On Sunday, May 9th, he hired a buggy and took her for a drive. They had grown very intimate. The destination of the drive was Springfield, where they were quietly married.

None of the relatives of the bride knew of the marriage until some time afterward when the truth leaked out. The bride's parents had objected to the union on account of Stites' former unfortunate experiences in that line and because they feared legal difficulties with Mrs. Stites No. 1. When they learned that the knot had already been tied, there was a little scene and then the bride and groom were forgiven and Mrs. Stites No. 2 was received by her parents.

A reporter called at the home of Mrs. Benson who admitted that she had been married twice, but thought that the act was all right as he had never supported her, but that she had been called upon to support him.

The reporter also called at Mr. Stites' home and learned there from his present wife that the second ceremony was a fact. She had little to say about the matter.

ITALIANS IN JAIL.

They Recovered From Their Injuries and Were Taken to Jail.

The two Italians, who were recently engaged in a brutal fight at the Netherwood shanty and who have been confined to the hospital since that time, were released Wednesday, and Chief Grant placed the men under arrest. They were taken to Elizabeth and are now confined in the county jail.

It will be remembered that on the Sunday in question the two men were playing cards at their home in Netherwood and they disputed a certain play that was made. Words were turned to blows and they engaged in a fight with knives and an axe, with the result that both were nearly killed. Chief Grant made a complaint against the men charging them with atrocious assault. The men admit the crime, but when the court calls them to account it may be that they will be unwilling to say anything.

WEDDED FIVE YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Mohring Celebrated the Anniversary Pleasantly.

Louis Mohring, of 78 Linden avenue, gave his wife a surprise party last Tuesday in celebration of their fifth wedding anniversary. Mrs. Mohring's surprise was a complete one, as she received no intimation of what was going on until the guests, to the number of about thirty, appeared and took possession of the house. Games and sociability were indulged in until 11 o'clock, when a supper, prepared by Miss Nettie Dunn, was served. After the supper dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

SUMMER ENDEAVORERS.

DR. BRETT TOLD SOMETHING OF WHAT THEY SHOULD BE.

A Vacation Should Not be Taken From Church, the Bible and God—Local Union Rally Held Last Evening.

The cosy little Congregational church held an earnest and interested company of Christian Endeavorers Tuesday assembled in one of the helpful union meetings held periodically by the Plainfield Local Union. The evening was perfect for such a gathering, and the stirring Endeavor hymns with which the meeting began rang out with much spirit on the evening air. The song service was to have been led by Horace J. Martin, but he was obliged to be absent on account of illness, and the singing was led by Rev. C. E. Herring. Walter Reynolds acted as pianist.

E. E. Anthony, president of the union, presided over the meeting. Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, pastor of the church where the meeting was held, read the Scripture lesson and offered prayer; then, after another rousing hymn, Mr. Anthony introduced the speaker of the evening, the vice-president of the New Jersey State Union, Rev. Cornelius Brett, D. D. In introducing Dr. Brett, Mr. Anthony said, that two years ago he would have said he was from Jersey City, but since the Plainfield Convention Plainfield had adopted the doctor as her own.

Dr. Brett's subject was "The Christian Endeavorer on His Summer Vacation," and his address was a thoroughly delightful one. It was brief, practical, and to the point. He began by speaking of the word "vacation," which he said he didn't like, since it meant vacating, the formation of a vacuum, which nature abhorred. "Outing" was a better term for the Christian Endeavorer wanted to "vacate" from none of his powers and abilities to enjoy his summer holiday. "Holiday," too, was a term to be approved, especially when spelled "holy-day;" for the summer days should be holy days, lifting one nearer to God, the creator of all the beauty of the beautiful world.

Dr. Brett urged his hearers to thoroughly enjoy themselves while they were taking their vacation; to put aside care and worry, and rest and recreate. But they must take God with them; they must not say when taking the train for mountains or seashore, "Goodbye, church; I shan't attend you while I am gone; nobody will know whether I do or not. Goodbye, Bible, I shan't have time to read you there. Goodbye, God, I shan't need you where I am going." At a summer hotel, can you always tell that it is Sunday? A few go to church, the rest hang around and wish dinner was ready. One way to show your Christian endeavor, said the speaker, is to keep your face bright and serene, your voice gentle and pleasant, and never allow yourself to indulge in a profane silence" when things are horrisome and your nerves are on edge. And do you ever think what an amount of good you can do during these vacation days, in the little church or Sunday-school or Endeavor society near which your lot is to be cast? Be such Christian Endeavorers that you shall bring new honor to your home union, and that when you return, Plainfield will be glad to see you, as she is glad, in a certain sense, to have you go away for a season, to carrry blessing to others.

A few sentende prayers followed the address, then the offering was received, after which L. J. Bigelow, Jr., sang, "Throw Out the Life-Line," the congregation joining in the stirring chorus. William N. Runyon, who was also to sing at this service, was prevented from doing so.

Rev. C. E. Herring, always a popular speaker with a Plainfield audience, now took charge of the meeting for ten minutes, and conducted a very interesting open parliament, on the same subject as Dr. Brett's address. A number of bright, helpful suggestions were given, for work to be done during the summer holidays, and Mr. Herring's own words were full of practical leading on the same topic.

As a closing hymn was sung, after which Rev. C. L. Goodrich pronounced the benediction, and the Endeavorers dreamed out of the church, after an unusually enjoyable meeting.

Off for the Adirondacks.

F. Ludwig Conde, the well known musician of this city, will leave on Wednesday of next week for the Hotel Childwold, in the Adirondacks, where he will furnish and conduct the orchestra during the summer. Clarence Lester Eick will be his pianist and Carl Lohnhoff, of the New York Philharmonic Society, will be the 'cellist.

CHATTED AND FEASTED.

ANNUAL STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL OF HOLY CROSS CHURCH.

There Was a Large Attendance and the Time Passed Quickly—Who the Workers Were and What They Did.

The annual strawberry festival under the auspices of the Sunday school of the Church of the Holy Cross was held last Tuesday in the parish house. The rooms were prettily decorated in the prevailing color of yellow, and the effect was very pretty. The affair was in charge of Miss Anna Murphy, who acted as general supervisor, and she was ably assisted by the young women of the church and Sunday-school. Of course, Superintendent B. R. Western was present and he made it a point to see that everybody enjoyed themselves.

At the candy table were Miss Fountain, Miss Western, Miss Emma Hall, Miss Emmons and Miss Beatrice Hall. The cake table was in charge of Mrs. Murphy, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Turrill and Mrs. Western, while Miss Ida Fountain attended to the lemonade well. The waitresses were Miss Helen Brown, Miss Carrie Dentz, Miss Carrie Philpitt and Miss Mary Jessup.

The rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, was present and he made a most excellent member of the reception and entertainment committee, for he met everyone that entered the rooms and personally looked after their welfare. He was ably assisted by Horsely Barker, whose genial manner was proverbial. The festival was held from 3 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock in the evening. In the afternoon the attendance of children was unusually large, and in the evening there was a large and encouraging attendance. The receipts will be used for the Sunday-school, and there is every reason to believe that they will be large.

New Telephones.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company have put in three new telephones within the last few days. One 'phone was put in the office of the Board of Health on Park avenue, another in the law offices of Assemblyman W. R. Codington, and the other in the furniture store of Fowlison & Jones.

Commencement Music.

The music for the Plainfield High School commencement in Music Hall, this evening, will be furnished by Walter Rogers, of New York. Rogers is the successor to Cappa, the famous leader, and is now solo cornetist in Sousa's Band. The latter position was only taken by him a short time ago.

BRYAN MEN IN CONTROL

MEMBERS ON THE STATE COMMITTEE FOR "NO COMPROMISE."

Chairman Price Refuses to Name Any One Who Deliberately Aided and Abetted Republicans in Any Contest.

Every county in the State was represented at the meeting of the Democratic State Committee at Trenton June 16th, and more interest was manifested in the gathering than was displayed toward any held during the last National campaign. This was largely because it was expected that the committee would definitely decide what recognition, if any, should be given the sound money wing of the party, and on that score there was no disappointment.

No resolutions were adopted, but action was taken and sentiment expressed during the selection of members of the several county boards of election, which declared emphatically for "no compromise," and established a rule that while the present committee is in control, no Democrat who opposed the cause of Bryanism and free silver last year should be given a voice in the party councils.

"Personally, I cannot recognize as a Democrat any one who deliberately aided and abetted the Republican party in either a National, State or local contest," said Chairman Price, "and I will not knowingly name such a person as a member of the election board of any county, unless a majority of the committee so orders."

Inasmuch as the law required that list of county election officers should be submitted to the Governor not later than July 1, the chairman said he had called this meeting to settle the question. He asked the committee to bear in mind that the Chicago platform was and would remain, at least until 1900, the Democratic doctrine, and one antagonistic to it could not be classed as a Democrat.

The committee approved the following list of county election officers every one of them an approved silver Democrat or one credited to be such by the representative from his county:

Union—John L. Crowell and Patrick J. Ryan.

Somerset—J. H. Madison and Jacob Shurts.

Middlesex—Hendrickson S. Brown and St. George Kempson.

Morris—Paul Revere and Oscar Lindsley.

Neither Johnston Cornish, Senator Daly nor General Donnelly had a word to say relative to the Gubernatorial nomination except that it was rather premature to discuss it.

Very little was said relative to the candidacy of Senator Smith, for re-election, except by former State Senator Keys and a few other warm friends of the Senator.

No action was taken with reference to the pending constitutional amendments, the committee deciding that the questions involved were not properly party issues.

A JERSEY JUNE BRIDE.

A CHURCH WEDDING CELEBRATED IN DUNELLEN LAST WEEK.

A New Market Girl Becomes the Better Half of a Prosperous Red Bank Merchant—Details of the Nuptial Event.

The Dunellen Presbyterian church was the scene June 16th of a pretty wedding when Miss Helen Coriell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Coriell, of New Market, and Clarence White, a prosperous merchant of Red Bank, were united in marriage by Rev. D. W. Skellinger, of Washington, D. C., who was formerly a pastor of the church in which the ceremony was performed. A pleasing arrangement of choice flowers, ferns and palms made the church beautiful and attractive. Those present to witness the ceremony comprised the best people in Dunellen and New Market, while there was a large number of out-of-town guests. Previous to the appointed hour Joseph Neuman, of Dunellen, rendered a programme of classical selections on the organ, and while the bridal party were entering the church the Lohengrin wedding march was played.

The ushers, Gilbert Boughton Fletcher, of Dunellen; William Wallace Coriell, Harry Johnson, of Plainfield, and Frederick Coriell, of Bound Brook, made their appearance first, followed by the bridesmaids, Miss Nina Coriell, sister of the bride, of New Market, Miss Evelyn White, Miss Maide L. White, sisters of the groom, of Red Bank, and Miss Mary Giles, of Plainfield, all gowned in white organdie over green, and carrying baskets of carnations. The maid of honor, Miss Florence Coriell, niece of the bride, of Dunellen, came next, gowned in white and she carried a mother-of pearl tray bearing the wedding ring. Lastly, came the bride leaning on the arm of her father who gave her away in marriage. She wore a gown of white satin en train, also a tulle veil held in place by a diamond and pearl cluster, the gift of the groom.

At the altar the bridal party were met by the groom and best man, James S. Martin, of Brooklyn, and the officiating clergyman. The beautiful and impressive Episcopal service was used and the responses were very distinct. While the service was being performed pretty selections were rendered on the organ, and as the bridal party left the church the favorite Mendelssohn wedding march was played.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents in New Market from 8 to 10, and only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present. The house was attractively decorated in pink and white, the same colors as were used at the church. During the above hours Mr. and Mrs. White received the congratulations of those present and a bountiful wedding supper was served. The bride and groom left early enough to catch the 10:17 train at Plainfield for New York. This morning they left for a two weeks' wedding trip to Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, White Mountains, to Boston, thence to Red Bank where they will reside.

They received a great many costly and useful presents from their relatives and friends. The groom's gifts to the ushers were gold stick pins set with torquoise.

Festival of Good Things.

The members of the Christian Endeavor Society of Warren chapel held a strawberry and ice cream festival last Thursday in the chapel. The committee in charge consisted of Henry Seader, Miss Anna Searing and Miss Minnie Zelss. The flower table was looked after by Miss Kate Dieke, Miss Mamie Kohler and Miss Lillian Zelss. At the lemonade booth were Miss Minnie Wilson, Mrs George Wilson and Miss Mamie Squires. Miss Min*nie Zelss, Miss Maggie Sheppard and* Mrs Ray Schenck served the cake, while Miss Searing and Miss Louise Kohler presided at the candy table. Henry Seader, Theodore Martin and John Herman were in charge of the ice cream.

College Boys Next Year.

The graduating class at Leal's School, this year, will be represented in the different colleges as follows: Columbia, Paul Anderson; Princeton, Wm. K. Dwight and Fred Miller; Lafayette, E. Maxwell Honeyman; Lehigh, J. Vincent Rittenhouse and Everett J. Peck; Harvard, Albert Stevenson. Strange to say, there is not one of them going to Yale, while last year almost the entire class went to that centre of learning.

Praise for Local Health Board.

Dr. Hunt, of the State Board of Health, speaks very highly of the efficiency of the Plainfield Board. He says that it is in striking contrast to the Boards of many other cities. He greatly commends their action in the present scarlet fever scare, and says that they have taken every precaution possible to prevent its spread. With such a Board, Plainfield need not fear any widespread epidemic.

BUILDED FOR ALL TIME.

FOUNDATION FOR SUCCESS ACQUIRED BY STUDIOUS YOUNG MEN.

End of the Year's Studies at Leal's School—Ten Pupils Finished Their Courses and Will go to College or Business Pursuits.

A pleasing variation from the ordinary run of school and college commencements were the closing exercises of Prof. John Leal's School, held in the Y. M. C. A. hall, Thursday. The exercises opened with a violin solo by Miss Nellie Udell, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Charles L. Lewis.

Mr. Leal next introduced his old and valued friend, George Richmond, of New York, as the speaker of the evening. Mr. Richmond is a scientist of note and a very learned man. While more of an author than a speaker, his address of last evening showed him perfectly capable of filling the latter role. In his address he characterized the school days as the foundation of the life of a young man and spoke of the necessity of building a broad foundation which would support any structure that might be placed upon it. The young man, he said, never knew what he would build in the future.

A complete education, he said, includes science and letters. No one is compelled to choose between the two, for short as life is there is time to treat of both. Nobody pretends that the study is merely for the learning acquired but it seems best that what is studied should be practical. What is wanted is not only the facts but the ability to handle and utilize these facts.

After Miss Udell played again, Mr. Leal made a short speech to the boys and then announced that ten young men had completed their work with him. Of these Messrs. Boone, Curren and Dumont will enter business careers at once and the others, Messrs. Anderson, Dwight, Honeyman, Miller, Peck, Rittenhouse and Stevenson, will enter college.

The honorable mentions in the different classes were then announced: English composition, senior class, Dwight and Miller, junior class, Harman and Hall, third class, Richards and Terriberry; rhetoric, Glenny and Thomas; beginning Greek, Richards and White; beginning Latin, Terriberry; history, Crowe and Reinhart; first year work, Talmage and Schwegler; ancient history, Glenny, Wadsworth and O. Waring; German, Glenny, Miller and Terriberry; French, Hall and Honeyman; arithmetic Crowe and H. Boome; algebra, O. Waring, Richards and Leal; geometry, O Waring and Glenny; Cæsar, Fleming. Special prize for improvement in penmanship, Terriberry.

The hall was prettily decorated with American flags and maroon and old gold bunting, the colors of the school. The decorating committee consisted of E. Maxwell Honeyman, chairman; J. P. Welles Taylor, Walter Glenny, Willard Wadsworth, Owen Fleming and Henry Leal. The ushers were: E. Maxwell Honeyman, J. P. Welles Taylor and Aubrey Crowe.

A KICKING HORSE.

The Driver Upset, but He Pluckily Held On to the Reins.

A runaway horse narrowly missed killing his driver and succeeded in partially wrecking one wagon on Park avenue Friday morning. The delivery wagon of A. M. Griffin was passing under the Park avenue bridge this morning, at about 7:50 o'clock, driven by Edward C. Vermeule, of Jackson avenue, when a train passed over the bridge and frightened the animal. The animal began to kick and struck Mr. Vermule on the knee with his hoof. He was thrown backward into the wagon but pluckily held on to the reins. The horse splintered the dashboard and started to run. Vermeule tried to guide the frenzied animal through the vehicles that were coming to the 7:58 train, but a collision was inevitable and the cart driven by one of the mail carriers was partially wrecked.

The horse used his heels, just missing the head of the driver, who was trying to bring him to a stand. Roundabout, Flynn came to his assistance and, with the help of several bystanders, the horse was brought to a halt.

Colored Couple Married.

A wedding was solemnized on Tuesday evening at the residence of Capt. William B. Ostrom, 249 East Ninth street, when Mrs. Annie Gillam and Worden Watkins, both well-known in colored society circles of this city, were united in marriage by Rev. Philip S. Gibson, pastor of the Mt. Olive Baptist church. The ceremony took place at 8:30 o'clock. The bride was attired in a gown of old rose colored silk. Mrs. Lizzie Wilson was bridesmaid and John Floyd acted as best man. About 55 guests were present, including some friends of Captain and Mrs. Ostrom and many members of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, to which the bride and the groom belong.

—The Sunday-school sessions at the First Baptist church are now held in the morning instead of afternoon.

"MOUSE TRAP" FUNNY.

WOMAN'S TIMIDITY EXHIBITED BY CLEVER YOUNG PEOPLE.

A Happy Diversion From the Customary Sociable at the First M. E. Church—The Humorous Story of the Farce Given.

A happy diversion from the customary social was the entertainment given in Vincent chapel last Thursday under the auspices of the Epworth League for the benefit of the library fund of the Sunday school. The programme opened with a recitation by Miss Rita Pond, who pleased her audience with her good work. An alto solo by Miss Charlotte Messerschmith, accompanied by Miss Etta Raybert, followed. The next number was a recitation by Miss Lucy Palmer Davis, given in an excellent manner. The last selection in part first was a vocal selection by Miss Eva Jenkins, Miss Lucy Palmer Davis, Thomas McDonald and Robert Davis, with Frank McDonald as accompanist.

The feature of the evening was the production of W. Dean Howells' one-act farce, entitled "Mouse Trap," which was arranged and given under the direction of Miss Etta Raybert. Those who are familiar with the piece need not be told that it is a most capital story and furnishes any amount of fun. The play opens with a drawing-room scene in which Miss Raybert as "Mrs. Amy Somers," and Ray T. Snodgrass as "Willis Campbell," are busily engaged discussing a newspaper story written by the latter in which woman is pictured as being cowardly and much afraid of everything in gen*eral. The discussion becomes exceed*ingly animated. Mrs. Somers is thoroughly disgusted with the idea that her sex are afraid and inclined to be cowardly, while Mr. Campbell still maintains that the fair sex are very timid. Suddenly the latter, for effect, pretends that a mouse has entered the room, and just as quickly Mrs. Somers gives an unearthly scream and jumps upon a chair. Thereafter every move or sound sends a thrill of terror to the heart of Mrs. Somers, and she firmly declares that she will not leave the room until her friend chases the innocent and much abused mouse from her presence.

While this is going on Mrs. Somers has several callers: Miss Jenkins as Mrs. Miller; Miss Edna French as Mrs. LuBemis; Miss Alice Jenkins as Mrs. Curwen; Miss Lucy Palmer Davis as Mrs. Roberts. They are shown to the room by Miss Bessie Day who takes the part of Jane. On entering the room the visitors are informed that a mouse has secreted itself within the four walls and instantly all hands make use of a chair or a sofa, and girl-fashion make every effort to escape the rodent. They plead with Mr. Campbell to make some effort to chase the mouse out of the room and every time he makes a move they scream like mad. Finally Mrs. Roberts offers a solution and suggests that while Mr. Campbell makes a great noise they all make one wild dash for liberty. This is done and all go except Mrs. Somers and Mr. Campbell. They remain and the former persists in asking her only friend to remove the mouse from the room. He tries to tell her that there never was a mouse there but this she refuses to believe and the more he tries to explain the worse Mrs. Campbell goes on until finally she says that if he was any kind of a man he would help her out of the difficulty. He offers to carry her from the room. This she refuses to let him do, and finally, losing all patience, he leaves Mrs. Somers where she is and gains his point in proving that woman is just what he said she was in the published article.

Every character in the play was well taken and it produced the heartiest laughter on the part of all present. Credit is due Miss Raybert in the arrangement of the play and those who took part for the able manner in which they presented it.

JUNIORS' SEVENTH YEAR.

Reports Showed That the Little People Have Done Good Work.

The seventh anniversary and closing exercises for the summer of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church were held Thursday afternoon in the lecture room of the church. The report of the treasurer, Lucy Coriell, showed that during the past year $34 had been raised and used in mission work. A review of the year's work by the Junior Supt. Mrs. Nancy Cordt, much good had been accomplished. The report of the treasurer, Lula Wyman, was encouraging. *A feature of the pro*gramme was an address by Rev. Cornelius Schenck and Miss Olive Wikoff. The following programme was rendered:—Piano solo, Grace Ten Eyck; recitation, Chrissie Mobus; recitation, Harold Schenck; piano duet, Hattie and Anna Randall; vocal solo, Violet Van Winkle; auto-harp solo, Bessie Ten Eyck; recitation, Anna Holder; piano solo, Lucy Coriell; recitation, Bulah Van Winkle; recitation, Cornelius Schenck; recitation, Bessie Randall; auto-harp solo, Bessie Ten Eyck.

TROLLEY PLANS BALKED.

DISASTROUS HITCH IN THE ATTEMPT TO GO UP THE MOUNTAIN.

It Seems Impossible to Get the Consent of Two Property Owners on the Latest Route Surveyed for The Extension.

After many attempts, it now looks as if the promoters of a trolley road to Washingtonville and the Mountain Park Inn were doomed to failure for the time being. A last attempt made by the Mountain Park Land Company to lay out a new route for the road met with the same obstacle as the projected road by Washingtonville. There were two property owners who persistently declared their decision of not allowing a trolley road to cross their property.

The railroad company has a large number of men out at work at the present time, and who could, without trouble, be sent here and have the extension laid in twenty days. The Mountain Park Land Company, knowing this, went to the expense of having an entire new route surveyed. It was found that it was possible to reach the Inn by a line from this side of the mountain different from the one already selected. The grades were ascertained and the route laid out.

Then came the work of obtaining the consent of the owners of the property through which the proposed route passed. All but two were won over, but those two would not allow the trolley to pass that way. So it was that the plan had to be given up. It now looks as if the trolley would not be seen at the Inn this summer at least, and the officers of the Land Company have almost given up hope of connecting their property with Plainfield by trolley.

A MASONIC HOME.

A Place for Indigent and Aged Members of the Order.

The New Jersey Masonic Grand Lodge has appointed a committee for the purpose of raising funds and procuring a home for aged and indigent members of the order and for the widows and orphans of Masons. George W. Fortmeyer, of East Orange, is chairman of the committee, and William D. Rutan, of Newark, is its secretary.

A number of properties have been offered to the committee at all kinds of prices, but the two sites that seem to meet with the most favor are the Ashurst property, in Mt. Holly, and River Rest, the old Field house on the banks of the Raritan, near Bound Brook. The latter was inspected by the committee last Sunday.

It is a three-story frame structure containing twenty four rooms, and is surrounded by eighty-two acres of ground. The Ashurst house is of brick, and dates back almost to Revolutionary times, but an expenditure of $5,000 would make it an excellent place for a Masonic Home, it is said.

While either of the above places might be selected, there has been nothing definitely settled upon, nor will there be until more money is available.

Received the Full Voltage.

Clarence Varian, of East Fifth street, a prominent New York electrician having an office on Beaver street, met with an accident Thursday that came very near proving fatal. He was working among some electric wires when one of his assistants turned on the current, not knowing that he was around. He received a shock from the current which was 1,000 volts strong. An ambulance was called but the man in charge refused to take him, saying that he was dead. A doctor examined him and after working over him for some time, restored him to consciousness. He soon recovered and was able to return to Plainfield in the afternoon, feeling few ill effects from the shock.

Danced the Night Away.

A successful dance was given in T. A. B Hall last Thursday, under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of A. O. H. The attendance was very large, there being about 200 couples present. Music was furnished by Prof. Reilly's orchestra. The reception committee was Miss Ragan, P. McDonough, and M. Nugent, and Ragan and P. Keefe acted as floor committee. The committee in general charge of the ball was Miss Lawlor, Miss Revelle, Miss Callahan and Miss Ragan.

The night before he will at*tend the closing exercises at the Mor*ristown Public School, and will then start for the Pangelcy Lakes, Me., to be absent until August 1st. Last *year, he worked all through the sum*mer wi hout a vacation.

Father Stafford's New Charge.

ROW OVER A LOVE FEAST

ELIZABETH DEMOCRATIC MEETING BREAKS UP IN A SQUABBLE.

One Faction, It Is Said, are Disgruntled Over the Acts of the Ones Arranging the Harmony Dinner at the Clark Hotel.

It has leaked out that the Elizabeth Democratic Executive Committee had a stormy meeting Thursday night, says the Newark News, at which harmony was thrown to the winds and the session broke up in a lively row. One prominent Democrat was fiercely raked over the coals and accused of being a disturbing element in the path of harmony. His alleged political sins were set forth by the reading of a pamphlet containing several typewritten pages, his chief accuser being a well-known lawyer and former prominent member of the Board of Education. The attack so disgusted some of the committeemen that they abruptly left the meeting and all attempts to conciliate those who remained proved fruitless.

With the harmony dinner only ten days distant, this does not augur well for its success, in reconciling the warring Democratic factions in Union county. It seems that the City Democratic Executive Committee had planned for a outing on the steamer Blackbird and a dinner at Glen Island with the object of bringing together the prominent Democrats in the county, and had figured the cost of the undertaking. But the other harmony faction spoiled this scheme by securing the Clark Hotel for a dinner and rushing out invitations. Now several of the city committeemen are so angry at this march, which they claim was stolen on them, that they won't go to the love feast, the tickets for which are $2 each.

The harmony dinner will take place at the Clark Hotel, June 28th. It is alleged that many prominent Democrats have been snubbed, and their friends who have been invited declare they will send their tickets back to William J. Lansley, the secretary of the Union Democratic Clubs.

Among those who, it is said, have been turned down by the "harmonizers" and not invited are Former Clerk of the State Senate and ex-Assemblyman John J. Matthews, Former Sheriff Hicks, and Former Alderman James Mead, of Rahway. The prime movers in the dinner are called by the other fellows "youthful political Warwicks," who want to run things and ignore the veterans of the party.

It is rumored that Prosecutor Marsh will not attend the dinner. Others who will refuse to attend, it is said, are City Clerk Manning and Former Assemblyman Kelly. Rahway promises to send quite a delegation, but it is in Elizabeth that most of the dissatisfaction is showing itself.

INFECTION IN THE MILK.

CAUSE OF THE SCARLET FEVER EPIDEMIC SUPPOSEDLY DISCOVERED.

Two of the Sons of Milkman Nelson Giles Were Ill With the Disease—One Son Handled the Milk Cans.

Two weeks ago scarlet fever made its appearance in this city, but in a mild form. Nevertheless, the health authorities were somewhat disturbed, as it seemed impossible to tell how the disease was started and what caused it to spread. The members of the Board of Health have been quietly investigating the subject and Saturday afternoon discovered what they think is the cause. The son of Nelson Giles, a local milkman, who has been daily handling the milk cans, was found to be in the worst stage of the disease. Another son, who was taken ill with the fever some time ago, is now staying at his grandfather's farm at Stelton.

There has been a suspicion for some time that the disease was being spread through milk, but it was impossible for the Board to discover anything. All the milkmen that came to this city declared that there was no illness at their farms and an investigation did not reveal any.

Saturday afternoon, Randolph Giles, son of Nelson Giles, called on Dr. Adams and explained that he was not feeling well. It did not take the doctor long to discover that the lad was in the worst stages of the disease and that the skin was scaling off. The doctor reported the matter to the Board of Health and young Giles was quarantined at his home in the Miller flats, Park avenue.

Mr. Giles' milk depot is in the old Alert Hose Company house on Madison avenue. He said he did not know of his son's illness when the health authorities called on him and finally informed him of the fact. He then had 280 quarts of milk in stock and Inspector Addis dumped it all into the sewer. He then came to McVey's Hotel, on North avenue, and dumped eighty quarts that had just been delivered there.

A storekeeper on West Front street had bought twelve quarts of Giles and had frozen it into ice cream when Inspector Addis arrived at his store and compelled him to throw it away.

It was learned that Russell Giles, another son of Nelson Giles, was taken ill some time ago and sent to his grandfather's farm near Stelton. It is supposed that he was suffering with scarlet fever. Mr. Giles' two farms were reported to be all right, all the help there being in a healthy condition. The members of the Board were of the opinion that the infection came from the milk depot where the two boys, Randolph and Russell were accustomed to handle the milk cans and assist in washing them.

Mr. Giles was greatly surprised at the visit of the Health Board, and professed complete ignorance of the illness of his son. Mr. Giles and his other son, Mifford Giles, were instructed not to carry any more milk until they were given permission.

Sunday morning, when Inspector Addis came down town, he found Mifford Giles driving around with two large cans of milk. Inspector Addis ordered him to stop and throw the milk into the sewer. He learned from Roundsman Flynn who had been watching Giles, that he had left a can at McVey's. Mr. McVey said that he knew of no milk being left there, Giles said that he had left some there and it was found in the cellar. When the inspector found it, Mr. McVey was pouring the milk into an out house. Inspector Addis threw the rest into the sewer.

It had been understood that Mifford Giles was to board on East Third street until the quarantine was removed from his home but when the inspector found that he had been delivering milk, Giles was sent home to remain there in the quarantine. He said that he did not think it would do any harm for him to deliver a little milk, Addis alleges.

TO INCREASE THEIR FEES.

New Scale May Be Adopted by Physicians of Elizabeth.

A movement is on foot among the physicians in Elizabeth to increase their fees under certain conditions. At the present time many of the doctors charge the same amount whether they are called to attend a patient at noon or midnight, making additional charges when called between the hours of midnight and seven o'clock in the morning.

The new plan, as suggested and adopted by the Clinic Society, is to charge double the rates for calls made after six o'clock in the evening and before seven o'clock in the morning.

Death Comes Quietly.

The death of Mrs. Michael Ettinger, aged 38 years, occurred Sunday morning at her home on Cottage place. She had been ill for several months with consumption and her death was not wholly unexpected. She leaves a husband and two children. The funeral services were held Tuesday morning from the house at 9:30, and were private.

Miss Josie Fritz, of Somerset street, is visiting friends in Scranton.

WILL PICNIC AWHEEL.

CONGREGATIONAL ENDEAVOR SOCIETY PLAN A NOVEL OUTING.

It Will Be a Bicycle Picnic—The Young People Will Ride to Glenside Park and Spend Saturday Afternoon.

Plainfield has had the name of originating church bicycle runs, of forming a Christian Endeavor bicycle squad to visit the different societies not far from this city, and of having the first Epworth League in the country to give a bicycle sociable. Now the bicycle has been used in another way and the members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church are planning a bicycle picnic for next Saturday afternoon.

There is a majority of the young people of the Congregational church that ride wheels. It will be remembered that the first church run was held by that congregation last summer. Most of them spend their Saturday afternoons on the smooth roads of this part of Jersey enjoying a spin on their bicycles. Knowing this fact, Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, chairman of the social committee of the society, planned that all should go together and make a little picnic of it.

The proposed bicycle picnic immediately found favor among the young people of the church. The weather has gotten too warm for the regular sociable in the church parlors and the thought of something new pleased everybody.

The Endeavorers will gather at the home of Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, on Fairview avenue, and will prepare to start at 2 o'clock, Saturday afternoon. All the young women of the society are expected to bring lunch enough for two and then share it with some other member of the party. The Endeavorers will ride up Front street to Scotch Plains and then turn to their left through the Gap and out to Glenside Park.

It is at Glenside Park that the picnic proper is to be held. Wheels will be stacked in the cool shade, and the party will clamber up through the rocky glen to the spring for a draught of the delightful spring water there. Some will climb up the steep side of the mountain, others will explore the park until the supper hour arrives, when all will gather under the shade of the spreading chestnuts and enjoy the repast picnic fashion. The return to Plainfield will be made in the twilight. If the weather should be threatening the picnic and ride will be postponed.

SHORTAGE IN TREASURY

TROUBLE IN BENEFIT ASSOCIATION OF POND TOOL WORKS.

A Deficit of $540.02 Cannot Be Explained By the Treasurer, James D. Anderson—The Association Takes Action in the Case.

After a number of weeks of the utmost secrecy it has finally leaked out that the funds of the Benefit Association of Pond Tool Works are deficient to the amount of $540 02, which the members are unable to account for. Sometime ago the president, Councilman C. J. Newman, was injured and he was entitled to benefits from the association, and when he attempted to collect the money he was unable to get it until after seven weeks of the most persistent effort with the treasurer, J. D. Anderson. Mr. Newman began to think that something must be wrong and he at once instituted a thorough examination of all accounts. At first, he was unable to get any satisfaction from the treasurer who seemed to be unwilling to explain the shortage which was apparent to those who knew of the affair. Mr. Newman was not the only one who failed to receive benefits, and before it was surmised that there was a shortage in accounts several extra assessments were made to keep the treasury in funds, and at one time benefits were suspended for several weeks owing to the low condition of the treasury.

The members and officers began to wonder what had become of all the money supposed to be in the treasury, and accordingly the auditing committee of the association made a thorough investigation of the books. The next on several occasions with Mr. Anderson and tried to learn just where the shortage was. The latter was unable to explain the difficulty, although he held that he was only a few dollars short. After a very careful examination the auditing committee discovered the exact amount short and a meeting was called for Saturday evening for the purpose of making a report and also to give Mr. Anderson an opportunity to explain his side of the affair. The meeting was held in Red Men's Hall and there was an unusually large number of members present. The auditing committee made a statement showing the condition of the treasury up to the time Mr. Anderson was relieved of his office, and the amount short was stated to be $540 02. The committee also stated that they held a mortgage on the household furniture owned by their late treasurer, and that an insurance policy for $500 had been turned over to them. On investigation, however, it was learned that the policy had lapsed and consequently was of no account. Temporarily, Mr. Anderson was paying $2 a week to the association pending any final action that the members of the association might take. The committee said that Mr. Anderson had been before Judge De-Meza on three different occasions, and it was on one of these occasions that he and his wife signed papers turning over the furniture in their home to the association.

The above are the principal facts in the case and after they were presented to the members there was a general discussion. It was decided that the missing money must be paid back within two years or the claim would be outlawed. Most of the members were inclined to be lenient and give Mr. Anderson all the time they could. The latter was present at the meeting and stated that in his own mind he was sure that he only owed the association a few dollars but the figures of the committee showed the deficit in a different light, and if the association would give him time he would pay it all back. One member thought it would be a good idea if Mr. Anderson could borrow the entire sum, $540.02, from some source and immediately make good the amount he is short.

After much discussion a resolution was adopted that Mr. Anderson pay $5 each week to the association for the term of two years, and upon any failure to meet the obligation he is to be prosecuted criminally. In connection with this resolution Robert Gow, Mr. Leland and Samuel Robinson were appointed a committee to see that the payment be made each week, and in case of failure they are to prosecute Mr. Anderson.

The latter said that he would be unable to meet the requirements of the resolution but was willing to do all that he could to pay back the deficiency.

The action taken by the members of the association last Saturday evening is said to be final, and if Mr. Anderson fails to meet the requirements, the other alternative will be followed.

Funeral of a Good Man.

The remains were conveyed to Rahway for interment.

DIED VERY SUDDENLY.

MRS. WILLIAM NEWCORN PASSED AWAY IN A NEW YORK DRUG STORE.

Had Been Shopping in the Metropolis and Was Apparently in Good Health Until Just a Few Minutes Before Her Death.

With hardly a moment's morning, Mrs. Rachael Newcorn, wife of Justice William Newcorn, of this city, was Friday stricken down with heart failure in a New York drug store and passed away before a doctor could be called.

Mrs. Newcorn was well-known in this city where she has resided for many years. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dreier, of West Front street and Madison avenue, and was about thirty years of age. Last winter she was very ill and her life was despaired of but she gradually improved until she was able to be out again and was considered in good health until the time of her death. Yesterday morning Mrs. Newcorn and her sister, Miss Bertha Dreeir, went to New York do do some shopping. The former seemed perfectly well and doing their errands, they started down town to visit Mr. Newcorn's mother at her home on Second street. They were a block from their destination when suddenly Mrs. Newcorn complained that her eyes pained her. They went into a drug store on the corner to get something for it.

While in the store, Mrs. Newcorn was seized with dizziness and was compelled to sit down. She soon became unconscious and passed away in a few moments. A doctor was hurriedly summoned, but arrived too late to be of any service. He said that she had died of heart failure.

Her husband and relatives in this city were quickly notified and Mr. Newcorn left for New York at once.

Mrs. Newcorn leaves two children, Isadore and Yette.

Mrs. Newcorn was always interested in the work of her husband and was a frequent visitor at his office. She was a member of the Hebrew synagogue in this city. She also belonged to Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas.

Mr. and Mrs. Newcorn have been living on West Front street, near New street She was devoted to the care of her children and her home.

The store in which Mrs. Newcorn died was the dispensary of Theo. F Heller, M. D., 17 Avenue B.

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Best Methods of Getting at the Gist of the Scriptures.

The Christian Endeavor meeting held last Friday at the Park Avenue Baptist church was one of the best in the history of the society. The leader, J. Harry Manning, secretary of the Y. P. S. C. E., called most earnestly and profitably upon the subject assigned, "The Best Way to Study the Bible," citing various methods adopted by noted Bible students. The remainder of the meeting was fully occupied by prayer and testimony, many of the Endeavorers relating their own experience in the line of Bible study. Several members from the East Third Street Mission Christian Endeavor Society were present and participated to the pleasure and profit of all those who were there to listen to their earnest words.

Relief Association Needs Funds.

There is no more worthy object for help than the Relief Association of this city. Its object is to relieve the poor and needy in a systematic way and it has accomplished much. Now that association makes an appeal to the people of Plainfield that should be speedily answered. The Association needs funds badly. There is an indebtedness that should be cleared away. Will those who are liberally inclined please remember the situation and send their financial aid before they go away on their summer vacation so as to help the officers of the association out of their present dilemma.

After the Piney Tribe.

Of late there has been several ambitious Plainfielders who have sought the various streams in this vicinity in search of fish and most all have had good luck. Edward Smith, of Fourth street, succeeded in landing a 16 pound carp from the pond at New Market a few days ago, and Frank Vosseler came home from the same place with a basket full of eels and bass. Daniel VanWinkle, of West Front street, caught a 4 pound bass in the New Market waters, and Lawyer W. K. McClure spent the largest part of a day at the same place and came home with an empty basket.

In Honor of Her Cousin.

Miss J. Louise Jenkins entertained a number of her friends, last Friday at her home on West Second street, in honor of her cousin, Miss Ella Whitall, who has just moved to this city from the west. A conversation party occupied the first part of the Friday, and then came other games, refreshments and general sociability.

The first of next week Alfred Garland, of East Fifth street, will leave for Asbury Park where he will spend the summer with his father, Prof. Garland.

SEEKING A JAIL SITE.

IT SEEMS PROBABLE THAT THE CITY WILL HAVE TO BUILD.

The City Officials Are Unable to Find a Landlord Who is Willing to Rent a Building to Quarter the Prisoners In.

Time goes on and still the local offenders are stowed away with the vermin in the rookery which has acted in the capacity of city jail for so many years. It is not the fault of the police or the police committee of the Common Council, however, that the change has not been already made.

It will be remembered, as The Press stated at the time, that the city jail was condemned by the Board of Health and the city authorities were instructed to repair the old place and put it in habitable condition or else secure new quarters. There would have been a change long ago but that the scheme of a city hall has hung fire and the Council did not wish to build a new jail separate from the city hall if the latter was to be erected at once. Now they have been compelled to take some action and not wait for the building of a city building.

The committee has been looking about the city ever since the notification of the Board of Health was received, trying to find a suitable location for the jail. It was thought that temporary quarters might be rented until the city hall was built. There are a number of places that suited the committee but the idea of a city jail occupying their property did not suit the owners of the buildings in question. The residents living in the neighborhood of the suggested buildings also seriously objected to living near the lock-up. So the matter has been going on and on until it looks as if it will be necessary for the city to build the jail itself.

A Plainfielder, who stands high in city government, said the other day that it was very probable that a jail, containing court room, police headquarters and cells, would be erected by the city. The money, he said, could be borrowed and the interest would be less than the present rental of the city jail and court.

MET DEATH ON THE RAIL.

PLAINFIELD COLORED MAN KILLED AT SOUTH TRENTON.

Daniel Upsher and Another Young Man Caught in a Death Trap on a Bridge—Both of Them Killed by Being Run Down.

A horrible accident which resulted in the death of Daniel Upsher, a colored man, formerly of this city, occurred on the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks at South Trenton, Friday afternoon, shortly after dinner.

Upsher, in company with a seven-year-boy named Joseph Harmon, had been fishing, and both were killed by an express train due there from Philadelphia at 12:47 o'clock.

Accounts differ as to just how the accident happened. One report is that they were sitting on a bridge fishing. The screech of a whistle was heard and Harmon jumped to his feet, but became confused and stood on the track in front of the approaching train. Upsher saw the boy's danger and jumped to his rescue, and both were struck and hurled to their death.

Another report given by an eye-witness is that they were standing by the tracks waiting for a freight to pass. They went behind it and ran across the tracks as soon as it passed, and were struck by the express, which they had not noticed approaching.

Upsher received his injuries in the back, and was not much disfigured. While the boy Harmon was so badly mangled that he could be identified only by his clothes.

Upsher was twenty-two years old. His mother, Mrs. Randolph, lives on Sycamore street in this city. For several years he has lived in this city. He was an expert musician and was once employed at the Revere House and also at the Casino.

He was a member of the Mt. Olive Baptist church and of the Plainfield colored Y. M. C. A.

The bride was dressed in white silk, trimmed with lace and pearls. Her bridesmaid, Miss Nellie Quinn, of Brooklyn, was attired in pink silk. The best man was James Quinn, of Brooklyn. After the marriage, a reception was held at the home of Mrs. Quinn, of 12th street, Brooklyn. The couple received many handsome and useful presents.

Among those present from this city were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O'Leary, Mr. and Mrs. Michael McCarthy, Mr. and Mrs. William Goeller, Miss Mamie Leahy, and Miss Kittie Leahy.

AMERICAN MISSIONS.

REV. DR. WOODBURY SPOKE AT THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

He is Secretary of the American Missionary Association and Told Something of Its Work—An Illustrated Address.

Two very interesting services, in behalf of the American Missionary Association, were held Sunday in the Congregational church. The Association was represented by its secretary, Rev. Frank F. Woodbury, D. D., who spoke morning and evening, and showed himself a cultured, eloquent and interesting speaker. The morning sermon was a strong presentation of the work of the A. M. A., which lies among the Indian tribes at the west, the colored people and "poor whites" of the south, and the immigrants of different races and religions lately come from other lands to ours. Dr. Woodbury spoke especially of the work for the negroes, and its wonderful success, though the association has been able merely to touch the borders of what might be done. At the conclusion of the sermon, a generous offering was made for the association.

The evening address was illustrated by a set of large maps and pictures, hung at the left of the pulpit. First came a map of the continent, upon which Dr. Woodbury pointed out the various fields of work of the A. M. A. A view of an Alaska mission station followed, while Dr. Woodbury told the story of the first young men who went there as missionaries, and of the martyrdom of one of them. A picture of the Indian school at Santee was a more civilized subject, and the work among the Indians was briefly dwelt upon. A map of the south showed the region inhabited by the "mountain whites," and one of their schools, with a Christian Endeavor Society grouped in front of it, was next shown. This school was in North Carolina, and is carried on by four young women, one of them being Dr. Woodbury's daughter. There being no church, they organized an Endeavor society, and conduct religious services themselves.

The next two charts were designed to show the need of earnest Christian work in the south. The first was a map shaded to show the comparative illiteracy of the different states, from the eastern and northern states, scarcely shaded at all, to the blackness of Louisiana. The second was another map, with a large black dot for every lynching reported in the newspapers since 1883. New Jersey was without a spot, while Louisiana, as before, had the worst record.

A picture of the colored school at All Healing, N. C., was next shown, followed by a map showing the schools taught by pupils of A. M. A. institutions, Eureka Church Arbor, the home of a plantation mission in the pine woods of southern Georgia, and one of the larger institutions supported by the association, for educating the leaders among the colored people, that they may go out and help others.

The sermon was somewhat unique, and was much enjoyed. It was held under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society.

FUNERAL OF MRS. BEACH.

The Services Held at the Residence of Her Daughter on East Second Street.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. Lydia Beach, wife of the late Joseph Beach, were held last Sunday from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wm. A. Woodruff, 215 East Second street, the pastor of the deceased, Rev. Corsen M. Cobb, Ph. D., officiating. The home was filled with sorrowing relatives and friends who had personally known the deceased and loved her for her many excellent qualities. Mr. Shenck read the favorite psalm, the 103d, and also the favorite Bible chapter, the 11th of John. He spoke tender words of comfort to the bereaved family and commended the beautiful Christian life of the deceased to all. He portrayed in a very impressive and beautiful manner the departed as living asleep, not dead.

A quartette consisting of Miss Blair, Miss Newell, Messrs. Clark and Cutler, sang "No Sorrow There," and "The Christian's Good Night," very effectively.

Monday morning the remains were taken to Rahway and services were held from the Presbyterian church at that place. The interment was in the family plot at Rahway.

Religious Progress.

Rev. Dr. Winfield C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, preached on the Queen's Jubilee, last Sunday. He told something of the progress that had been made during her reign and told also of the religious advancement during that time. The sermon was an interesting one and was listened to by a large congregation.

Talked On the Queen's Jubilee.

The Queen's Jubilee was the subject of an interesting sermon by Rev. R. W. R. Richards, Sunday morning, at the Crescent Avenue church. There were several new ideas introduced in the discourse to which the congregation listened with interest.

A PUBLIC SPIRITED MAN.

Dr. J. Ackerman Coles gives yet another evidence of his public spirit by the tender to the Governor of a superb bronze portrait bust of his distinguished father, the late Abraham Coles, poet, author and scientist, the bust to be placed in Newark. The bust is to rest upon a pedestal of selected stone brought from Palestine, full of historic and religious interest, and the foundation stone is composed of a boulder of seven tons from Plymouth, Mass., and part of a monolith of the Pyramid of Cheops in Egypt. The inscriptions and details are all in harmony with the general design of the monument and with the life career of the scholar whom it commemorates. Dr. Coles has given princely gifts of art to public and educational institutions, and none more appropriate and better appreciated than this latest and most valuable donation to the public.—Newark News.

Dr. Coles is a resident of Scotch Plains.

LOOK BEHIND.

Fully half of the accidents to cyclists can be traced back to the carelessness of some other cyclist or driver who has turned in the path of a wheelmen without looking to see who was approaching from behind. A little thought, especially in the business streets of this city, would do away with many accidents and numerous narrow escapes. So many people turn directly across the roadway without thinking of those approaching from the rear.

Then the cyclist who approaches from the rear should remember to give the other one warning with his bell. A remembrance of those two facts will save wheelmen many accidents.

FAVORS OF A CONGRESSMAN.

Representative Howell, of the Third district, has recommended the appointment of the following as postmasters: George Woolf, at Kingston, Somerset county; Wm. Broom, at Blackwell's Mills, Somerset county; Wm. Doyle, at Grand View, Somerset county; Benj. F. Lane, at West End, Monmouth county; Chester A. Burt, at Helmetta, Middlesex county. In the last instance the postmaster is re-appointed, as the office was raised from the fourth to the third class. Mr. Burt was appointed July 6th, 1896. Mr. Howell has also recommended as members of the Board of Pension examiners, which meets for the Third district in Somerville, Louis T. Reed, of Somerville, and Dr. John L. Snidon, of Jamesburg.

EFFICIENT HEALTH BOARD.

The efficiency of a Board of Health can only be fully appreciated by an experience such as Plainfield is now passing through. Citizens can now have the satisfaction of knowing that Plainfield has one of the best and most efficient Health Boards in the State and that the members of it are constantly on the lookout for the welfare of the city. The vigilance of the Board which has kept the recent epidemic within small bounds and now located the cause, speaks well for the Board. Dr. Hunt, of the State Board, who came to assist in the search, is very high in his praise of the local Health Board.

FERTILE SOIL.

An Oklahoma farmer wrote to a friend in the East trying to give him some idea of the soil out there. He said they have to mow the grass off the sod floor to find the baby. One family near him had twin babies with only one cradle, and the kid who had to sleep on the floor grew twice as fast as the other. There is no soil in which a man dare not stand on one foot any length of time lest one leg becomes longer than the other and bother him in walking.—Edmond Republican.

A WONDERFUL IMPROVEMENT.

After attending the Class Day exercises in the North Plainfield Public High School, last Monday, no one could but mark the wonderful improvement that has been made in the entire system during the last year in making it an up-to-date High School. Considering that this is the first year of the High School, the number of graduates, three, need not be considered small.

Practice Economy in buying medicines as in other matters. It is economy to get Hood's Sarsaparilla because it contains more medicinal value than any other—100 doses one dollar.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Cure all liver ills.

FLOWERS AT COMMENCEMENT.

The Elizabeth Journal prints a strong editorial against the public giving of flowers at commencements and advances some powerful arguments in favor of doing away with them. The editorial in part is as follows:

The Newark High School had its commencement exercises last week, and the superintendent requested that flowers and dress suits be omitted. The request was carried out. At the Piuny School graduating exercises last Friday night no flowers were handed to the young orators, as Headmaster Corbin had ruled against them. At the Battin High School commencement exercises flowers and dress suits will be noticeably absent. Superintendent Shearer having decided against them. In all these instances the scholarly men who have authoritatively objected to flowers and other displays have not opposed a common custom because flowers are not beautiful and graduates are not worthy of them, but because the commencement days do not always go to those most deserving of them.

The schools referred to are among the best in this State, and they have forbidden the gifts of flowers simply because the practice is overdone, and because some of the very best scholars are left without a token, while those whose parents and friends are in easier circumstances are loaded with them.

HIGH SCHOOL CHANGES.

Every year brings changes and improvements in the Plainfield public schools. This year, Superintendent Maxson has made a marked improvement by the introduction of a commercial course in the High School, which will allow the Plainfield young men and women to secure a proper business course in their own city as well as prepare them to enter colleges. A letter from Mr. Maxson, explaining the details of the course, is published today. He is to be complimented on the introduction of such a necessity in these times which will allow the Plainfield High School to continue in its leading position among the schools of the State.

WIRES TO GO UNDER GROUND.

It can be stated authoritatively that not many weeks will pass by before the ordinance will appear in the Common Council allowing the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company to put their wires, together with the fire alarm wires, in conduits under our streets. Several months ago the company offered to do so, but the Council took no action. Then the company had plenty of men who were not employed elsewhere. Now the company is laying conduits in several of the Jersey towns and they are not in such a hurry to go to work in Plainfield.

STREET SPRINKLING.

Ever since the passage of the street sprinkling ordinance, of which Councilman Harold Serrell was the father, there has been a marked improvement in the manner in which the streets have been sprinkled. They have not been flooded with the customary regularity of last year, although they are still muddier at times than would seem necessary. Altogether, however, the ordinance has been a success and has succeeded in its object.

A NEW DRESS.

The New Brunswick Fredonian appeared in a brand new dress beginning with last Monday's issue. The paper looks well and shows careful management. As a Plainfield girl looks in a charming summer gown, so looks the Fredonian in its new dress.

Rahway women have followed the example of their sisters in Plainfield and organized a Town Improvement Association. If the Rahway women are as energetic as those of Plainfield, that town will be hardly recognizable in a few months.

The Elizabeth police are becoming quite active. A squad of policemen of that city have been mounted on horses and wheels and hereafter will patrol the important thoroughfares on Sunday to prevent the fast driving and riding.

A Summer Festival.

The ladies of All Saints' church, Scotch Plains, will hold a summer festival on the grounds of Mrs. Arthur Kyte's residence, corner of Martine avenue and Midway, Fanwood, on Thursday afternoon and evening from 4 until 10 o'clock. Refreshments of various kinds, and articles of summer use, such as fans, etc., will be for sale, the proceeds going to the necessary repairs and furnishing of the church interior.

Celebrated His Birthday.

On Saturday last Edwad Mosher, Jr., of Elmwood place, celebrated the anniversary of his eighth birthday, and in honor of the event he entertained a few of his boy friends from the neighborhood. The afternoon was spent in playing games of all sorts, after which a pleasing supper was served.

SCIENCE SUCCEEDS IN PROLONGING LIFE OF A GRAND ARMY MAN.

Capsuloids Demonstrate their Efficacy in Strengthening the Weak and Aged.

Few men have had a more varied or interesting life than Wm. Jenkins, of 3147 Mantua Ave., Philadelphia. A veteran of the rebellion through which he battled with the 50th New York, thirty years in the merchant service in which he visited all climes, he stands at the age of sixty-three "A Soldier and Sailor Too," as Kipling says.

Just now, Mr. Jenkins is attracting more than ordinary attention because of his experience with Capsuloids, the greatest triumph of science.

No man could face the hardships of a soldier's and sailor's life without feeling the effects when rounding the last lap of three score years and ten and this man is no exception. Four years ago nervousness, that torturous malady of the nineteenth century, attacked him and he was compelled to leave the service of the sea for a more quiet life. Insomnia followed, depriving him of sleep, the trouble, debility taking a firm hold and reducing the once sturdy defender of his nation's flag to a mere shell of misery and pain. Ambition was a thing unknown, energy had forsaken him, life was a burden.

"Health to me was naught but a memory," he said to a reporter. My brain was tortured with pain, my limbs were tottering with weakness and my body cold. I had

"I took quinine in almost unheard of quantities but it did no more good than other things. This was my lot for 4 years and you can easily imagine that life had but little charms for me. So long believed that medical science was at an end I discover a marvelous method of curing disease, and when I heard of Capsuloids and learned that they contained Iron or Hemoglobin as it exists in the human blood, it almost seemed as if they had been created for my special benefit. At that time Capsuloids were not easily obtained in this country but I was determined to have them and finally succeeded in securing three boxes. This was about two months ago and you can see for yourself, the state of my health today.

As the reporter looked at Mr. Jenkins it was hard to realize his suffering. Dressed in his Grand Army uniform, standing erect as a general of a victorious army, his iron gray moustache and imperial made him a picture of health and vigor.

"Eat," he continued, "why I can eat like a sailor before the mast, and digest it too. My food does me good. My blood does me good, my sleep does me good. All in all I think I am about as spry as any man you'll find at my age.

"I owe this blessing to Dr. Campbell, the discoverer of Capsuloids, and my one wish is to live to see the day I can thank him for this great gift to humanity."

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids represent the consummation of a belief long entertained by physicians that any method of supplying the natural iron or Hemoglobin in the blood would result in a marvelous decrease in all diseases traceable to poor blood. Dr. Campbell realized that the experiments made with the ordinary iron medicines, all of which are solid preparations of metallic iron with the ordinary sulphate of iron promised naught. If the discovery was to be made new fields must be explored. Research led to the discovery that the blood of healthy bullocks contained iron in exactly the proportion it exists in human blood. To extract it was no easy task but science prevailed and to-day we have in Capsuloids the only infallible means of renewing the vitality of the blood but also really the only scientific method of curing sunken diseases, as it leads through enriching the blood with iron.

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids are sold by all leading druggists at 50 cents per large box, six boxes for $2.50, or sent direct at the same price from the office of the Capsuloid Company, Sewing Building, 108 Fulton Street, New York City.

SUCCESSFUL PASTORATE

REV. CORNELIUS SCHENCK SUNDAY COMPLETED HIS 10TH YEAR.

He Has Been Pastor of Trinity Reformed Church for Ten Years—The Church Has Flourished Under His Care.

The tenth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., of Trinity Reformed church, was quietly noticed Sunday morning. Preceding the sermon, which was a Scriptural and spiritual discourse on the mind of Christ, Phil. 2:5, a statistical statement was read, which is of more than passing interest.

In the ten years the number of families have increased from 190 to 254; of communicant members from 360 to 545; of Sunday-shcool enrollment from 320 to 425. There were added to the church on confession of faith, 256, and by certificate, 250, making a total of 506; 50 of the members had died, while the number of funerals attended by the pastor was 216. The number of baptisms were: Infants, 96; adults, 107.

The contributions for strictly religious and benevolent objects have averaged over $1,000 yearly, and for congregational purposes over $6,000 yearly. The last of the mortgage indebtedness of the church was paid in 1892, and the society is without debt.

Dr. Schenck complimented the various organizations of the church on the work they had accomplished and concluded with the prayer that the mind which was in Christ might be in them all.

Some Local Teddy Roosevelts.

The special committee of the Common Council, consisting of Councilmen Tolles, Baker and Westphal, met last Friday evening to consider the subject of substituting arc lights for incandescent upon the principal streets of the city. The members gave the matter their serious attention and decided to make a personal tour of investigation about the city streets some night in order to learn exactly what the present system of lighting amounts to. After its investigations are completed the committee will make a full report upon the matter.

To Enforce the Rules.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company has decided to strictly enforce all rules of the company, especially those regarding the making of connections or extensions by plumbers to lines already in houses.

DECORATED THE GRAVES.

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS OBSERVED MEMORIAL DAY SUNDAY.

Crescent Division, Assisted by Rathbone Division of Brooklyn, Visited the Local Cemeteries and Decorated The Graves

Sunday was observed by Crescent Division, U. R., K. of P., of this city, as Decoration Day, and they had for their guests about twenty members of Rathbone Division, of Brooklyn. The visitors were met at the North Avenue Station and escorted, in company with the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, to the various cemeteries about Plainfield and vicinity where special services were held over the graves of the deceased Knights. The cemeteries visited were North Plainfield, Plainfield avenue, Hillside and Scotch Plains. The service consisted of an address by Sir Knight Guard Joseph Blimm on the principles of the order; prayer by Chaplain J. S. Highm; and addresses by Captain J. E. Flannery, and First Lieutenant Jacob Blimm, Jr.

At the Plainfield avenue cemetery the members from Brooklyn conducted the service. At the conclusion of the services the Knights retired to Blimm's hotel, Scotch Plains, where supper was served.

WESTFIELD BOYS STARTED WEST.

They Became Tired Out at Elizabethport and Returned Home.

Two Westfield lads, Leland Smith and Victor French, aged 11 and 12 years, respectively, disappeared from their homes on Thursday morning and, when they did not return at evening, their parents became alarmed and started out in search for them. It was learned that they had told other boys about town that they were going to Echo Lake, fishing. It was feared that the boys had been drowned and a searching party went to the lake. No trace of them could be found there, however, and anxiety as to their whereabouts continued until Friday morning, when the boys reappeared at their homes hungry and penitent. They had walked all the way to Elizabethport, with the attention of going west to seek their fortunes. Their companions, when night came on and they set out for home again. They were much exhausted from the long tramp, and promised never to do so more.

FUNERAL OF MRS. NEWCORN.

It Was Held Monday Afternoon at Her Late Home on West Front Street.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. William Newcorn were held at 1:30 p. m. Monday at the house on West Front street, this city.

The attendance was very large and included delegations from Iona Council, Degree of Pocahontas, and from Miantonomoh Tribe, No. 181, I. O. R. M. The members of the Hebrew Synagogue, of this city, were also present.

Rev. Dr. Tinsler, of the Henry street synagogue, New York city, preached the sermon. The floral offerings were many and elaborate.

Interment was in the Jewish cemetery at Bound Brook.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. V., and one of the most widely known men in the state was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered. I my physicians told me that nothing could be done for me and my friends were fully convinced that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June 1894, Mr. Evens, then salesman fo the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, apothecary, corner Park and North avenues.

Hop at the Hunterdon.

An informal hop was held at the Hotel Hunterston last Saturday evening, which was attended by a large number of society people from Plainfield and Netherwood. Music for dancing was furnished by Rogers, and the guests enjoyed themselves thoroughly. The usual hospitality of the management was extended, and an evening of pleasure resulted. During the evening light refreshments were served to the guests.

Preached to the Cadets.

Twenty of the Plainfield high school cadets attended divine service at the Church of the Redeemer Sunday morning and listened to an interesting discourse by the paster, of the church, Rev. Mr. Harris. The cadets all appeared in full uniforms under the command of Captain George F. Edwards.

Burglars Foiled.

An attempt was made Saturday night to break into the home of Mr. Closson, on East Front street. The burglar alarm worked quickly and awoke the coachman, who sleeps in the house, in time to see three men run off of the porch. The men could not be identified.

Common Oatmeal

Sold from barrels or oftentimes in fancy packages (but still common oatmeal) is hard to cook, bitter in taste and overheating to the system. It overtaxes the digestive organs and the body derives no benefit from it—it injures rather than helps.

H-O

gets rid of all that is objectionable in oatmeal and preserves all that is valuable. It makes oatmeal a human food, palatable and cast of digestion, without taking away any of the elements needed for the building up of body, bone and brain. All other oatmeals—"steam-dried," "kiln-dried" and "partly cooked"—leave off just where H-O begins.

SUCCESSFUL CLASS DAY

NORTH PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES HOLD EXERCISES.

A Host of Their Friends Filled All the Available Space in the Schoolhouse—Programme That Was Rendered.

The North Plainfield Public School could not hold all the friends of the class of '97 of that school, last Monday, who came to attend the class day exercises and hear what the class had to say of the past, present and future. The exercises were entirely in the hands of the pupils of the High School.

Dr. Warde, superintendent of the school, and his efficient corps of teachers were present and occupied seats reserved for them. The members of the Board of Education were also present. The three graduates, the Misses Edna Louise French, H. Helen Phillips and Bessie Thompson Day, were seated on the platform, and with them were the two juniors, Miss Bertha Stevens and Wm. E. Pierson, who acted as a committee of introduction. The ushers were Fred Overton, '99; James Pope, 1900; Walter Emmons, 1900, and Benj. Schuck, 1901.

Long before the appointed time, every seat in the assembly hall was filled and it was necessary to keep the doors shut most of the time to prevent overcrowding the stairs and aisles. At last everybody was given a seat or found standing room and the exercises began. Neat little programmes, printed in the class colors, were distributed.

The programme as published in The Press last week was followed out. There were several selections by the High School chorus, under the direction of W. E. MacClymont. A piano duet was given by Miss Conroy, '99, and Bert Simpson, 1901, who acted as accompanist for the chorus singing. Piano solos were rendered by Miss Nellie Valiant, 1901, and Miss May Conroy, '99. "General Grant" was the subject of a declamation by Morgan Townsend, 1901. Miss Rita Pond, '99, gave two recitations, "Charlie Machree," and "The King's Bell." They were given with much feeling and expression. Arthur Smith, '99, showed his talent in giving character sketches by the rendition of two, "Shylock Lends The Ducats," and "Bollo." Charles M. Dollner, '94, gave an oration from Peter Bayne's "Wateloo" in a very creditable manner that promised much for his abilities in that direction for the future.

The pupils were assisted in the programme by Miss May Jeffrey, soprano soloist, and the Plainfield Mandolin, Banjo and Guitar Club. The selections of both were appreciated by the audience and heartily applauded. The mandolin club made a very favorable impression as few knew what a flourishing club it is.

The three graduates took part in the programme. Miss French gave the class history and poem, telling of the struggles of the little class and what it has finally accomplished. Miss Phillips delivered an oration on "The Arbitration Treaty." Miss Day gave a declamation that was suited to the occasion and the class prophecy, which told some of the wonderful things that her schoolmates were to accomplish in the future. The class song was sung by the High School chorus.

After the exercises were over, the friends of the graduates gathered around to congratulate them on the successful carrying out of the first Class Day in the history of the North Plainfield school. Everything was well done and the audience enjoyed it, although the room was crowded.

A Strawberry Tea.

A strawberry tea was given by Miss Fannie M. Hayes, of West Seventh street, Saturday afternoon, in honor of her return from the south. There was dancing on the lawn and refreshments were served.

Walter G. Runyon Takes a Wife.

Walter G. Runyon, a builder, and Mrs. Levina Davis, were married at Asbury Park, Saturday afternoon. Both the bride and the groom were formerly residents of this city, and are well known here.

Charles L. Case and family, of Central avenue, have gone to Newport for the summer.

MORE SEWERS TO COME.

THE COMMON COUNCIL TALKED ON VARIOUS OTHER QUESTIONS.

An Adjourned Meeting Was Held Monday Night—Property Owners to Pay for Last Winter's Snow Shoveling by the City.

In the absence of President Dumont from the City Council meeting last Monday, Councilman Serrell was chosen president pro tem. The only other member absent was Mr. Stebbins. The business under consideration was of no great importance, but still it was necessary that the adjourned meeting be held to transact it. Communications from I. W. Rushmore asking for three crosswalks at the intersection of Grant avenue and West Third street, and one from J. Sattele asking for an electric light on East Sixth street near Watchung avenue, and another from J. Parker Mason asking for a crosswalk on Stelle avenue across Field avenue, were all referred with power.

The bond, acceptance and agreement of the Plainfield Sanitary Company were reported to the Council by Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh as being correct, and after examination by the finance committee were ordered filed. The report of the treasurer, J. B. Dumont, of the Public Library and Reading Room, showed that $5,556.50 had been received during the year and at present there is a balance of $2,597.45 in the treasury.

Mr. Baker made a report on a statement furnished him by the Street Commissioner showing the amount due the city from certain property owners who had failed to shovel snow from their sidewalks last winter. The various amounts will be charged to the tax bills of each one who is indebted to the city. Mr. Baker stated that the present method of paying bills was not a satisfactory one and he offered an ordinance which provides that the bill, voucher and receipt be combined in one. Heretofore the city has experienced difficulty in securing a receipt after the check was received, hence the change which was adopted by the Council. Mr. Baker also offered a resolution that $3,500 be borrowed in anticipation of taxes and that the same be charged to the fire fund.

Mr. Frost offered a resolution that the property owners on Watchung avenue from East Fourth street to La Grande avenue, also on Crescent avenue, be required to set curbing in front of their property to the proper grade. Owing to a slight mistake the Watchung avenue ordinance, which provides for the widening of a portion of the avenue, was placed back on the first reading and adopted on first and second readings, and July 8th was the time set when those interested can meet the Council and offer any objections to the proposed work.

Another ordinance was offered by Mr. Frost which provides that sewers can be laid in all streets where there are none at present, and which may be called for at some future time. Mr. Frost stated that there two or three extensions called for at present, hence the ordinance.

Mr. Westphal raised an objection to the ordinance on the ground that a number of streets are included in the list which have never been accepted by the city, and he thought the city should do no work on the streets until they had been accepted. Mr. Frost replied that the Corporation Counsel had examined the matter and had reported favorably on it. To substantiate this Mr. Gavett was sent for and he verified that statement. Mr. Westphal was not satisfied, however, and refused to support the ordinance as did also Mr. Runyon. Mr. Westphal offered a motion that the matter be laid over until the next meeting, but the motion was lost. It was stated by Mr. Barrows that at present Somerset street to the brook and Stelle avenue were the only two streets which need the sewers, and the other streets could be attended to at the proper time. After much discussion the ordinance was adopted on first and second reading and ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Newman offered a resolution providing for the water contract between the city and the Plainfield Water Supply Company for two new hydrants which were located some time ago. Mr. Barrows asked the council for $150 to complete the purchase of the summer uniforms for the policemen. The first resolution offered some time ago did not call for a sufficient amount of money and thus it is that the above amount was asked for.

Mr. Westphal asked the council for $500, for the purpose of moving a building, located on the city property adjoining the Industrial Home, to the rear of the lot where it could be repaired and fixed in a suitable manner to accommodate women. According to the laws of the State men and women cannot be kept together and thus it is that the alms committee desire to make provision for the women. Mr. Westphal stated that the work would not cost $500 but that amount was asked for so the committee would be on the safe side. This concluded the business of the evening and the council adjourned.

A NOTED SCULPTOR.

Thomas Ball, Who Has Been Abroad for Many Years, has Returned to America.

Thomas Ball, the sculptor, spent the Sabbath with Plainfield friends. For thirty-two years Mr. Ball has resided in Florence, Italy, from whence he has made occasional visits to his native land. He is now seventy eight years of age and has returned to the United States to spend the remainder of his days.

Mr. Ball is perhaps best known through his equestrian statue of Washington at Boston, though fine statues of Webster, Lincoln and others have added to his fame. He has lately completed the great monument to Washington, which is to be erected by E. F. Searles at Methuen, Mass. The colossal bronze figure of Washington, fifteen feet in height, was exhibited at the Columbian Exposition. The last of the other figures has lately been finished in clay and is now being cast in bronze in Munich. The monument is of marble, surmounted by the statue of Washington, the base surrounded by the figures mentioned. Mr. Ball has spent seven years upon this monument, and it may be a year or more before it will be erected.

Masons Attended Service.

The members of Stone Square Lodge, No. 38, F. and A. M., attended divine service at the Mt. Zion A.M.E. church, Sunday evening, and listened to an eloquent sermon delivered by the pastor, Rev. James H. Groves. His text was taken from Psalms 133, "How Good and How Blessed it is for Brethren to Dwell Together in Unity." Following the discourse the collection was raised by Rev. L. Sturgis, presiding elder of this district. The amount of money received from all of the services of the day was $90.

Slipped in the Mud.

While riding along North avenue Tuesday, the little daughter of E. D. Gilmore, of West Second street, slipped in the mud and fell from her wheel. Her foot became entangled in the spokes of the wheel in her fall and she badly wrenched her ankle. She was carried into the Press office and driven home by a kindly milkman. The injury was a painful one and she was unable to bear the weight of her body on the foot.

"There's no use in talking," says W. H. Broadwell, druggist, La Cygne, Kan., "Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy does the work. After taking medicines of my own preparation and those of others, I took a dose of Chamberlain's and it helped me; a second dose cured me, candidly and conscientiously I can recommend it as the best thing on the market." "TOMBSTONE BROWN'S ORGAN."

Lacking an Imposing Stone, a Neighboring Graveyard Supplied the Want.

One of the most fin de siecle products of far western "wild and woolly" is "Tombstone Brown." Brown had been alternately bobo or tramp printer, according as climate and opportunity dictated, but he finally drifted to California and anchored in Mendocino and Lake counties, where he began to take notice in matters social and political. Brown managed to scrape together a little money, and one day he came over the "grade" from San Francisco with a brand new second-hand organ, on which were loaded a Fairchild press, a few fonts of type, ink, rollers and bundles of paper. Brown gave it out cold that he was going to start a paper, but said that the whole of society was so blank rotten that he wouldn't mingle with it. He drove on, during the wet land off down into the bottom of a picturesque canyon, where he staked out his horses and began writing the first issue of his paper. He was the whole staff in himself.

When it came to setting the matter up in type, Brown discovered that he hadn't bought any imposing-stone, and with something of old Ben Franklin's "savoir faire," the editor made a quiet sneak into a graveyard, and selecting a not overconspicuous gravestone, he carried it off to the perambulating printing office. The stone episode got out on him, and thence his name of "Tombstone Brown," but Brown was not in the least worried, and, turning the title to account, named his journal "Tombstone Brown's Organ," and he soon made the county bowl. "Brown's Organ" had a front seat in every issue that showed above the grass, and when one canyon got too warm Brown would hike and print the next issue a "little farther on." The title of the paper, drawn and engraved by Brown himself, showed a gigantic tombstone crushing to earth the emblems of opposition. The paper soon had a great run, and "Tombstone" could not stand success, and when last seen was moving north with a row of citizens marching up the grade behind him.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

PARISIAN OMNIBUSES.

There is No Crowding and Strap-hanging Upon These Vehicles.

On all the streets of Paris one of the features most noticeable to a foreigner, perhaps, is the little omnibus station so characteristic of Paris. The Parisian omnibus system, by the way, is an excellent one when you understand it. But you usually have to be put off a 'bus two or three times before you appreciate its merits. In time you discover that the vehicle stops regularly at little stations, where those who understand the system obtain bits of pasteboard bearing numbers in the precise order of their application for them, entitling them in the same order to the vacant seats in the 'buses as these arrive. The little stations being not far apart, it is a matter of no difficulty to obtain these numbers, and when that is done the system secures, as you see, a perfect application of the rule, "First come, first served." When the 'bus stops, just opposite the little station, another official comes out, and, standing behind it, calls off the numbers in their order, and the would-be passengers, as their numbers are called, take the vacant places. When all the vacancies are filled the 'bus drives on, and those whose numbers come next in order have, of course, the first chance at the vacancies on the filling 'bus.

And now let me mention another feature of the omnibus system which I think is worthy of our notice. Each omnibus and each street car in Paris—for the street car system is practically the same—is built to seat a certain number of persons. That number is indicated on the exterior of the vehicle, and when it is complete no more are permitted to enter under any circumstances.—Chautauquan.

An Opening for a Ginger-Peeler.

A new machine is wanted in the West Indies in the ginger industry. The export of ginger from Jamaica amounted last year to over $250,000, and the trade is capable of considerable expansion. The cleaning and preparing of the ginger for the market, as now performed by hand, is a slow, primitive, tedious and wasteful process. After the roots are dug, they are washed, and the outer skin is removed by means of a small, sharp knife, resembling the blade of a pen knife, and are then of very irregularly shaped, this process leaves the loss of a large percentage of the root, which is broken off or cut away in removing the skin. The peeling of the ginger is an important matter in determining the market value of the product. An expert can peel by hand about one hundredweight of uncured ginger in the course of a working day, for which he is paid 60 cents.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

A Pleasant Custom.

For perhaps a couple of hundred miles along the Michigan Central Railroad there prevails in summer the pretty custom of presenting a flower to each woman traveling on either of the two express trains that pass over the road every day. The company has expended much time and money in beautifying the line of the road and the grounds of the stations with shrubs and flowering plants, and these have grown and blossomed so plentifully that enough of the flowers are cut each day to supply the means for keeping up the graceful favor.

A SOCIETY GIRL WHO POSES.

How Miss Bradley of Washington Became a Professional Model.

Miss Kate Mickles Bradley, daughter of the late Col. George W. Bradley, U. S. A., has become a professional model, and her adoption of this rather unusual vocation has come about in a most natural way, and makes a pretty story.

A few months ago Miss Bradley and her mother returned to their home after eight years' absence in the West. At the time of her departure Miss Bradley was an almost helpless invalid, but during her sojourn West she seemed to have been touched by a fairy's wand and transformed into a perfection of physical vigor and grace.

Miss Bradley moves in Washington's most exclusive army and social circles, and her unique and beautiful "song pantomimes," in which she illustrated melodies by means of gestures, have been the feature of many entertainments given by the smart set during the season just closed.

While giving these prose poems she wore an aesthetic gown with Greek effects, the bodice low and the arms bare, and her only hair caught in a classic knot at the back of her shapely head.

Mr. Lucien Powell, the artist, was present on one of these occasions, when he was so impressed with the beauty of her work that he gave her a letter of introduction to Mr. Jerome Uhl, and another to Mr. Richard Brooke. "Mr. Brooke, in turn, sent her with a letter to the Art League, where she was immediately accepted, and began her experience as a model by posing for the head and shoulders before the pupils of the League. She then posed for Mr. Uhl's painting, "A Morning Call," which was intended for the Cosmos exhibition, but was reported by the jury on selection as being too large.

The Bradley home is exquisitely artistic in the appointments, and numbers among its attractions a small but complete conservatory, Mrs. Bradley being as devoted to her flowers as her gifted young daughter is to her art.—Washington Times.

SHE GETS PHOTOGRAPHS.

A New Vocation which a Woman Pursues on the Fringe of Society.

The craze for illustration in the weeklies and monthlies and recreation and fashion journals of the day has created a new occupation, that of the photograph getter. The photograph getter accumulates a collection of rare likenesses and rents them out at so much a head, to be used for illustrating articles. People who are known to be approachable are not worth so much as those who are known to be suspected of objecting to notoriety. The pictures of conspicuous society women who are frequently heard to declare that they would not give their photographs to anybody for publication are rated at $5, or perhaps as high as $7. Those of women whose features have appeared once or twice in proximity to type bring only $2.50, but all have a value. Only pictures of professionals are valueless to the photograph getter. They are a drug on the market. No matter how fair or form and feature or how unique or artistic. The fact that the subjects go to the photographer on business and not for diversion spoils the pictures for the photograph getter.

The photograph getter, whether gently born or not, old or young, fair or homely, must be a diplomatist or no mean pretensions in order to succeed at her task. It is also essential that she should be if not actually in the swim at least so close on the verge thereof that the little eddying currents reach her and she obtains more than a superficial idea of what is going on in mid-stream.—New York Sun.

BASE INGRATITUDE.

The Redbirds Assailed the Saver of Their Nest.

I got into a row with a pair of cardinals one morning, says Maurice Thompson, in the Atlantic Monthly, the whole proceeding on their part showing shameless ingratitude. Hearing some bluejays making a great to-do in a thicket not far from the tent, I took up my bow and went to see what was the matter for such a hubbub. A mob of jays had surrounded a little hawk, which I soon discovered in the middle of a plum tree, where he sat quite still, evidently afraid. He saw me, however, and made a dash to break the line of his enemies; but he could not go far, they worried him so. I ran forward under cover of some low foliage, presently got a good shot, from which I could shoot at short range, and brought him down. Now the jays turned tail and flew away. But it had chanced that I shot from very close beside a cardinal's nest; indeed, my right arm swept the nest as I drew the bow. Then came trouble. Both redbirds assaulted me, pouncing at me with vicious beak-snappings, almost striking me in the face. They seemed not to account it anything that I had shot the hawk, who would have made a meal upon one of them or their tender nestlings. Such is avian gratitude.

Fairy Tales.

A chamber where camphor is manufactured is a veritable fairy palace of pure white crystals. Fine similes of palms, ferns and masses of tropical vegetation droop in graceful festoons from the roof and cover the walls.

Some one who has tried it says that if two or three dandelion leaves be chewed before going to bed they will induce sleep, no matter how nervous or worried one may be.

FAITHFUL UNCLE BOB.

Gov. Atkinson's Family Friend and the Story of the Friendship.

No official in the United States has a more faithful servitor than has W. Y. Atkinson, Governor of Georgia, in old Uncle Bob. The old negro is now over sixty years old, past the time when he can earn his living by hard work. So, when first elected Governor, three years ago, Atkinson wrote a letter to Uncle Bob, then living in Griffin, and offered him a place as janitor at the Capitol at a salary of $20 a month, and the old darky gladly accepted the place. He stood sadly in need of assistance, for he had never turned out of his own domicile by a girl whom he had dopted when she was a little thing, and had reared and educated out of his own earnings.

When Gov. Atkinson was suffering with the attack of appendicitis that came near proving mortal last year Uncle Bob sat on the doorsteps in front of the sanitarium where the Governor was being treated night after night, and never left his post unless he was required to go on an errand for his sick master. And when the crisis was performed he sat up the whole night, and his was among the first voices to cheer the Governor in his convalescence. One day the Governor was indisposed and Uncle Bob heard of it and went to the mansion to spend the night with his master and to cheer the lonely hours. The Governor was restless. Uncle Bob began to recount the occurrences of his past life so as to help while away the hours, and for the first time related his war experience. He was sent to the front as Gen. Atkinson's eldest brother, John B. Atkinson, who was a member of the Seventh Georgia Regiment, and he recounted the story of his master's death and his own fidelity, apparently unconscious of his own heroism in the affair.

"Hit was jes' 'bout mawnin' de de fus' Mamassas," said he in his old plantation lingo, "an' we had stopped to get breakfus. I was busy wid de camp fire tryin' to hurry up de breakfus, 'cause dem was sich equality times dat I'se 'spected to cheer de lonely hours after jump and run, w'en de Gin'l ordered de Sebent Geawgy to forrerd. WHEN I HAVE TIME.

When I have time so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are crowded now with care.
I'll help to lift them from their low despair,
When I have time.

When I have time, the friend I love so well
Shall know no more these weary, toilsome days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise,
When I have time.

When you have time! The friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of all your sweet intent;
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her life with sweet content,
When You had time.

Now is the time! Ah, friend, no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and comfort cheer
To those around whose lives are now so dear;
They may not meet you in the coming year—
Now is the time.

LOVE IN A MINOR KEY

The inhabitants of Harplestowe had ceased to discuss Hannah Fletcher's questionable position toward her lodger, and any interest attached to her unemotional attitude had quickly fizzled out along with her meagre claims to beauty. When the world had gone well with Hannah, and she had possessed the irritable devotion of an invalid mother and the undivided love of a selfish father, she had worn modestly the good looks which belong to a middle-class young woman who enjoys excellent health and a wholesome temperament. Now the light in her abundant hair and her bright color had died for want of vital sustenance, and her features, once full and pictures had blenkened with the unresting struggle for existence. A stranger would not trouble to question if her unsympathetic manner was the result or the cause of an unsatisfied existence.

Hannah Fletcher had spent the best years of her youth subduing the passions and emotions which make a beautiful woman irresistible, but she had not studied her own ugliness and mastered it, as some women do. A plain woman's life in life is defying her own ugliness.

Hannah's lodger was, it is true, an "elderly party," so the maid-of-all-work described him, "always messing about with them chemistry fizzicks; 'e's wonderful clever, but it don't bring in no money, do it? It wasn't that Miss Hannah was a bit sweet on him sh'd 'ave cleared 'im out along with his rubbishing smell long ago." Hannah was a "bit sweet" on the "elderly party." When her mother and father had died, her lodger had not given a thought to the fact that, for the girl's reputation in the village, it would be advisable for him to leave his comfortable quarters. Hannah had grown necessary to him in his work, and he had learned to depend on her as a man of powerful intellect grown to depend on a practical woman with an intelligent brain, who is his daily and hourly companion. Habit is stronger in men than in women. Five or six years had passed since her parents' death, bringing little or no change into Hannah's life. She slaved and toiled and pinched for the "elderly party," who was too self-centred to guess at the true extent of her poverty. He was casual about his payments, and she would never remind him. To brighten up her room and bring a little pleasure into her day, he would now and then go out and bring her home an extravagantly beautiful bunch of flowers, or a pair of palms, and present them to her with a touching enthusiasm for his own generosity and thoughtfulness. Her practical mind would fly with a woman's quickness of thought to the four months' rent which was in arrears; but only a feeling of tenderness for his eccentricities would come over her, and she begged to her heart the thought that she could help him in his work by waiting for the over-due rent.

He was a man of his income would have barely covered the modest necessities of his simple life if he had devoted it to them, but "he spends all his money on them messes and inventing things as aren't no use to no one;" as Arabella would say, and look over-looked her tip one Christmas day; "I ain't got no use for the like of his sort." Clothes he never bought, and Hannah, with a beautiful regard for the fading of the man she loved, stitched and mended and darned and bit by bit replaced his worn and shabby wardrobe. She was careful never to put into his room any new garment he had made until the ruthless laundress had robbed it of its newness. Then she would substitute it for one which was beyond even her clever needlecraft to mend, and the "elderly party" would put on a new shirt or wear the new socks without the slightest suspicion that the familiar patches and darns were missing. He acted as intellectual food and nourishment for her starved brain, and she became the practical part of his unevenly balanced character, which nature had left wanting.

One day the peace of Hannah's life was broken by the coming of a cousin, an orphan like herself, who had written and asked Hannah to give her a home while she looked for work. Hannah wrote and welcomed her with bitter misgivings at heart. She had to toil night and day to make money to pay for food enough for herself and her lodger.

Madaline came, and like a hot wind passing over a sensitive plant she withered up Hannah's courage. She was young, and the beauty of her animal health was startling. She stood in Hannah's humble parlor in the noon day sunlight, straight as a young palm tree, and beautiful in symmetry, a pulsing, tingling piece of flesh and blood, colored like a pale pink peony.

Weeks passed into months, and Madaline had planted herself firmly in the house. Hannah could not turn her out, and she never suggested going, and never made any serious attempt to get work. Her orphan and penniless condition served her as a useful means of appealing to the sympathy of the "elderly party." As time went on, Hannah saw less and less of her lodger, her cousin appropriated as her charge his study and laboratory, and it was bitterness and gall to Hannah to see her administer to him all the little attentions which she had been wont to perform.

Hannah, with her heart smarting at the bitter injustice of things, could not tell her that she was day by day robbing her of all that made life bearable.

And as, when a woman is particularly busy, a man generally thinks she is "fussing," and choosing to do something totally unnecessary, the "elderly party" came to look upon it as quite natural that Madaline should be his hourly companion, and that she should sit in an easy chair while Hannah, hot and weary in mind and body, should toil and strive for them both.

After Madaline had been with them three months Hannah's lodger came into a fortune. It was not a large one, but it would enable him to live in ease and comfort for the rest of his life. When Hannah heard the good news, what she dreaded most did not happen. He did not suggest moving into more luxurious lodgings; he seemed to consider himself a fixture in the wainscoted room with its cottage window and old oak floor; but he bought more pretty plants and fresh hothouse flowers, which Madaline now accepted with a blush and a prettiness that sent his blood coursing through his veins.

One morning, when Hannah was ironing, with the table piled high in well bleached linen, the "elderly party" came into the kitchen with Madaline. He walked straight up to where Hannah stood, with her hot face bent over the steaming shirt, and drew Madaline forward.

"Hannah, your cousin has promised to marry me. She is young and beautiful, and I am only a plain scholar, but I will do my best to make her a good husband."

As if it had been thrust through her body with the point of a bayonet, each word went to Hannah's heart. It ceased beating. Madaline, of course, knew why her cousin had suddenly fainted, and the poor little bit of triumph made her heart beat quicker, but when she looked up at her lover his face was pale with fear. She saw a look of agony in his eyes as he turned them to her for help, which told her that she did not possess the heart of the scholar so completely as she thought, and the devil in her was roused.

"Oh, you need not be so alarmed; she has fainted through sheer jealousy."

For one moment he stood transfixed; all that he had been blind to for years was made plain to him now, and in that moment he recognized the heartlessness of the woman he had proposed to only ten minutes ago.

"Are you a woman to tell a woman's secret and make light of it?"

Madaline was frightened at the look of scorn and contempt in his eyes, which had never looked at her so gently. She stood at bay, and watched his trembling hands sprinkling Hannah's face with the cold water she had used for sprinkling the linen. It was kept in a small white bowl on the ironing table.

"I've not said anything that the whole village does not know, Arabella included, that Hannah Fletcher has been waiting to marry her lodger for the last ten years."

"Then, by God, I'll marry her now, I tell you." He chafed the pale cheeks, and rubbed the thin hands. "I've always loved her. Oh, my God, Oh, my God, what a selfish fool I have been!"

"You loved me but ten minutes ago. For a married scholar you are wonderfully quick in love."

"Ten minutes ago I did not know that it was Hannah I loved as a man ought to love the woman he marries. Your beauty deceived me into believing that I loved you. I did not given thought to love until you came. I ask your forgiveness."

Tears, which were always ready, came into her blue eyes at the harsh words he had spoken, but she knew that they were true. She had no love for the grave and elderly scholar; he was to be her refuge from work, and she loved ease. She stood for a moment or two and watched returning consciousness quiver over Hannah's pale face, and then she turned to go.

"Father Hugh, Hannah is growing old, and she has been good to me. I will not rob her of her elderly lover."

A lover was waiting for Madaline half a mile out of the village. He was a provision dealer, and Madaline would have no difficulty in being the wife of a scholar.—The Queen.

The First English Duke.

Of the five titles of nobility in England, the highest in rank and honor is that of Duke. It is the first title of dignity of the royal family, but not the highest in antiquity. There is no proof of its being used in England before the year created by Edward III., about a year before he himself assumed the title of King of France. Edward, the renowned Black Prince, was created Duke of Cornwall, and he was the first Duke in England after the Norman conquest. After this creation the title of Duke was frequently given, especially to members of the royal family.—Harper's Round Table.

Cobwigger—Poor Waggs! He was a most genial soul.

Merritt—Yes, indeed he was. The only thing he ever took seriously was the cold that killed him.—New York Sun.

TO PLAY NEWCOMB.

A New Ball Game Invented by a Woman for Women.

For the game called "Newcomb," which originated with Miss Clara Baer of Newcomb College, New Orleans, La., a limited space, either in or out of doors, and a football are all the essentials. It teaches lightness, alertness, the ability to remain on one's feet, good judgment in a sure aim, gives strength to throw, and power to hold.

The method of procedure is as follows: Divide the space at command, the lawn, say, into two equal parts, by means of lines of white paint, as for a tennis court. This is the division line. About seven feet each side of the line draw shorter lines for the bases. The spaces between the bases, separated by the division line, is called the "inside" of the base, beyond where the players stand "outside." The boundary line must also be marked out. The players are designated by colors; one team, for instance, play pink, the others blue. The blues guard the ground of the pinks, and the reverse. The players are arranged at irregular intervals beyond the base, which they are not permitted to cross except where the ball is thrown up by the referee. This is done at the beginning of the game to decide which side shall have possession of the ball, and after each foul. In order to prevent too great a rush for the ball, each side has a captain, and the captains alone are permitted to cross the bases.

The object of the game is to make the ball touch the opposite ground beyond the base, when it is called a "touchdown," and counts for the side sending the ball. At first, touchdowns are easily made, but when the players become expert in handling the ball, it is often permitted to touch the floor, and the interest in the game increases proportionately. A touchdown counts one for the side sending the ball. A majority of points, within a given time, decided upon beforehand by the players, decides the game.

The following are the rules:

The players must stand outside of the bases.

The players must not stop inside of the bases, except when the ball is thrown up at the beginning of the game and after each foul.

The ball must be thrown by the hands; it may be thrown by one or both hands; it cannot be kicked.

No player may catch or throw the ball while on her knees, she must be on her feet.

No player must fall on the ball.

The referee must throw the ball directly upward from the division line at the beginning of each game and after each foul. The referee decides the time of play, keeps account of touchdowns and fouls.

Throwing the ball between the division line and either base is a foul; also kicking a ball or falling on a ball.

As the object of the game is to guard the ground on which you stand, cover it as effectually as possible by an even distribution of players. For a long distance, throw high, or the ball may be intercepted. A low ball, when well sent, is very effectual, for, unless a player has her movements well under control, in stooping she is apt to fall on the ball, which is a foul against her side.

ZIMMERHACKLE'S OBSERVATIONS.

Kill their "moth"ers and the moths will take care of themselves.

Danger lies everywhere, but it is not alone. Some other people do.

Laughter never kills. Don't be afraid of it.

The only way you can get even on some shows is to buy your ticket with a bogus garter.

The Lord helps those who help themselves, unless they help themselves to what belongs to other people.

The man who does five hour's work in three and then spends the other two hours in blowing about it, hasn't gained any time.

It is now announced that the bride, not the groom, should pay the minister. Where will this women's rights movement end?—Dansville N. Y., Breeze.

The young man who prides himself in being a "brick" should remember that the ordinary brick can't stand very much soaking, without disintegrating.

Nature doesn't clean up the last year's rubbish she simply puts down a new green carpet and covers it all up. Nature would make a good wife for men who hate housecleaning.

When you ask an editor to suppress an item of news because it does not please you then go and ask your grocer to exclude pickles from his store because you can't eat them, or your butcher not to keep bologna because it goes against your stomach. There is just as much fairness in one as in the other. News is an editor's stock in trade. So are pickles a grocer's and bologna and sockwrist a butcher's.—Dansville N. Y., Breeze.

COULD TALK ABOUT FLIES.

Dull Pupil Who Proved He was not a Fool When it Came to His Specialty.

One of the speakers at a banquet given here recently, says the Washington Post, dwelt at some length upon a man's natural aptitude to fit vocation in life he pursued. He told an interesting story illustrating the meaning. Some of his schoolboy recollections, as follows:

"At my first school there was a boy to whom the teacher could not succeed in imparting the simplest rules of elementary knowledge. Try as she might, their efforts were failures. Her patience, after exhausting trials, turned to despair. One day, when he seemed duller than usual, she sent him from the recitation bench to his seat with a severe reprimand, promising to recommend his dismissal to the trustees.

"Shortly afterward she observed him bending over some pursuit at his desk. His eyes were lighted with an expression that seemed inspiration. Anxious to know the cause of this almost miraculous transformation from sloth that would be followed by his wasted life, she passed down the aisle by his desk on some pretext that would not disturb him, and found the cause of his glowing study to be the examination of a fly, which he had caught and was examining, having dissected it into parts. The truth dawned upon the teacher. The boy's mind ran to entomology. He was a born naturalist.

"The teacher said nothing, but that afternoon called up the entire class for examining, having dissected its appearance was as dull as ever. 'Boys,' said the teacher addressing the entire school, 'I want to see how far your general powers of observation on trivial subjects go. For instance, you have all seen thousands of flies. Now, I want each of you to tell me his impressions of a fly.' Beyond the fact that a fly was a fly and had two wings not one of the school could say anything further. At the first mention of the subject the dull boy was all agape. He held up his hand and snapped his fingers. He realized his superiority. It was his day. He told of the fly from a general and analytical standpoint, its interior and exterior construction, its habits, its food, its generation and its propensities. The rest of the school sat astonished. The boy went on and launched into a general description of bugs and insects he had caught in the woods.

"From that day the teacher encouraged the boy's aptitude, and troubled him no more with the rules of grammar and arithmetic. She went into the woods with him and helped in his studies of nature. She brought the attention of the school trustees to his case, and to make a long story short, he was sent to Europe for study. In Leipsic he was made moderator of the Natural Conservatory of Science. He held for a time an important position in the Smithsonian, at Washington, D. C., and he is now in Paris, one of the leading entomologists of the world.

GOOD AMERICAN MANNERS.

The Politeness, However, Evidently not Appreciated.

It was in the elevator of the Hotel Continental in Paris—one of those slow-going machines in which this noted hotel delights. Four or five persons were in the car besides the operator, who had waxed fat in his labortous occupation of pulling on the rope. One of the company was fresh from the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, where, indeed, his whole time was employed when not engaged in the necessary relaxation at Versailles, in the Bois, at the cafe, or in the other places of the world's capital. His companion was not of this description. Among the others were a lady and a gentleman, to the former of whom the two Americans had removed their hats. But the gentleman with her saw no motion to remove his, but regarded the company with a studied indifference.

"Oh," said one of the Americans, "it does not appear to be necessary to remove one's hat here," and thereupon clapped his on harder. The lady and gentleman getting out at the next floor, the elevator guard politely informed the remainder of the company that they were the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, the latter being own sister to the then Imperial Autocrat of All the Russias, as I believe it was stated.—Architecture and Building.

A Matter of Expense.

Jack—Was yours a long courtship, old fellow?

Will— Gracious, no! My wife had nine little brothers and sisters.

"Really. But what difference did that make?"

"What difference? Well, if you had to bribe a crowd like that to keep out of the parlor every time you went to see your girl, you'd soon want to cut expenses."—Boston Traveller.

Outside the Tent.

"Well, Mariar," said the old man, as he got down from the wagon seat where he had been patiently waiting, "did you see all the animals?"

"All but two," she said with a sigh, "I turned the longest time, but I couldn't seem to find the carnivora and the egress. I expect they was the best part of the show, too."—Washington Times.

RED LAKE.

It Becomes that Color About Two of Three Times Every Ten Years.

Lake Morat, in Switzerland, has a queer habit of turning red about two or three times every ten years. It is a pretty lake, like most of the sheets of water in that picturesque country, and its peculiar freak is attributed to a disposition to celebrate the slaughter of Burgundians under Charles the Bold, on June 21, 1476. But the French say that it blushes for the conduct of the Swiss, who in that battle gave the Burgundians no quarter. The old fishermen of the lake, who catch enormous fish called silures, that weigh between twenty-five and forty kilograms says when they see the waters of the lake reddening, that it is the blood of the Burgundians. As a matter of fact, some of the bodies of the Burgundians killed in the battle were thrown into the lake, while others were tossed into a grave filled with quicklime. This historical recollection angered the Burgundian soldiers of the victorious armies of the republic of 1798, and they destroyed the stone monument raised in honor of their compatriots who fell heroically in that battle, and Henri Martin very justly reproached them for that piece of vandalism. It would hardly do to attribute the reddening of the waters of the lake to the blood of the soldiers of Charles the Bold. The color is due simply to the presence in large quantities of little aquatic plants called by naturalists Oscillatoria rubescens. The curious thing about it is that Lake Morat is the only lake in which this curious growth is developed, and the peculiarity is beginning to interest scientific men.

NEW DEFINITION OF VERACITY.

A Jersey City Witness Says It's a Bad Thing to Carry Around.

Richard Welling was a witness at the trial of Rachel Schreiber in the General Sessions Court in Jersey City the other day for larceny and receiving stolen goods. Maggie Werner, the 14-year-old neice of the defendant's husband, was the principal witness against her, and the defence tried to prove by the testimony of Mr. Welling and others that Maggie's statements could not be relied upon. Mr. Welling took the witness stand with a confident air and testified that Maggie's reputation for truth and veracity was bad.

"What is the meaning of veracity?" asked Assistant Prosecutor Noonan sharply. The question came so suddenly as to confuse the witness, and he hesitated about answering.

"It's a pretty bad thing to carry around with you, isn't it?" continued Mr. Noonan.

"Yes, sir," answered the witness, looking very much relieved.

"You wouldn't like to be accused of veracity, would you?"

"No, sir; I would not."

"I move that testimony of this witness be stricken out," said Mr. Noonan, addressing the Court.

"Strike it out," ordered Judge Hudspeth, and Mr. Welling looked as if he did not know where he was at. Mrs. Schreiber was acquitted.—New York Sun.

HER DESIRE MODEST.

And She Received All that Her Advertisement Called For.

Here is a good story of a woman once in the following advertisement to a London paper: "A lady, in delicate health, wishes to meet with a useful companion. She must be domesticated, musical, early riser, amiable, of good appearance, and have some experience of cooking. Non-smoker preferred. Comfortable home. No salary." A few days after the advertiser received a hamper labelled: "This side up, with care—perishable." On opening it she found a fine tabby cat, with a letter tied to her tail. It ran thus: "Madam: In answer to your advertisement, I am happy to furnish you with a very useful companion, which you will find exactly suited to your requirements. She is domesticated, a good mouser, an early riser, possesses a amiable disposition and is considered handsome. She has had a great experience as a nurse, having brought up a large family. I need scarcely add that she is a total abstainer. As only wish to oblige, hope she will serve you faithfully in return for a comfortable home."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Strategem of War.

A certain American in the war of 1812 played a Yankee trick upon the Admiral of the attacking British squadron. The Britons were entirely too strong for the Americans, so stategy became necessary. Accordingly, one clever young man spread the report that he was in search of a fearful machine of war which he would send among the British boats and explode at the proper moment. Then he filled a barrel with sand and a little gunpowder, and towed it out with a small ships. That was the powder off, there was an explosion, and to the amazement of all, the British ships put to sea, fully convinced that a new infernal machine had been invented.

How a Great General Slept.

A good story is told of the Duke of Wellington. The French, with a fresh force double that of the duke, were closing in upon his jaded troops one stormy night in June. Wellington was making preparations, and then, turning to a scout, asked: "How long will it be before they can reach us?"

"Half an hour," was the reply.

"Then I can go to sleep," he said; and wrapping his cloak about him, he dropped where he stood in the muddy trench, and in an instant was asleep. He awoke when the bugles of the enemy sounded in his ears.—Weekly Telegraph.

ZUNI BREADMAKERS.

FOOD MADE FOR WARRIORS AND HUNTERS GOING ON LONG TRIPS.

Called Paper Bread—Is Baked in One Long Strip and Folded Like the Leaves of a Magazine—The Women take Great Pride in Making One Unbroken Sheet.

"During a residence at Zuni, the largest of the Indian pueblos, in Northwestern New Mexico, I have often watched the women and children of the tribe at their interesting work of making haiwe, or 'paper-bread,'" says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion. "They use a basis of either corn or wheat, which is often boiled in advance to make it more tender, and is then ground on much the same primitive style of stone hand-mill as that used in old Mexico. * * * After the maize of wheat has been once ground through the hand-mill, it is passed through a second operation at least once more, to make it still finer, and then it is mixed into a very thin batter in an olla, or decorated water jar, fashioned from clay, fired and painted by the women pottery makers of the tribe, who display much delicacy in the potter's art, and that of decoration in striking and yet tasteful designs.

"If our flour prepared for the baking be of wheat the bread will be of a bluish tint, and if of corn, or both, while the preparation has been made above the wood-fed flame burning in the fireplace of the stone or concrete house, there has been slowly heating a slab of stone, the upper surface of which is smooth and oily by long use in making haiwe. Kneeling before the hot stone, when all is ready, the Indian woman dips her hand into the jar of batter at her side and then swiftly sweeps that dripping hand and the face of the tablet, leaving a broad veneer of liquid dough, which thoroughly bakes in a few seconds. Catching the thin edge of the sheet of bread by the fingers of the other hand, she peels it almost off the smooth top of the generous jack, leaving one edge still attached. Giving another sweep of her now freshly scattered palm, she joins the two separate sheets into one by slightly overlapping and adhering film with the fresh application of batter. This operation of smearing and pealing continues in swift succession, and by the method described there is no break in the long strip of bread, which falls in ever-lengthening folds by the side of the saunders as she works. A Zuni woman takes great pride in her ability to show the entire baking in one unbroken sheet, no matter how long she may continue. When finished, the long bolt of bread is laid much after the fashion of the leaves of an uncut magazine, and is then tightly rolled, that it may not dry. In this manner it is kept in a state of preservation for future use, for it is seldom baked for immediate consumption.

"This 'paper-bread' is not used for ordinary household purposes, but is baked when a party of warriors or hunters are making ready for a long trip into the wilds, or when someone is departing on an extended journey."

Pine Nuts.

A small buff-colored nut called the pignon is the fruit of a species of pine tree, a native of Upper California, and its beautiful food qualities are greatly appreciated by California and Oregon Indians.

It is a little nut about an inch in length, and is rather three-sided, a trifle longer than round. The hard thick shell would surely tax one's patience, and it would be a matter of difficulty to get the sweet edible kernal free from outside entanglement; but, as the shell natures, a slight crack appears upon one side, allowing entrance for the blade of a pen-knife or nut-pick, and, opened, the walls of the little brown house fall apart—a small white kernal is discovered, enveloped in a thin film of gauzy brown. A most surprising number of nuts are found in one cone; this, however, does not appear so marvelous when one takes into account the actual size of the cone, measuring, as it often the case, a foot in length and seven hundred inches in diameter, having fully two hundred scales, in each of which is two seeds, so that it is perfectly fertile once a harvest of four hundred pretty brown nuts may be counted on. The yield from a single tree is often enormous.—Harper's Bazar.

The Canning Reynard.

Southey's story is of a tame fox at Bridgewater, which had been brought up from a cub to run in the wheel as turnspit. One day, however, his vagabond instincts proved too much for him, and he determined to take a holiday. The fleshpots of his Egypt were a dust and ashes to his palate compared with the chickens of his own acquaintance. He took leave of the hunting season for his excursion, and soon came in contact with his hereditary persecutors. He evidently determined to give them a good run, for he took them twice through a stream, for a great circumbendibus, which involved a chase of nearly thirty miles; he made his way back with hounds in full cry, and re-entering the kitchen, resumed operations in the wheel with as much unconcern as though he had never left it. The fat cook, with whom he was a great favorite, succeeded in beating the hounds off till the arrival of the huntsman, who humanely assisted in saving a life, which, if sagacity and ingenuity be virtues, well deserved to be spared.—English Illustrated Magazine.

CRESCENTS OUTPLAYED

THE WESTFIELD ATHLETIC CLUB WON AT BASEBALL SATURDAY.

Costly Errors by Plainfield Fielders and Bunched Hits by the Westfield Team Gave the Game to Westfield, by 10 to 9.

The Crescents met their match Saturday afternoon, in the nine from the Westfield Athletic Club and were fairly defeated. A few costly errors on the part of the Crescents and some well bunched hits by the Westfield boys did the business while the Westfield umpire came around with a decision that gave the Westfields four runs. Not but that they would have beaten anyhow, but this little gift of the umpire's made the score greater than it would otherwise have been.

The game was played on the Crescent's grounds at the corner of LaGrande avenue and Richmond street, and was witnessed by about four hundred spectators. The crowd was enthusiastic when the home team did anything to merit it, but some of the players were the subject of various derisive remarks.

Either Higgins, the Westfield pitcher, was a daisy, or else the local batters were afraid of him, for not a hit was made off him until the sixth inning and then they were weak and scattered. He had rather poor support, which accounts for most of the runs of the Crescents.

McLarty was hit freely and some ragged fielding made the result a foregone conclusion after the first few innings. Townley and Sutphen were both playing in poor form, and made several costly errors Sutphen struck out every time he came to bat.

It was in the second inning that the fun began. The Westfield boys found that a fly was a sure hit as it went out of bounds so they kept sending the ball in that direction. Three runs had come in and the bases were filled with only one out. Kelly batted an easy grounder to Cooney at third and the latter promptly threw the ball home to Bolsterli who stood at the plate. He touched the plate before the man running from third reached there and then caught Kelly before he reached first. The Westfield umpire couldn't seem to see that one man was forced out and called the runner safe at home. That was rather discouraging and four men crossed the plate, ere the boys recovered from the effects.

The local players made a big effort to catch up but Higgins' curves were puzzling and Westfield easily won. The Westfield infielders did not put up as good a game as the Plainfield boys but their errors did not prove costly. Bolsterli caught well, although McLarty was pretty swift for him. The new men, Cooney and Corbin, impressed the crowd favorably and will be fixtures on the team.

NELSON GILES TALKS.

STATEMENTS TO A PRESS REPORTER IN HIS OWN BEHALF.

Says He Was Not Notified to Clean His Dairy Until Saturday—Dissatisfied With the Treatment He Received.

Those who have followed the history of the present scarlet fever epidemic in this city are aware that the Board of Health has spared no pains in its efforts to locate the source of the contagion. The Board was so earnest in the matter that when physicians announced that the son of Nelson Giles, a local milkman, was suffering with scarlet fever, heroic measures were at once taken. 280 quarts of milk, which Giles had in stock, was dumped into the sewer by *Health Inspector Addis, and other pre*cautionary steps were taken. Mr. Giles has felt more or less aggrieved and sent for a reporter Tuesday morning for the purpose of making a statement.

"It has been stated," said Mr. Giles, to The Press representative, "that my son Russell, who is now staying at his grandfather's farm at Stelton, was taken ill with scarlet fever some time ago. Now that is not the fact. The disease was merely one of malaria chills and fever.

"As to the case of my other son, who is now quarantined on Park avenue, I wish to say that he called upon a physician last Tuesday and was told that he had quinsy sore throat. On Saturday he was feeling better and called again upon the doctor to see if he could not return to work. It was then that his case was declared to be one of scarlet fever. He was feeling well and ready to go to work when this discovery was made by Dr. Adams.

"As to the statement that I was notified some months ago by the health authorities to clean up my milk depot in the Alert Hose Company House on Madison avenue, I wish to say that I never received such notice until last Saturday afternoon, and I then took immediate steps to follow out the instructions given. You may say that I am very dissatisfied with the methods employed in my case. I believe that when the people learn the facts they will be on my side. I shall endeavor to find out where the responsibility lies and shall push the matter until justice is done all around."

Mifford Giles, the oldest son of Nelson Giles, was able to leave his quarantined home, Monday afternoon. His clothing was fully disinfected by Inspector Addis and he took a bath and donned another suit to prevent any possible contagion. After a thorough disinfection, Addis declared that he could run his milk route without the slightest danger to his customers.

All the cans have been washed and cleaned until the Board of Health was perfectly satisfied that there was no danger from them. Giles will keep his horse in a local livery stable, and his extra milk in one of the refrigerators of a local meat market. He resumed his milk route last Tuesday, with a permit in his pocket, signed by Inspector Addis, giving him permission to run his route. The Inspector says that there is not the slightest danger of contagion from him. The old depot will be given up.

Only two new cases were reported Monday and none up to noon Tuesday.

While Dr. Murray, secretary of the Health Board, has ordered a disinfecting apparatus, it has not arrived, and one was borrowed from the Asbury Park Health Board, Monday. It was first used in the residence of Mayor Fisk Monday afternoon, and then at the home of Nelson Giles. Inspector Addis has made several other visits with the apparatus. It is one of the most effective of its kind and was especially recommended by the State Board.

AN ACCIDENT NARROWLY AVERTED.

A Delivery Wagon and Trolley Car Nearly Collided.

Edward J. Smith, a butcher, doing business on West Front street, was driving his horse through Liberty street at a high rate of speed Tuesday afternoon.

On West Fourth street a trolley car approached, and as it neared Liberty street, Smith turned his horse sharply around the corner directly in front of the swiftly oncoming car.

As soon as the horse came around the corner, however, the motorman in charge of the car, with great presence of mind, reversed the lever of his car.

On it went until it touched the frightened horse, and just then it came to a standstill.

If the motorman had delayed to reverse his lever for a few seconds, the story would have been one of a serious accident.

A Longer Vacation.

According to a new order of things the members of the police department get ten days for a vacation this year instead of one week. This rule applies to all men except Patrolmen McCarthy, Cash and Watson who are special officers doing regular duty.

COSTLY CHERRY PICKING

MISS LOUGHLIN FELL FROM A TREE AND WAS INJURED.

She Had Climbed Into the Branches of a Cherry Tree When a Limb Gave Way—Very Serious Internal Injuries Feared.

A very narrow escape from fatal injury occurred Monday afternoon on East Third street, when Miss Margaret Loughlin fell from a cherry tree and sustained severe injuries to her body. Miss Loughlin had ascended the tree for the purpose of picking cherries and she had gathered a large quantity when the accident happened. She was standing on a small limb when it broke and threw her with great force to the ground. She fell on her side and back, and when discovered soon afterwards by the members of the family it was thought that her back was broken. She was in a semi-conscious condition as a result of the fall and unable to talk.

Immediately the ambulance was sent for and Miss Loughlin was removed to the hospital where Dr. Long made a thorough examination. He learned that there were no broken bones although the body was bruised and very sore. Miss Loughlin suffers a great deal of pain and while it is not thought that her injuries are very serious the doctor is at present unable to tell how the case may terminate. There may possibly be internal injuries which might develop a little later.

The distance she fell was a long one and the suddenness with which she came down gave her a great shock from which she is recovering slowly.

'TWAS CHILLY THERE.

NEVERTHELESS THE LAWN PARTY WAS WELL ATTENDED.

It Was Given by the Missionary Societies of the First M. E. Church on the Lawn of C. H. Rugg, of East Second Street.

Tuesday night was not exactly the night, considering the weather, that one would select for a lawn party, but the ladies of the Foreign and Home Missionary Societies of the First M. E. church were *not counting on such un*seasonable weather when they planned a lawn party for last evening. It was held on the lawn of C. H. Rugg, corner of East Second and Washington streets, and proved quite successful after all, despite the chill in the air. The people found their way there, and protected by numerous wraps, enjoyed ice cream and other good things under the trees.

The lawn was delightfully gotten up for the occasion. Long strings of Japanese lanterns were hung from tree to tree while other lanterns were placed at intervals to illuminate the grounds. Tables were arranged under the trees and were surrounded by rugs to keep the feet of the visitors off the damp ground.

The party was under the charge of a committee, of which Mrs. M. L. Winter was the chairman. The other members were Mrs. C. H. Rugg, Mrs. J. H. McNaughton, Mrs. Noah W. Pike, Mrs. D. S. Dunavan, Mrs G. M. Rittenhouse, Mrs. D. E Davis, Mrs. I. L. McVoy, Mrs. Templin, Miss Laura Mulford, Miss Jackson, and Miss Minnie Sharpe.

The cake table was under the charge of Mrs. N. W. Pike and Mrs. Whitney. The ice cream was dealt out under the supervision of Miss Jackson and Miss Sharpe. Miss Chandler and Mrs. D. S. Dunavan were in charge of the candy table. The place table was presided over by Mrs. J. H. McNaughton. The decorating was done by a committee composed of Miss Eva Jenkins, Miss Elsie Horne, and Miss Madeline Day. The young women of the societies acted as waitresses.

While the attendance was not what it would have been had the weather been warm, quite a number visited the place during the evening and a neat little sum was realized from the affair.

The Miller Bicycle Lamp.

Nothing short of a head-on collision breaks the Miller bicycle lamp, made by the E. Miller Co., of 30 West Broadway, New York, and yet this lamp weighs complete only 17 ounces. The light it projects in front of a wheel is no fire fly phosphorescence, but a regular blaze of illumination that announces your approach a mile distant. As might be expected of the Miller Company's product, the lamp is beautifully finished, is devoid of useless appurtenances, and is possessed of novel and entirely new methods of producing a brilliant light which nothing can extinguish accidentally. It burns kerosene oil, is easy of adjustment to every wheel and will wear a lifetime. You won't find it on any 98 cent special tables, because it is worth two dozen and a half of those lamps you will find there. When you see one you'll buy it, no matter if the dealer charges you $3.50 or $5.00.

Miss Maude M. Mitchell and Miss Minnie Mitchell, who have been holding positions in the Asbury Park public schools, are now spending their vacation at the home of their parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Mitchell, of Orchard place.

BUSINESS COURSE ADDED

SUPERINTENDENT MAXSON TELLS OF HIGH SCHOOL CHANGES.

A Commercial Course, Preparing the Pupils for a Business Career, Has Been Added—Some Other Changes.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—At this time of year, when many young people are finishing their preliminary study, the advance our High School is to take next year will be interesting to many of your readers.

*The whole course of study has re*cently been revised and published in a new form, which I shall be glad to mail to anyone interested.

Perhaps the most important change is the addition of a new department. After a careful consideration of the matter, the Board of Education decided that greater facilities should be given those pupils that desire special preparation for a business life, and they have engaged George Weeks Sandford, of New York, to take charge of a newly-established commercial course. Mr. Sandford is a graduate of a normal school and also of a prominent business college, and has had some years successful experience in teaching business subjects in the Brooklyn Polytechnic School, so that there is every assurance that the work will be well handled.

A course has been arranged that gives a line of commercial work extending through the four years, including bookkeeping, penmanship, commercial forms and customs, business practice, theory and science of accounts, commercial law, history of commerce, commercial geography and preparation for civil service examinations.

There is also two years and a half of phonography and type writing, two years of modern language or science, and a four years' line of English. The aim is not simply to give the pupil ability to keep books or take down a dictation, but to give him a solid foundation on which to build a business life. The conditions for admission and graduation are like those of the other courses.

Another marked step in advance is in relation to the Science Department. Plans are being made to provide tables and other accommodations so that chemistry and physics may be taught by the laboratory method, each pupil experimenting, making and handling apparatus, and so learning by doing, the most effective of methods.

This department will be in charge of A. B. Meredith, an honor graduate of Wesleyan University, especially trained for science teaching, with some years of very successful experience in one of the best military schools on the Hudson, and well fitted to make the department strong and popular.

A course in modern languages has also been arranged, making it possible for those who wish to take three years of French and two years of German.

With all these improvements the English language has not been neg*lected, but work of some kind in* the study of English is required of every pupil in the school three times a week throughout the course.

Reports from the colleges where our pupils go, show that the school was never doing better work than today, and with the improvements planned, Plainfield may boast of offering the poorest as well as the richest of her children, not only the best preparation for any college or university, but also the best and most liberal course general training of high school course grade that the State affords.

Sincerely yours,
H. M. Maxson,
Supt. of Schools.

Asbury Park In Line.

The bicycle ordinance in Asbury Park will be enforced from this time forward with strictness. War on the lampless wheelmen was begun yesterday, when five riders were stopped by the park police and forced by Justice Wyckoff to pay a fine. The custom of riding without lanterns will not be tolerated in Asbury Park, and especially on Bradley's brick walk.

A Former Plainfielder.

Dr. Ferrer, of Managua, Nicaraugua, was the guest of Ludwig Conde, of Watchung avenue, last week. Mr. Conde has just received a letter from Dr. Ferrer's son, Firman Ferrer, who formerly lived in this city and was a favorite pupil of Conde on the 'cello. Firman Ferrer is now in charge of a drug store in Managua, Nicaraugua, and is doing well.

Street Railroad Wants a Franchise.

The Elizabeth City Council has been asked to grant a franchise to the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company to construct a double track trolley line through Sayre, Chelton and Westfield avenues to the line of Union Township, the road to begin at Morris avenue and Sayre street and end at Westfield. There will be a public hearing given by the City Council on the matter July 7th to all persons interested. The applicants for the franchise are Chandler W. Riker, Adrian Riker and Edwin A. Hine, the directors of the company.

FEVER LESSENING.

The Number of Cases Growing Less as the Time Passes.

All sorts of sanguinary rumors floated about town this morning regarding the scarlet fever epidemic, but it was very easy to prove their falsity by a call at the office of the Board of Health. While the members of the Board are very anxious that the people shall not be alarmed by an exaggerated statement of the epidemic, they are always willing to give the facts to whoever wants to know.

There was an increase in the number of cases reported and the Board was rather surprised at the small number as they had not expected to have the disease leave so quickly. Two were reported Tuesday. Up to yesterday three cases were reported, but two of them were in a family where there are already two cases of scarlet fever and it was expected that the other members of the family, who were in quarantine, to catch it also, as they did.

Miss Alice A. Lee, teacher at the Irving school, was taken ill Monday and it was found that she had the scarlet fever. She was at her home on Crescent avenue at the time and is now under the care of her physician, Dr. Davis. None of her pupils have taken the disease and the part of the city west of Spooner avenue is free from scarlet fever as yet.

Dr. Murray, secretary of the Board of Health, called at The Press office, Tuesday afternoon, and stated that the statement made by Nelson Giles to a Press reporter was incorrect in one particular. Dr. Hunt of the State Board went to Stelton, Dr. Murray said, and found that Randolph Giles, son of Nelson Giles, who was alleged to be ill with chills and fever, was ill with the scarlet fever.

Fair Camera Fiends.

The Plainfield Camera Club is planning to enlarge the number of young women on its membership list. There are already many of the fair sex who are enthusiastic amateur photographers who should enjoy the privileges of the club. At the meeting of the club next week, an amendment will be made to the bylaws by which young women can join the club without paying the initiation fee.

GIGANTIC WATER SUPPLY.

The Midland Water Company Begin the Week of Laying Pipes.

The Midland Water Company, which will get its supply of water from the great ponds of South Plainfield, have begun the preliminary work of laying pipes from Metuchen towards Woodbridge, which place, with Sewaren, Carteret and Boynton Beach, they will supply, they having bought up the Middlesex Water Company, which was recently organized at Woodbridge. Thirty miles of pipes will be laid this summer, and an immense standpipe will be erected at Metuchen.

It is said that this company will also supply Perth Amboy with water, as it is claimed that the water of that city is poor. The Midland Water Company now has practically full control of all the water rights of Union and Middlesex counties.

THROWN BY A STRANGER.

Phillip Cregier Had an Unpleasant Time on His Wheel.

Phillip Cregier, of Park avenue, was seriously injured in a bicycle accident on Park avenue, Monday evening. He was riding at a slow pace up Park avenue with a friend, when an unknown wheelman approached from behind and went directly between Cregier and his companion. As the stranger passed them, he turned directly in front of Cregier. The front wheel of the latter's bicycle struck the stranger's rear wheel and the Plainfield wheelman was rolling in the dust.

He struck on his wrist badly spraining it which he was cut and bruised all about the body. His wheel was smashed by the fall. Cregier managed to reach Plainfield and went to Dr. Zegilo who carefully dressed his wounds.

The stranger made no effort to see how badly he had injured Cregier, but hurried on without looking behind.

Notorious Thief Escaped.

Walter Kinney, the notorious bicycle and all-around thief, who lately haunted Bound Brook and whose conviction and sentence to five years in the Eastern District Penitentiary of Pennsylvania was noted in these columns last week, escaped by picking the jail lock with a spoon. A reward of $100 is offered for his capture. It is rumored that he has been seen near Bound Brook within the past few days.

THE WHEEL PARAMOUNT.

ITS SUCCESS AS USED BY ENDEAVORERS DEMONSTRATED.

The Christian Endeavor Bicycle Squad Will Go to Marconnier This Evening—Epworth Leaguers' Second Run Friday.

The second of the visitation runs of the cycling squad of the Local Union of Christian Endeavor Societies and the second of the bicycle sociables of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church are both to be held this week if the weather is propitious.

This evening the Endeavorers will again try their novel scheme of visiting the outlying societies in the Union. This time the destination of the run will be Oak Tree and the Marconnier chapel. The ride is over some of the finest roads in New Jersey and those who did not go to Mount Pleasant on account of the rough roads need have no fear on this occasion.

Miss Ernestine Smith, who so successfully managed the first run, will again be in command, and Miss Elizabeth Allis will act in the capacity of color bearer. Miss Smith's lieutenants have not yet been formally selected and she will not make her choice until the night of the run when it is known who will be able to go. The repair squad will also be organized that evening but preparations for their outfit will be made beforehand. It is understood that a man well-versed in wheel repairing will fill the position of "bicycle surgeon."

Miss Smith has announced her orders for the evening. The Endeavorers will assemble in front of the Seventh-day Baptist church at 7:15 o'clock this evening. The column will start promptly and proceed along West Fifth street to Park avenue, there turning to the right. Then the cyclers will enjoy a delightful spin along the smooth surface of Park avenue to Holly's Corners; there the procession will turn to the left along the charming road that leads to the front of the chapel. Provision has been made for the care of the wheels and they will be placed in security from dampness and bicycle thieves.

The Endeavor Society of the chapel changed the night of their meeting to suit the wishes of the cycling squad. A short service of prayer, praise and testimony will be held after the party arrives. Then a banquet will be served, remembered and the party will bid adieu to their hosts and return homeward. The distance to the chapel is three miles, over the best roads in Union county. There are no hills to encounter, going or coming, and the pace will be one that everybody will be able to keep without trouble.

The next attempt of the Epworth Leaguers to enjoy an evening on wheels will be held on Friday evening. The success of the first attempt over every member that rides a wheel to be an enthusiastic supporter of that kind of sociables. The success of James A. Stafford in arranging and carrying out the bicycle sociable was marked. Mr. Stafford thought that everybody ought to have a hand in arranging these delightful affairs and refused to be reappointed as committee to take charge of the next one. Miss Madeline Day is a committee of one in charge of Friday's affair and it promises to be as successful as the first. Of course, the moon won't be out to guide the riders on their way, but the nights are comparatively light and the lamps will illuminate the road sufficiently for the most inexperienced rider of them all to navigate his machine safely and without trouble.

Mr. Stafford will act as one of Miss Day's lieutenants and the other will be Ray T. Snodgrass, who served so efficiently at the last one.

The party will gather in front of the First M. E. church at 7:30 o'clock and then ride in the direction of Springfield, at which place they hope to reach and make a short halt for refreshments. Then the party will return by the same road they went.

Poor Thing.

An imprisoned dog, in the 'stockade" back of the Schepflin block, makes the nights hideous with his frantic appeals for freedom. Unless his petitions are heeded, by those responsible for this disturber of the peace, the poor suffering canine will doubtless soon be relegated to the "Shades of Tartarus."

BUSINESS COLLEGE OVER

CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE PLAINFIELD BUSINESS COLLEGE HELD.

A Class of Eight Received Their Graduation Diplomas—Addresses Given by Rev. C. E. Herring and S. S. Swackhamer.

The closing exercises of the Plainfield Business College, under the direction of Prof. A. A. Phelps, were held Tuesday in the rooms at the corner of Park avenue and Front street. Considering the excessive warm weather, the attendance was remarkably good and the programme presented was listened to with pleasure. After an opening prayer by Rev. C. E. Herring, the opening remarks were given by Prof. Phelps.

This was followed with an essay, "Electricity," by Albert V. V. Hibson, of Cranford, who is a student in the college. A reading by Miss Mary G. Morrison, of this city, also a student, was followed with the reading of the class history by Mrs. Roberts, wife of Prof. N. H. Roberts, of the commercial course. At this point Rev. C. E. Herring delivered a short address on "Honesty," in which he said many interesting and helpful things.

Alvah B. Davis, student, of this city, gave a reading, which preceded a stump speech by Garrett Kiely, who used the nom de plume of Hon. Perverse Peabody. An essay, "If," by Miss Ada B. Chandler, another student, was well given. This was followed with another address by Lawyer S. S. Swackhamer, who selected for his subject, "Life Work."

"The New Woman," was the subject of an essay delivered by Miss G. M. Vail, a student, of Dunellen. Miss Caroline M Borrup, of Netherwood, also a student, gave an excellent reading.

In conclusion Prof. Phelps presented the graduates with diplomas as follows:—Commercial course, Miss Mabel B. Potter, Mount Pleasant; Miss M. E. Vail, Dunellen. Shorthand course, Miss Mary E. Miller, Delaware; Miss Cornelia Shearn, Raritan; Miss Bertha E. Needham, Miss Adelaide G Ball, North Plainfield; Charles A. Coriell, Jr., Dunellen; Miss Clara L. Williams, Plainfield.

This closes the second year of the college. During the first year there were sixty-five students and six graduated. This year there were seventy-eight students and eight graduated. The students attending the school have come from almost all of the nearby towns and one was in attendance from Delaware. They all speak very highly of Prof Phelps and his assistants, Prof W. K. Kiugh, of the shorthand class, and Prof. N. H. Roberts, of the commercial course.

WILL THE TROLLEY GO?

EVERYTHING IS BEING PREPARED TO START WORK.

The Men and Tools Have Arrived and all Lacking are the Ties—Great Secrecy About the Movement.

From all appearances the work of building the extension of the trolley to Mountain Park Inn will be started this week and before a great while people will probably have the pleasure of riding up through Washingtonville to the top of the mountain.

Tuesday a colony of Italians arrived in Plainfield and settled in quarters in North Plainfield. Just what time the work will be started has not yet been learned, but it is understood that it will be commenced on Friday or Saturday of this week. A delay is caused just at present for the reason that the ties have not yet arrived.

The necessary tools to be used have arrived and have been located on Hudson lane. It is said that the line will run through the remaining portion of Somerset street to Washingtonville and from that point will make a circle around the mountain to the Mountain Park Inn, where the road will end.

The courts will close Friday, and will not reopen for several days, and the work will probably be started right after court adjourns. This will give the street railway company an opportunity to build their road in front of the property of owners who have objected to the trolley before an injunction could be secured.

Was He Stealing a Ride?

A westbound freight train, Sunday, picked up the mutilated body of a man on the Pennsylvania tracks at Iselin. The body was taken to New Brunswick. It was that of a man about thirty-five, with a stubby beard. The clothes seemed to be fair quality, but much worn. It is thought the man was stealing a ride on a freight and fell beneath the wheels.

EVENTFUL FIVE YEARS.

ENDEAVORERS OF EAST THIRD STREET MISSION SUCCESSFUL.

Tuesday They Celebrated the Fifth Anniversary of the Organization of Their Society—A New Building to Be Erected.

The fifth anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society of the East Third Street mission was held in the mission last Tuesday, at which time an appropriate programme was presented in honor of the event. The superintendent, L. W. Randolph, was in charge and announced the several numbers on the programme. Mr. Randolph conducted the opening exercises, consisting of Scripture reading and prayer.

Following this an address was made by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., pastor of Trinity Reformed church. He spoke on the "Three-Fold Meaning of Christian Endeavor, Evangelization, Enthusiasm and Energy." From each of the above sub-topics Mr. Schenck presented many strong and helpful lessons. His remarks were listened to with a great deal of pleasure by all in attendance. At the close a vote of thanks was extended to the speaker.

A vocal solo, by Miss Nancy Randolph, and a piano solo, by Miss Libby Joseph, were given. Just at this time there was an intermission and refreshments, consisting of cake and lemonade, were served in abundance. Following this there were vocal solos by Miss Lena Jomint, recitations by Miss Beulah Waters; charade, "Sunshine and Shade," plantation songs, the Misses Freeman.

Those who served as waitresses were the Misses Kyle, Smith, Randolph, Thompson; Messrs. Hepburn and Waters.

During the past year there has been an increase in membership and interest, and the society is in good working condition. The members have accomplished much and they start the new year with bright prospects of doing a great deal more. With the prospects of having a new chapel they feel as though a great work is before them.

The attendance at the anniversary Tuesday showed conclusively that the society is awakening an interest among many friends of the mission and society.

SILVER WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cass Celebrated Their Twenty-fifth Wedding Anniversary.

A pleasing event of Tuesday was the celebration by Mr. and Mrs. John Cass, of Greenbrook, of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, which was held at their home. The grounds and house were beautifully illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and the effect was very pretty. The celebration was continued from the afternoon until late in the evening, and during that time a large number of guests called and extended congratulations to the bride and groom. Many expensive and useful presents were received from relatives and friends. Pleasing refreshments were served to the guests and the sociability of all was a marked feature of the happy event. During the stated hours Prof. Naylor and his orchestra discoursed the latest selections.

Among those present were the following:

Mrs. S. Richardson, Mrs. T. J. Todd, Mrs. Henry Vail and daughters, Charles Tilton and family, Mrs. George Vail, of Greenbrook; Mr. and Mrs. Weaver, of Raritan; Mrs. Mary Dean, of Flemington; Master Horace Vail, of Plainfield; Mrs. George Vail, of Greenbrook; Mr. and Mrs. Hague, of Clinton avenue; Mrs. John Stein, Fred Whynooff and Stanley Emmons, of South Plainfield.

Sunday-School Teachers to Meet.

The New Jersey Sunday-school Teachers' Association will meet in conference in the Asbury Park Auditorium next week and, besides, conduct a "summer school of methods." First on the programme will be ten lessons in blackboard sketching by Miss Struble, of Trenton. This will be followed by ten lectures on "Child Nature" by Miss Cushman, of Newark, and five conferences on practical classwork by Mrs. J. W. Barnes, of Newark. Four illustrative lessons will be given by Miss B. F. Vella, Miss I. H. Pollemus and others. A paper on "Separate Primary Lessons" will be read by Miss Julia E Peck The subject of primary music will also receive special attention.

The Town Clock is Silent.

The tongue of the old clock in the tower of the First M. E. church is paralyzed. A little skillful surgery on the part of the janitor might avail to set the "unruly member" wagging again. People miss its cheerful tones and are asking "What's the matter with the clock?"

HEALTH OF THE CITY.

THE BOARD HELD AN IMPORTANT MEETING TUESDAY NIGHT.

Ordinances Providing for the Licensing of Milk and Ice Dealers Considered Favorably—Inspector Addis' Report.

The recent scarlet fever scare and the campaign against the carters who have overstepped the powers of their license have both combined to attract attention to the actions of the Plainfield Board of Health. A rumor to the effect that the city jail would be closed by action of the board at the meeting, last Tuesday, was another cause of the unusual interest in the proceedings of the meeting. Despite all the rumors that flew about town, there was nothing definite decided upon by the board, although several interesting questions were discussed and favorably commented on.

Mayor Fisk has been taking a great interest in the work of the board and he has been of great assistance to the members in their efforts. He was present at the meeting, Tuesday evening, and was an interested listener.

A very interesting report was submitted by Inspector Addis, which was as follows:

To the Honorable, the Board of Health, city of Plainfield:

Gentlemen:—I herewith submit my report for month ending June 26th, 1897:

No. houses under quarantine last report	1
No. houses under quarantine during the month	46
No. houses relieved from quarantine during the month	42
No. houses now under quarantine	47
No. of persons in above houses with contagious diseases	52
No. visits to houses under quarantine	207
No. inspections on complaint	10
No. inspections, water test	29
" peppermint tests	2
" air tests	2
" sewer connections	71
" new plumbing systems completed	10
No. house inspections as per daily memorandum	56
Total	373

I am pleased to say that the quarantines are being maintained, with one exception.

I have disinfected the following places and contents of rooms during the month:

K. Rotting, 402 Bernard place; K. Rottburg, 205 W. Third street; James Melvin, Cottage place; R. Stringer, Cottage place; Mrs. Ellis, 3 Third ave; Washington Avenue Catholic School; Hon. Chas. J. Fisk, Wolf Dubbers, 1 Arch; Mrs. Resnick, North ave; Jacob B. Giles.

On June 19th, as per instructions of the president, I caused to be emptied into the city sewer all of the milk that I found at the Madison avenue milk depot, and supposed to be owned by Jacob B. Giles. This one can of milk I found at Mc Coy's restaurant, 225 Park, including sugar, at the Italians, 124 W. Front street, was also emptied into the sewer. On Sunday morning, June 20, I found Milford Giles, 1 Arch street, with his team, and learned he had left one can at Mc Coy's restaurant, which I caused to be emptied into the city sewer; also the can of milk which was in the wagon.

My reason for this was that I forbid him to handle any milk until such time as he had obtained permission from the board or inspector.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. ADDIS, Sr.,
Sanitary Inspector.

The recent epidemic has drawn the attention of the Board to the milkmen with unusual force. The investigation among the milkmen showed the necessity of some ordinance to govern their care for sanitary conditions. The report of George W. McGuire, dairy inspector for this part of the State, told of his personal visits to the milk depots in this city. The different places were mentioned and their equipment described. In a few of them, the conditions were found to be imperfect. The inspector stated that they must be cleaned at once or the proprietor ought not to be allowed to continue in business.

There was a general discussion regarding the necessary regulations for the furnishing of the milk supply of the city and there seemed to be a general sentiment in favor of the adoption of an ordinance similar to the one in Asbury Park.

The Asbury Park ordinance provides for one or more inspector to investigate the sources of milk supply, and the methods used in handling the milk before and after it reaches the city.

It also provides that no milk shall be brought into the city that has been adulterated, has been transported or stored in an unclean place or manner, or which has been produced from cows that are stabled in an unhealthy manner. Each milkman shall be duly licensed and shall furnish the Board of Health with a list of all his customers, which shall be corrected weekly. The violation of the ordinance shall incur the payment of a fine of $50.

The board also discussed the adoption of an ordinance relating to ice men somewhat similar to the other and necessitating the securing of a license and of reporting where the ice is harvested and by whom and the circumstances of its transportation and then how it is delivered and by whom.

The members of the board decided that the scavengers in the city had been very lax about providing air-tight barrels for their use and it was decided that they should be called to account if they did not promptly comply with the present ordinance that regulates that subject.

There was some talk about the closing up of the public dumps at the

BICYCLE THIEF AT WORK.

CARRIED AWAY TWO WHEELS LEFT AT THE CURB.

Bicycles Belonged to Robert M. Clark and Edward G. Clark—Had Been Left in Front of the City National Bank.

A daring bicycle robbery was committed in the centre of the business section, Wednesday, at an hour when the streets were filled with vehicles and pedestrians. Two wheels were taken and there is not a trace of the thief to be found.

Lawyer Robert M. Clark rode down on his wheel from his home near Washingtonville, Wednesday. His brother, Edward O. Clark, who is studying law in the offices of McNabb & Clark, rode his wheel also. The law offices of the firm are located in the new City National Bank building at the corner of Front street and Park avenue. The Clarks left their wheels in front of the entrance to the second story which is on East Front street and then they went upstairs.

People passed and repassed. Then the thieves appeared on the scene. There must have been two, for both wheels were taken. They probably came up to the wheels and carelessly jumped on as if they owned them and rode away. Both wheels were '96 Crescents.

Robert M. Clark came downstairs at about 10 o'clock and started to ride away on an errand, but his wheel was not there. At first it was thought that it was all a joke and that some of their friends had taken the wheels and hidden them for fun. Neither wheels have been found as yet, although the owners and the police have searched for them.

Many business men are in the habit of leaving their wheels outside on the sidewalk and there was a panic among them for fear that the bicycle thief would continue his course and make other appropriations. None have been reported as yet, however.

EXPENSIVE CHERRIES.

WHILE PICKING THEM BRENNAN FELL AND WAS SERIOUSLY INJURED.

A Limb Gave Way and He Fell Over 30 Feet—Collarbone Broken and Possibly He Received Internal Injuries.

James Brennan, Jr., a fifteen-year-old boy, fell from a cherry tree Tuesday afternoon and narrowly escaped being fatally injured. The boy lives with his parents at 17 Rose street.

Brennan has a habit of climbing, and has often been warned that he would some day meet with a serious accident. Tuesday, shortly after 3 o'clock, he mounted a particularly high tree that stands in his father's yard. He went from limb to limb after the fruit, until he had reached a position about 30 feet from the ground.

Suddenly there was the snap of a branch, followed by a cry, and the next instant Brennan was lying unconscious in a heap upon the ground.

Neighbors come to the help of Mrs. Brennan, and the injured boy was carried into the house and a physician summoned.

Dr. Mace, Clawson responded, and after making an examination declared that the boy's collarbone was broken. There is also a possibility of internal injuries.

Dr. Clawson set the injured bone, and gave what further treatment was necessary and in half an hour the boy revived. He has suffered much pain ever since. Considering the height of Brennan's fall it is thought that he escaped rather luckily. Dr. Carman will be able to decide today whether internal injuries exist.

CHIEF GRANT'S ORDERS.

Independence Day is to be Celebrated On July 5th Only.

This year the Fourth comes on Sunday and so that holiday will be celebrated on Monday, July 5th. So the small boy must remember that he is to celebrate on that day and no other.

It has heretofore been the custom among the boys of the city to begin their fun a week or two in advance and make things lively during the daytime with firecrackers and at night with fireworks. Last year Chief Grant began a campaign against the youthful offenders. This year it will be continued. The Chief has not the slightest objection to all the firecrackers and fireworks anybody wants on the Fourth but what he does object to is the preliminary celebration. He has issued a notice stating that it must not be done and he says that the police will be instructed to arrest anybody who shoots off fireworks or firecrackers before midnight Sunday night.

Returning the Cut in Prices

A Press reporter called at the store of the Plainfield Cycle and Sporting Goods Company to interview Charles C. Lister regarding the cut in the prices of his cycles, but he was not there.

BIG CUT IN BICYCLES.

THE POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY STARTED THE MOVEMENT.

The Price of Columbias Was Reduced From $100 to $75, and Hartfords in Like Proportion—Local Dealers Talk.

Like a bomb-shell in the midst of the camp of the bicycle dealers comes the announcement that the Pope Manufacturing Company, makers of the Columbia and Hartford wheels, the oldest bicycle manufacturers in the country, have reduced the price of their '97 wheel from $100 to $75. Everybody expected a cut in the price of wheels in the spring, but when it did not come the general impression was that the present price would remain until the beginning of the season of '98.

There are few families in town, one member of which does not know how to ride, and so the news of a fall in the cost of a mount will excite general interest. Plainfield has one of the highest percentages of wheelmen and wheelwomen to her population in the State, and is generally looked upon as a wheeling centre.

With the news of the cut in the prices of Columbias and Hartfords, comes the information that the J. P. Lovell Arms Company has reduced the price of the Lovell Diamond to $65. While to an outsider, there is nothing particularly startling in the fact that two manufacturers have decided to reduce the price of their product, it means considerably more to the trade. The Pope Company has been one of the most persistent advocates of the $100 wheel and has prided itself on the fact that the Columbia could not be bought for less than $100. There are other firms that have sold machines, marked at $100, for almost anything they could get for them and they will be only too willing to follow the lead of the Pope Company and rate their wheels somewhere nearer the price they have been selling them for. Other companies will be compelled to drop their prices to keep in the "swim" and place their wheel on an even basis with the others.

The cause of the drop in prices may be attributed to several causes, among which the most important are the advent of the chainless bicycle and the growing popularity of the cheap wheels. Department stores all over the country have been playing havoc with the bicycle trade. In some cases they have had really excellent wheels bought from manufacturers who have failed or were about to do so. Others are machines that are put together hastily and are poor specimens of cycle workmanship. It is an easy thing for a clever salesman to convince an uninitiated buyer that one of the latter is just as good as any other, simply because it appears so.

Economical buyers throughout the country have therefore looked among the cheaper wheels for their purchase and the sale of the first grade wheels has suffered in consequence. Local dealers have reported from the first of the season that there was a much greater demand from the start for a second grade of wheels at a reduced price.

The effect of the cut will be that most of the other manufacturers will follow and reduce their prices in comparison. The smaller companies will be called upon to make still greater reductions of their inferior wheel and will, in consequence, be pushed to the wall. It will be a survival of the fittest and the manufacturers will find all their energies taxed to keep out of the rut that may be their ruin.

One of the largest manufacturers said Tuesday: "It means that Col. Pope is tired of the tactics of the small dealers and makers—men that list their wheels at a fair figure and then take whatever price is offered, provided it leaves any margin of profit, however small. I think the price will be further lowered if such a course shall be found necessary to drive the small men out of business."

N. C. Overman said: "We shall not lower the prices of our wheel, no matter what other concerns decide to do; but I feel sure there is going to be some stiff competition among the small fry."

Others said practically that a big bicycle rate war is on, and that the public will get some cheap wheels this summer. But next year, when only one or two large firms are left, it may be different.

A reporter visited the managers of the principal bicycle stores in town yesterday and took a census of the opinions. The announcement came as a surprise to them and they had different views of the matter.

When seen by a reporter yesterday, W. L. Price, manager of the Eldridge Cycle Company's store on Park avenue, said:

"Yes, we are the agents in this city

THE BANK MYSTERY.

"I've come, Judge, to ask if you'll let me tell you what no one on earth don't know but me; 'bout that bank mystery.

"Yes, thank you, I will sit down. A fire feels good on a night like this. Tain't often such as I have a chance at this kind of comfort and luxury.

"What do I know about the bank mystery? Land sakes, Judge, time they opened the bank that day ten years ago and found the bank vault broke into and the safe blowed up and not a dollar gone, I could have told it all.

"You'll be glad to listen? That's good of you. I knowed you was a kind man and a just one; that's why I come to you. No, thank you, I don't smoke; I put all that money away for me wife and children.

"Yes, Judge, I started out in life a thief and a robber. I prospered fairly in a small way and no one didn't catch up with me for some time. Then I joined a gang in for anything. I was in command of them, an old story, till I married and begun to have little ones. Then, Lord knows what helped me—something did—and for the sake of my wife and children I broke loose from everything and came here, where no one didn't know me, to start over again. I had some money, and opened the restaurant just opposite the bank.

"Then they come here, part of the gang I'd belonged to. First I knowed of it was seein' 'em in the restaurant. I 'spicioned they weren't here for no good, and it most took my breath away. They knowed me quick enough, too, and nothin' wouldn't do but I must join 'em. I was the very man they wanted; I could help 'em and I was bound to 'em. 'Twas the biggest thing they'd undertaken yet—the bank. They'd come on to examine the situation, knowing that Mr. Durkee, the new mill-owner, would make a big payment soon, and the money for it would be in the bank here. If there waren't anything else, that would be a big haul, a haul worth havin', and me bein' here, decided 'em.

"I do think the devil brought all his friends and relations with him that night to tempt me. I forgot how to go to sleep, and just couldn't stay in bed. I wonder I warn't in tatters by morain' with the devil tuggin' at me as he did and tryin' to keep me out of the room where my sleepin' children lay.

"Lord, it makes me creep and perspire all over now to think of it.

"Yer see, them bank people come over to my place for lunch best part of the time, and they all knowed my little people, and the mill people knowed 'em too. My oldest boy worked in the mill, and they'd been as kind as could be when he's sick. Christmas time they's good to him, too, and there's no one I'd rather see but had remembered my little people, even to the watchman. Seemed like robbing my own people, somehow. I's bound not to inform on the gang and they's bound to rob ther bank; but I cursed 'em in me heart in coals' just when I was gettin' rid of the old life for good and all. 'Twas awful!

"Well, Judge, you know how them rooms over the bank was rented to start a new daily paper. I made 'em swear on the book I'd have no part in it appear nowhere. I'd plan it all out and give 'em points and be out hand at the last, but I had to be cautious.

"They found out when the money was to be paid and 'greed on the night before for the big robbery. I had it all mapped out for 'em where and how they was to loosen up the boards of the floor in their room above, so we could break through and lower ourselves into the vault when the time come. Then yer see we could have the safe to get into and the great iron door between us and the watchman.

"Everything was ready, and we was pretty sure the money was paid.

"We had planned so as to have the door of the safe ready to blow open when the watchman went down cellar to see to his fires. I knowed the time of night he did so, seein' him often from my house across the way through the window of the bank; but to make sure we stationed a man where he could give the signal at the proper time. With the watchman down stairs and we shut up in that vault, with the solid masonry between us, 'twarn't in the range of possibilities for no human being to hear us.

"'Twas planned that when we broke through the ceiling, me and one of the others was to go down first with the lanterns and the tools and get the door ready for Jim Grogan, the leader of the gang, to come down and use the dynamite, and be on hand to take out the money.

"Lord, but it was just the night for such a piece of work, and after I had examined to see if all was safe, knowin' the dangers better than the others, we broke through the floor and lowered the ladder, and there we was—right in the vault. 'Twas well for me, I'd hit it right, for my life warn't worth much if any o' my plannin' failed to work.

"Tom Doolan in a hurry went down first, and when I was half way down he started back, saying in a hoarse kind of whisper:

"'Who called me?'

"'No one, you fool!' said Jim.

"'Then,' he said, and he ran past me on the ladder, 'some one is down there. Two of 'em I heard some one say: "Go back, go back."'

"'We'll gag him,' said Jim, and me and him went down and turned our lanterns round, lookin' everywhere, but there warn't no one there.

"'What's the matter with the fool?' growled Jim, and went back and tried to send him down again, but he just wouldn't go, so Jim cursed him and came himself, and he and me begun to get the safe door ready to blow up.

"That's a thing that takes time and care, Judge, but we went at it with a will and never a word. It was so still you could almost hear your heart beat, when all of a sudden came a smothered cry like a woman's. We stopped work and looked at each other, Jim's face white and scared.

"'Lord, what was that?' he said.

"'I often hears 'em on the street like that,' said I.

"'That warn't on the street; it sounded close by,' said Jim. 'We couldn't hear nothin' outside in this place.'

"'Nonsense,' said I, 'don't you make a fool of yourself, too, and spoil all,' and I went to work again.

"I could see how his hand trembled for a while and then got steady again.

"'That must have come through the THE BANK Mystery—Galley TWO.. room upstairs,' he said presently. 'Queer, though; it sounded so close.'

"Then he worked on and there warn't nothin' more to be heard. Rest of the gang might all have been dead men for all the sound they made, but we didn't say nothin'; and so the night went on.

"At last we had it all ready, and were only waiting for the signal to blow it up and then—money enough to make us all rich. Tain't such as you can realize the excitement and the strain of such a moment. To know it's all there, ready, and then to have to wait! It's easier walkin' over red hot coals. It's all right to go on and work, but to stay still and only breathe and listen gives me the shivers.

"Presently Jim caught my arm.

"'Say, I thought I heard voices, old you?' he whispered.

"'The men upstairs,' I said.

"'Sounded down here. Have your pistol ready.'

"I took my lantern and went round the vault again carefully, and then held it up to examine the walls. Then I shook my head. There warn't no way we could hear no one.

"'It's the quietest place I ever was in,' said Jim, 'and, by Jove, I'll be glad when we are out of it. Why don't that signal come? Suppose there's any hitch? I swear I hear voices again.'

"Just then came the signal and Jim began to apply the transmitter, but his hands trembled so and his eyes looked wild and excited, his own wife wouldn't know him.

"'The money! The money!' he whispered, 'we must have it now!'

"We got out of the way just in time and then out came the door.

"'The inside door, quick,' said Jim, but the explosion had made that fall inside, and we just could lift it out.

"'Have the bag ready,' said Jim, as he leaned forward to haul the great piles of bank notes and silver we could see by the light of the lanterns.

"'Hands off, or you are a dead man!'

"It was a voice that would have waked the dead. I dropped my bag and Jim drew back his hand and caught hold of me with a grip like iron, and he begun to slowly back to the ladder.

"'The combination is all right; we have them now, they can't escape us.'

"We were half up the ladder when we heard the click, click of the lock, and as we drew the ladder after us we could hear the rasping of the hinges of the iron door.

"'Fly, fly, for your lives; we are discovered,' said Jim, as he went round to warn the men; and in the darkness and in the wind and rain they went away and ain't never seen one of 'em since. I heard, though, as when they found there warn't no one there and the bank people didn't know nothin' 'bout it till the next morning, they just believed as the bank was haunted, sure.

"Do I know what it was, Judge? There ain't no one else as does know, that's sure. 'Tain't much after all.

"Yer see, playin' round with my little ones, I found as I could make 'em hear all kinds of noises anywhere I wanted, and people cryin' and laughin'. It was fun for them and I often done it; ventriloquism I believe you call it; but that night's the last time. Yer see, none of the gang didn't know 'bout that, and I don't keer ever to have 'em know it now. It saved the bank without my informin', and that's all I care for.

"Oh, no, Judge, the bank don't owe me nothin'. I'm obliged to you for listening. It kind of makes me feel easier.

"No, no, thank you, I won't stay and take no more of your time. Don't get up; I can find my way out.

"What's that you say, Judge? You honor and respect me—me? And the bank—Land, Judge, twarn't me; 'twas my wife and children saved the bank and I'm proud of 'em—proud of 'em, Judge. Good night."—Philadelphia Times.

First Actor: "Do you know your part in the new play?"

Second Actor: "Know it? Why if I stand on my head I'll run out of my mouth."

A STRADIVARIUS IN ALASKA.

A $10,000 Violin the Friend and Companion of a Miner.

At the Cornet mine, on Berner's Bay, eighty-five miles northeast of Juneau, Alaska, in probably as bleak and wild a spot as can be found on this continent, can be heard on the long winter nights strains of harmony that have been exiled from the civilized world.

A traveller who has just returned says:

"One evening, as I was approaching the Cornet mine, I heard some one playing a violin, and though I had heard what I have been assured the greatest masters of both hemispheres, I must say that such sounds as came from the unseen player I had never heard equalled.

"When I reached the camp I was welcomed by the superintendent, Willis E. Nowell, and after a hearty supper I asked him who was performing so beautifully on the violin as I approached the camp. Mr. Nowell said: 'I was the player, though your praise of my playing rather embarrasses me.' When I questioned the gentleman regarding his instruments he said the one he was playing was a Stradivarius, named 'Eliza,' for which he paid $10,000, but he also had the 'Nero,' which cost him $5,000.

"I discovered in a further conversation with the gentleman that he was an ex-professor of the Boston Conservatory of Music, and that previous to his coming to Alaska he had performed on the same instrument that nightly gave forth its melodious tones in that bleak region, in nearly every place in Europe.

"Mr. Nowell has been at the mine about three years, and says the solitude often inspires him to themes that all the wonder of civilization could not bring forth. Mr. Nowell told me that from a child he had a love for the violin that gradually grew on him so that by the time he was twelve years old he had sufficiently mastered the instrument to make his professional debut.

"Mr. Nowell will probably stay at the mine a couple of years more, as he has an interest in the mine, and as it is very rich, as high as $27,000 having been taken out of pockets in three days. When I asked him he would sell either of his instruments, he said: 'This mine is rich, but not rich enough to make me part with one of my loves, nor are all the mines in the world rich enough to make me part with either.'"—Portland Oregonian.

AN IMMENSE FARM.

It Consists of 1,500,000 Acres. The Fencing Said to Have Cost $50,000.

The largest farm in this country, and probably in the world, is situated in the southwestern part of Louisiana. It is 100 miles long from east and west. It was purchased in 1883 by a syndicate of Northern capitalists, by whom it is still operated. At the time of its purchase its 1,500,000 acres was a vast pasture for cattle belonging to a few land barons in the country. Now it is divided into pasture stations for ranches, existing every six miles. The fencing is said to have cost about $50,000. The land is best adapted for rice, sugar, corn and cotton. A tract, say half a mile square, is taken, and an engine is placed on each side. The engines are portable, and operate a cable attached to four plows. By this arrangement 30 acres are gone over in a day, with the labor of only three men.

There is not a single draught horse on the entire place, if we except those used by the herders of cattle, of which there are 16,000 head on the place. The Southern Pacific railway runs for 36 miles through the farm. The company has a number of stations operating on the estate, of which 300 miles are navigable. It has also an icehouse, bank, shipyard and rice mills.

Discrimination of Seed.

In a recent number of the bulletin of the Torrey Botanical Club, Prof. Byron D. Halsted points out that the pods of the well known Chinese wistaria are most effective catapults, expelling their seeds with a pistol-like explosion and scattering far and wide. Everyone knows that our common witch-hazel acts similarly. Each cell of the woody capsule contains one large, bony, and shining seed, wedged into a cell too narrow to contain it. The seed is finally ejected with tremendous force and considerable noise. If one carries home a fruiting branch of witch-hazel and forgets about it he is alarmed some night by a violent bombardment. Even more surprising is the propulsive action of the sandbox of the West Indies. On one occasion an English traveler, carrying some of these fruits home in a steamer, had them explode in his trunk, and with difficulty proved that he was not a dynamiter. The squirting cucumber ejects its seeds in a fountain-like jet of mucilaginous water. One of the commonest devices resorted to for dispersion of seeds is the use of hooks, grapnels, or sticklebarbed hairs. In some species, as Collomia, the hooks are not released until the seed reaches the proper moist locality, when they project and anchor it down.—Cosmopolitan.

He was Running the Theatre.

The late John Stetson, the shrewd but illiterate American theatrical manager of a generation or more ago is told, once had a business manager under him whose name was Sharp. One day Stetson came to the theatre and saw a big sign above the door that said: "Matinee to-day at 2 o'clock sharp!" "Hallo," said Stetson, "seems to me that fellow's putting on airs. Take in that sign and put out one, 'Matinee today at 2 o'clock. Stetson.' I am running this theatre."

A FAMOUS EXCURSION RECALLED.

Given to Interest Capitalists in Northern Pacific Stock.

A Northwestern Congressman, who was on the famous excursion which Henry Villard gave to witness the driving of the golden spike of the Northern Pacific road, recalled some of its interesting features recently.

"It was the greatest junketing trip in the history of the United States, bar none," said he. "Villard had completed the road, putting an enormous amount of money in it, and he decided that he could interest English and German capital in the enterprise by taking the capitalists themselves out over the road. So he made up his party, including a large number of distinguished Americans—General Grant among them, I remember—and four trains of Pullman cars, each train hauled by two locomotives, started for the Northwest. You never saw such entertainment as was lavished on the party. Champagne flowed like water, and no one was allowed to pay for anything—not even for a shave or a newspaper. The trip altogether must have cost at least $400,000, for there were 400 persons in the party, and $1,000 per head is a low estimate.

"Well, the tragic part of it was yet to come. The sword of Damocles was hanging over Villard's head all the time, and he did not know it. He had invited the English and German capitalists to go out over the road. They had never seen anything except railroads in densely settled, densely situated, and they could not appreciate transcontinental lines. They could not understand how a road could pay that ran through stretches of unsettled country, and while they were dining off Villard's famous champagne, they were wiring back to New York and London to sell the Northern Pacific stock. The stock, which was worth 78 or thereabout when he left the East, kept dropping until it was down to 50. Villard could not succeed for the decline. Finally he was telegraphed to hasten to New York to bolster up his property. Hiring a special engine, he hurried East as fast as steam could carry him, leaving his guests to follow behind as they would. He was marching every mile of the way with a drunken orgie. Champagne bottles were flung around the cars and out of the windows, and costly cigars were trampled under foot, just for the fun of crushing them.

"The sequel of that famous trip always reminded me of Napoleon's trip to and from Moscow. He went out in glory and hurried home on a sled to save his head and crown, while his army followed in a rout behind him. Villard's traveling was a special effort to save himself from ruin, was history repeating itself."—Washington Post.

NOBLEMAN A POLICEMAN.

Must Serve Ten Years On the Force to Increase Fortune.

The strangest of all the many requests that have been made of Mr. Hanna since he took up his leadership in politics came to him when Baron von Muegge, a young German, solicited his influence to obtain an appointment as Deputy United States Marshal, or any place where the surroundings are agreeable, at any salary, or any amount of fees that might be offered.

The applicant, who is well vouched for and is undoubtedly all that he pretends to be, told a strange story of the will of his father, a wealthy but eccentric, German, who stipulated that he should serve ten years as a policeman before he should come into his fortune, her idea being to teach him self-control, develop his character and convince him of the dignity of labor.

As he did not wish to serve in such an humble capacity among his former and future associates, Von Muegge came to the United States to serve his time. He has been on the force in several cities, and is now employed as a watchman by a railroad company in Cleveland.

The man is personally known to Mr. Hanna.

His term of servitude expires in November next, and the baron is anxious to avoid the latter of his period in surroundings which will be more agreeable than those in which he has been situated for the last nine years. He would like to be deputy to the United States Marshal of the District of Columbia, if that can be done, and has asked Mr. Hanna's influence to secure that position.—Chicago Record.

Well Named.

"The month of May is very appropriately named," remarked the youth to his friend.

"In what regard?"

"Because its weather is so uncertain."

"How does the name May apply to uncertain weather?"

"Well, it may be hot or it may be cold; it may be wet or it may be dry."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

NARROW SILK FRINGE REVIVED.

Miles of Ribbon and Yards Upon Yards of Knee Band For Trimming.

(By Special Arrangement with the N.Y. Sun.)

It is evident that foulard is one of the most popular materials of the season, and the use of green on a blue and white silk seems to be a favorite contrast. Black with blue and white is another, and the black satin belt is admissible on any gown, without regard to the mixture of colors. One blue and white model has a yoke of perpendicular rows of black and white lace insertion, a black satin belt, and a full bodice of silk with fine cordings an inch apart running around below the yoke. The skirt is plainly hemmed and made loose from the lining, as all the new skirts are, and eight fine cords are set in around the tips twelve inches below the waist, beginning at the front breadth. Cording and tucking are special features of fashion, particularly in the thin gowns, and the finer the tucks the more up to date they are. Tiny tucks drawn up in shirrings close together in groups are one of the favorite effects for muslin gowns, and they are arranged around the hips on the skirts and for the yoke on the waist.

Fortunately, there are no infallible rules of fashion this season, and almost any form of decoration that can be devised will pass muster. The secret of distinction in dress lies, nevertheless, in pretty harmonies and telling contrasts of color, or in adopting neutral tints for the gowns to make them stand out amid the gorgeous colors that characterize the most generally worn style of costume.

Next in order of popularity after the foulards and transparent canvas materials is muslin of all kinds, and organdies especially. It would seem from the quaint old-time patterns that the simplicity in modes of "ye olden days" must come back to us; but the fashionable muslin gown is anything but simple in price or manner of trimming. Yards and yards of lace and insertion are used in the construction, and the only redeeming feature in the expense is the use of colored dimity for the lining. But the truly elegant muslin has the silk lining. A fashionable model in white organdie is made over mauve silk and trimmed with rows of lace and insertion set crosswise and up and down on the skirt, up and down on the waist, and around the sleeves, and a ruffle of lace finishes the full bodice where it opens at the side, and at the bottom of the skirt. Mauve satin ribbon forms the sash, and loops of the ribbon catch up the drapery at the top of the sleeves. Another example of the dressy muslin gown is of sprinkled blue and white organdie over a mauve silk lining. It is trimmed with rows of narrow blue satin ribbon sewed on.

CHILDREN'S NURSES.

THEY ARE TRAINED FOR THE OCCUPATION AND IN GREAT DEMAND.

Good Salaries Paid—The Maids Engaged Ahead of Their Graduation — Not Enough to Fill the Many Requests from Almost Every Country in the World.

In these days, when all fields of work, especially woman's work, are said to be overcrowded, it is a relief to find one exception. This exception is the profession of trained nursery maids, the demand being from fifty to a hundred per cent greater than the supply.

"We can graduate about twenty-three girls a year," said the Superintendent of the New York Training School for Nursery Maids, "and we have applicants for several hundred during that time. The subject of training nurses for the care of children is receiving each year more attention, and intelligent parents are beginning to feel that the old idea that any person can mind a baby is about exhausted.

"This training school for nursery maids is the oldest in the world, and up to two years ago it was the only one. The idea, I believe, originated with Mrs. Robert W. Chapin, who, owing to some serious mistakes of a nurse, began to think what a good thing it would be if we could have intelligent women with training to care for our babies. She thought the matter over, and selecting the Babies' Hospital as the most suitable place, offered to support two or three girls for the year if the management would give her plan a trial. This trial proved so satisfactory that the school was founded, and has been enlarged, though, as I said before, it lacks a great deal of supplying the demands for trained nurse maids. Our waiting list is large, owing to the very limited number of girls we can accommodate. An applicant, to be admitted, is required to be not under twenty and not over thirty, to be perfectly healthy, to come well recommended, and to have a good common school education. Under no circumstances do we consider an applicant where there is a suspicion of lung trouble. The reason for this is perfectly obvious. Without any knowledge of the relations between a baby and its nurse. The applicants are received on one month's probation, and if at the end of that time they prove satisfactory they finish the course of six months.

Their wages on leaving the school are in a measure regulated by us. The wages paid our graduates on first leaving us—they are always engaged several months ahead of their graduation—are $20 a month. After that time, of course, their wages depend on their own efforts, for if a nurse makes herself valuable a mother is always willing to increase the pay to a reasonable amount. Many of our graduates receive as much as $30 a month, which is very good wages when the consideration of the few expenses of a nurse. She has use of the most desirable rooms in the house, for the nursery is always a good room. When the family travels a girl goes in the same coach. Next to their parents, the children love and respect her.

"In our training we do not attempt to give medical knowledge, for we consider 'a little knowledge a dangerous thing,' but we seek to make them capable of taking a baby's bath and keeping it healthy. The nurse learns nursery hygiene in its broadest sense, with the rudiments of kindergarten. As a life work for women this profession seems might to be preferred to that of shop or factory girl. We have applications for our graduates from every State in the Union and almost every country in the world. Several of our graduates are abroad now as nurses in the families of the nobility. Of course, as I remarked before, the demand is greater than the supply, so we are forced to answer 'No' many times where we would be only too glad to supply a good nursery maid. Only a short while ago we had an application from the Czar's ladies, and the place was a desirable one, but we had no one to send there. Every girl graduated up to August is already engaged.

"During the last two years there have been similar schools founded in Montreal, Newark, Brooklyn and Detroit. All of these institutions have been modeled after this school. The managers of one of these have frequently visited us, and in one case sent their superintendent to us for several months' training. The benevolent lover institution of the kind is projected the call immediately comes: 'Have you not some one whom you can send to us to organize the work?' We are always forced to say 'No.'"—New York Sun.

That Old Cork Leg.

In the time of the Crimean war a regiment of infantry was ordered to a position where some sharp work was going on.

In the action an Irish soldier named Thady, whose father was a second-hand dealer, happened to get his left leg blown off just above the knee.

A comrade, seeing him fall, picked him up, and carried him to a place of safety.

When asked by an officer if he felt grieved at the loss of his leg he replied:

"Faith, no, yer honour; for now me purr old faythur will be able to get rid of the old cork leg that he has had on his hands so long."—Answers.

ABDUL-HAMID'S SINS.

THE RULER OF TURKEY A COWARD AND DESPISED BY HIS SUBJECTS.

Believed to be the Son of an Armenian Slave Girl, and not a Turk—His Household, Consisting of 12,000 Persons, Costs and Enormous Sum to Maintain.

As the central figure of an unique political situation, which has long been threatening to plunge all Europe into war, Abdul-Hamid, the present ruler of Turkey, is just now the object of more attention than any other man in the world; more anxiety and animosity, more criticism, and more inquiry and speculation.

Abdul-Hamid is all that eminent authorities have painted him. He has caused old hulks to be filled with obnoxious Christians and sent them to be scuttled into the depths of the Black Sea. He has decorated and otherwise honored the most notorious miscreants and assassins responsible for the outrages upon his Christian subjects. During the massacres following the raid on the Ottoman Bank of Constantinople last September, when the 6,000 victims met their doom, the Sultan could have stopped these assassinations at any moment, but allowed them to go on for three days as a concession to the rage of his people against the Armenians.

The household of the Sultan is a nightmare in flesh and blood—a monstrosity perfectly in keeping with the other monstrosities which go to make up that thing of horror called the Turkish Empire. It consists, writes a Turkish authority, who is evidently familiar with the palace, in a recent number of the Contemporary Review, of 12,000 persons. Endless sums are squandered in the support of the immoral harem, and it can be imagined by what exactions and robberies, by what tortures and rapacities this vast amount is extorted from the victims of the Turkish authorities.

Like the Pope at Rome, the Sultan is a self-constituted prisoner in his palace. Like the Pope, too, he eats alone. Habitually he drinks only water, brought to the palace in cases, under special precautions. His food is extremely plain, served in silver saucepans, presented to him at table, sealed.

ABDUL-HAMID.

Curiously enough, this hideous political monster and nondescript is fond of music, and a fair musician, frequently placing himself at the piano, in speech he is a purist, speaking well, in a slow, monotonous voice, but occasionally he lets loose a flood of expression which rises at times to the dignity of eloquence.

In addition to these general and outward aspects of his everyday life, there is a dark and sinister side which is not so apparent. In his harem, in his palace at Yildis, and in the kiosks which occupy the park around it, the Sultan has more than fifty different rooms and desks where he attends to business. No one knows where to find him at any hour of the day or evening. Uneasy as a specter and as suspicious as a wolf, he flits from room to room, often passing out of a building by a rear door and leaving the senior officer at the entrance to suppose that he is still within. But wherever he is, and whatever may be the hour of the day or evening, he is watched over and guarded by groups of human bloodhounds he has trained for that purpose. Between the principal entrance of the Yildiz Kiosk and the rooms which serve as his habitation, there are four or five doors, before which stand Albanian sentries, and through which no one can pass unless he is accompanied by a chamberlain or orderly of the bodyguard, and some of these dare introduce a visitor of any kind into the presence of their master without special permission. Where the Sultan will sleep on any given night he knows only to himself. He has more than fifty beds at his disposal, many of them in the imperial gyneceum or private abodes of his legitimate wives, and others in the palace itself, not to speak of the bolted and barred retreats into which he vanishes when he has special reasons for taking extra precautions.

These sleeping apartments are invariably separated from all other rooms by iron doors, the keys of which are masterpieces in all that pertains to the niceties of the locksmith's art. It is even said that the walls and ceilings of these apartments possess diminutated hiding places which have been elaborated by builders from Western Europe. To crown all his precautions the Sultan has two large St. Bernard dogs lying before the door of the room in which he sleeps, knowing that the power of money, as used in universal corruptions around him, will have no charm for these footfooted guardians, and that he can depend upon them to arouse him at the slightest noise or footstep that may menace him.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

FULTON'S FIRST FARE.

And First Recognition Received for Adapting Steam to Navigation.

There was one little incident in Robert Fulton's life about which few people know and which Fulton never forgot. It took place shortly before the return trip of his famous boat's voyage by steam up the Hudson River. At the time all Albany flocked to the heart to see the strange craft, but no timorous were they that few cared to board her. One gentleman, however, not only boarded her, but sought out Fulton, whom he found in the cabin, and the following conversation took place:

"This is Mr. Fulton, I presume?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you return to New York with this boat?"

"We shall try to get back, sir."

"Have you any objection to my returning with you?"

"If you will take your chances with us, sir, I have no objection."

"What is the fare?"

After a moment's hesitation, Fulton replied, "Six dollars." And when that amount was laid in his hand he gazed at it a long time, and two big tears coursed down his cheeks. Turning to the passenger, he said:

"Excuse me, sir, but this is the first pecuniary reward I have received for all my exertion in adapting steam to navigation. I would gladly consummonate the occasion with a little dinner, but I am too poor now even for that. If we meet again, I trust it will not be the case."

As history relates, the voyage terminated successfully. Four years later Fulton was sitting in the cabin of the Clermont, steaming up the North River, when a gentleman entered. Fulton glanced at him, and then sprang up and gladly shook his hand. It has his first passenger, and over a pleasant little dinner Fulton entertained his guest with the history of his success, and ended with saying that the first actual recognition of his usefulness to his fellow-men was the six dollars paid to him by his first passenger.—Harper's Round Table.

A FUNNY EYE-SIGHT.

The Indian was Immensely Proud of His Crockery Optic.

At the battle of Stone River, or Murfreesboro, as some historians name it, Lieutenant Hallack, of the Union Army had the misfortune to lose one of his eyes, in 1863, he was promoted to the first lieutenant in the regular army, and was stationed at one of the Indian posts on the plains.

He had a small blue eye of glass, but thinking that he could not obtain artificial eyes so far away from the large cities, he bought two other glass eyes, for use should his regular false eye be broken.

On a certain occasion, Lieutenant Hallock was visited by a one-eyed Indian warrior, who wished to see the "white man's funny eye." The brave was much pleased with the sight, and after awhile he besought the officer to lend him one of the extra bits of glass.

"But your sound eye is as black as coal and as big as a saucer," protested the lieutenant, "and those eyes are little and blue."

The Indian insisted, however, and at last prevailed on the lieutenant to lend him one of the eyes.

The lieutenant says that he never saw an Indian so delighted. Clad in a long shirt and an old plug hat, the brave walked around the camp as proud as Lucifer. His big black eye and his little blue eye were in amusing contrast.

He succeeded in making the other Indians believe that he could see through the blue eye as well as through his natural one, and no happier warrior than he ever strutted before admiring squaws.—Golden Days.

THE HOMING PIGEONS.

Their Aid to Rothschild before Electricity was Used in Telegraphy.

Carrier pigeons must be confused with homing pigeons, notes a writer in The Badminton Magazine. The former is a fancy pigeon, especially prized for its eye and wattles, but quite useless as a messenger. Both are cousins of the dragon, but the fancier, in the case of the carrier, has bred purely for points, color, shape, etc., while the homing pigeon fancier cares nothing for these things. With him it has been "handsome as a handsome does," and stamina with intelligence has been his aim. An article in Bell's Life, of Jan. 1, 1870, speaks of the "commercial aspect" of the homing pigeon, and from it I extract the following: "Baron Rothschild, before electricity was brought into operation, had an immense quantity of pigeons for express work. These birds brought the news of the state of the money markets in Paris, and frequently the baron cleared in England almost immediately after the news arrived. many thousand pounds by buying or selling stock. These birds did not come direct from the Continent, for they flew down to Antwerp, a distance, and the birds that were housed at Dover brought the news from Calais, when it was dispatched by another pigeon, whose home was at Sittingbourne, so on from there to Blackheath, and hence by another bird to the metropolis."

It has been generally stated, and so far without contradiction, that it was by means of the pigeon express the Rothschilds learned the result of the Battle of Waterloo several hours before the Government of the country, and, profiting by this means, were enabled to make their first great coup on the Stock Exchange.—New York Times.

MARK TWAIN'S GIFT TO HIS WIFE.

Intended His Last Work as a Remembrance of their Wedding.

It must have been because the author of "The Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc" was on his travels in the uttermost parts of the earth when the narrative was published in book form that one of the editions was lost. It was not at that time carried out. It was his purpose, when he began work on the story in Florence, in 1893, that it should be a silver-wedding present to his wife. He says that she never knew of his design, and when the book was published there was nothing in it to apprise her of it. "Let us rediffy," writes Mr. Clemens from London, under date of April 9; and, agreeably to his wish, a leaf will be inserted in future issues of the Recollections of Joan, bearing this inscription:

A COLORED MAN'S SUCCESS.

He Has Proved Himself a Capable and Successful Farmer.

Barton F. Powell, of Albany, Ga., a negro thirty-two years old, is one of the most successful farmers in the state. Twelve years ago he had saved up $2,000, with which he bought 500 acres of land. He went to work on it and cleared $2,500 the first year. He has continued to add to his landed possessions, paying spot cash for every farm purchased, and is now the owner of 2,100 acres of land, from which he raises 1,000 bales of cotton annually. Besides his success on the farm he has developed the country supply-store idea, and thus rakes in thousands of dollars a year. He also owns a comfortable residence in Bainbridge. His profits last year were over $7,000. He says that the question of social recognition doesn't trouble him so long as he can get financial recognition at the bank.—New York Tribune.

Flowers as an Antiseptic.

It is said that the odors of flowers are antiseptic and that during epidemics the workmen in perfume factories are exempt from disease.

Some essences are good for the nerves. Amberyris, it is said, has the power to clear the brain and induce thought. Musk used in infinitesimal quantities acts as a tonic. Citron and aloes are soothing to the nerves. Strong perfumes, as a rule, are stimulating, while lavender, subtle odors incline to drowsiness.

A chemist believes that each scent can be symbolized by a musical note, and a French romanticist says, on inhaling the fragrance of flowers on the Western Ocean, "I hear the horns on the air from the deck of a vessel. "I could not tell whether I breathed music or heard flowers."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Tiger With a Glass Eye.

This isn't a stuffed tiger, but a real live one, ferocious and strong. He is at present in the menagerie at Stuttgart, and looks as fierce with his glass eye as with the real one.

A serious affection of the muscles caused the beast to lose the sight of one eye. As the public didn't appreciate a one-eyed tiger, the beast was put under certain conditions and the useless organ removed. This was a ticklish operation, several strong keepers holding the beast down while the eye was taken out.

He was measured for a new eye, which had to be made with a special degree of ferocity. For the first week he tried hard to rub it out; but he now rests contented as the only wild animal with a glass eye.—New York Tribune.

AN EPISODE.

She pours the tea and as her hand
Above the dainty china lingers
I raise my own right hand aloft
And seize upon the jeweled fingers.

I.

"You'll break the teacup, Jack!" she cries,
And on the floor I hear it clatter:
"Oh, what care I for cups," I say,
"While you have got a heart to shatter!"

II.

"Don't break it, that's a dear," she says,
The cup I smash then with laughter.
I tell her it is not her cup
But heart, her humble servant's after.

IV.

"You've broken that long since," she sighs,
"I never can forgive you, never."
And—well! she did and now she's come
To make and pour my tea forever.

THE RED HAND.

"Look! It is the sign of the Red Hand." I looked up at the ceiling and saw what appeared to be the impression of a hand that had been dipped in some colored fluid.

"What is it?" I asked anxiously.

"It means that you are a marked man," said Alexis Petrovitch. "Haven't you heard of the League of the Red Hand, a particular desperate inner circle of nihilists? You must have done something to earn their vengeance. They give their victims three signs before the death sentence is put into execution, and that is plainly one of them. Twice again you will see the mysterious Red Hand, and then—" He looked me significantly in the face.

I was attached to the British embassy at St. Petersburg, and some important information had come into my possession quite accidentally respecting a nihilist plot. This intelligence I had communicated personally by word of mouth to the chief of the highest and most trusted officials of the Czar. I had told nobody else, not even my very faithful friend Alexis, and the circumstances were such that it was impossible to conceive how the matter could have come to the knowledge of the society.

Every attempt was made to discover by whom and by what means the "sign" had been impressed on the ceiling, but without success. The room was a lofty one, and it was difficult to understand how the ceiling was reached. The affair was very mysterious, but the nihilist loves mystery.

I was made somewhat uncomfortable by this grim warning, but I was assured by those who professed to know the peculiar methods of the league that I was in no danger until I had received the third sign. So I was not greatly alarmed for the present.

I had been offered, through my chief, an appointment in England that was in many respects superior to the one I held, but I had become greatly attached to my life in St. Petersburg, where I had made many excellent friends, and I declined. It was now proposed that I should reconsider my decision.

I did not care for it to be thought that I had shown the white feather, and, to be candid, as the days went on and I did not receive any fresh sign, I began to treat the matter lightly. Perhaps to show how little I thought of it, that I had made the important disclosures which had frustrated the nihilist plot was not, after all, known to that body.

One night, some ten days later, I was invited by a lady of my acquaintance to share her box at the opera. As I am passionately fond of music, and the society of this lady's family was very agreeable to me, I was glad to accept.

The opera was "Carmen," and the house was very crowded and hot. Before the last act I left the private box to smoke a cigarette in the foyer, where I expected to meet Petrovitch and other friends. There was a great crush at the buffet, and as I was raising a glass of a cooling drink to my lips my elbow was accidentally jerked by a man standing beside me, and some of the liquid was spilled over my clothes. The gentleman was profuse in his apologies, and I retired to a less crowded part of the saloon to wipe my garments dry.

As I drew out my white pocket handkerchief I noticed that it bore some red stains that I was positive were not there when I left home. I shook out its folds and held it spread out in front of me.

It was the sign of the Red Hand!

"How white you look!" said Alexis, whom I met on my way back to the box. "What is the matter?"

"I have just received the second sign," I said in a low voice.

"Good heavens," he exclaimed. "Then be advised and leave St. Petersburg at once. In your native country you may possibly escape—they may not think it worth while to follow you—but to remain here means certain death."

I became convinced that Alexis was right. It was unsafe to remain longer in Russia. When I reached home that night, I wrote two letters before I went to bed. One was a resignation of my post in St. Petersburg, and the other an acceptance of the appointment in England.

I lost no time in making all necessary arrangements for a prompt departure. One thing gave me great pleasure—Alexis had agreed to accompany me. He had long promised himself a visit to England, and this was an excellent opportunity. I was to take a rather lengthy holiday before entering on my new duties, and should be very fond of his companionship.

On the day that we set off Petrovitch and I drove down to the railway station together. As we were proceeding into the conveyance an elderly man in ragged garments came forward with newspapers. I thrust one into my pocket.

We secured a railway carriage to ourselves for the journey, and were soon steaming out of the station. We sat for some time chatting, and of course the conversation was largely about the danger that was hanging over myself.

"Then you have received no third sign?" said Alexis.

"No," I replied. "The secret of my departure was, I think, well kept, and if they wanted to carry out their murderous designs I am afraid it will be necessary for them to follow me to England. I may consider myself safe now."

"Yes, I hope so. By the way, what do the critics say about the new play last night?"

"Here is a paper," I said, taking it from my pocket.

Petrovitch unfolded it. As he opened it out in front of him he uttered a cry of surprise and alarm and dropped it on the floor between us. He was pale as a sheet.

"What is it?" I cried. "Have you read some bad news?"

"Look for yourself," he said huskily.

I snatched up the paper, and at the first glance my blood seemed to freeze.

The sign of the Red Hand!

There, right across one of the two center pages, was the familiar red impress of a hand, just as it had appeared on the ceiling and on my pocket handkerchief. This, then, was the third warning, and I was now a doomed man! Any moment might bring my death.

We sat for a few moments in silence. Then Alexis said:

"I assume you are armed?"

"I have my revolver here, loaded and ready," I replied.

"And so have I. Our great danger will be before we get to the frontier; I am convinced of that. We must use the utmost vigilance."

"Fortunately we have a carriage to ourselves," I said, "and the doors are both locked. We shall have to be on our guard when we stop at the train."

The first part of the journey was long and tiring, and as the day wore on and night began to gather in we became sleepy and silent. Alexis curled himself up in his corner, with the collar of his fur cloak pulled up over his eyes, and dozed. As I sat looking at him I noticed how very similarly we were dressed. I was wearing a cloak and a hat very closely resembling his own, and, muffled up as we were, it would have been difficult for a stranger to have distinguished one from the other.

It was a very dark night, and, wishing to see what kind of a country we were passing through, I suddenly turned my face to the window, and, pressing my nose to the glass I endeavored to peer out in the gloom. As I pressed my nose to the glass I distinctly saw a man's face on the outside looking in. It instantly disappeared.

With one hand on my revolver I gazed out steadily and looked out. The train was rushing along at a great speed, and I nearly lost my cap in the wind, but there was nobody to be seen.

"How you startled me!" cried Petrovitch. "What on earth is the matter?"

"I saw a face at the window."

"Imagination, my dear fellow, or, more, probably, your own reflection."

"No; I am positive it was neither. It was a fair man, with a beard, while I am dark, with only a moustache."

Alexis suggested we should exchange seats and let him experiment. We did so, and under my direction he imitated my movements in looking out of the window.

"It is certainly suspicious," he said. "We must be on our guard."

We did not go back to our original seats, but remained as we were. Each held his revolver in readiness. We sat thus talking for about half an hour. All that time our eyes were fixed on the one or the other of the windows. Petrovitch was not so vigilant.

He would gaze at the glass for a few minutes, and then turn and speak to me.

Suddenly I thought I saw something moving on the side where Alexis was sitting. As I bent forward I could discern a face dimly, but right against the glass was a revolver which a hand was directing at the head of my friend.

"Down! Down for your life!" I shouted to Alexis, but the same instant there was a loud report, and the bullet, cutting a clean hole through the glass, laid poor Petrovitch along the seats.

At the same moment—indeed, I believe half a second before—I had fired my own pistol. As I peered out of the window I saw a man retreating along the footboard toward the rear of the train. Again I fired, but without result.

The train stopped, and a careful search was made, but no man at all resembling the one I had seen was to be found. He must have occupied a compartment next to that occupied by the train, if they were to be believed, had been any person leave a carriage while it was in motion.

Meanwhile it was found that my friend Alexis was not, as I had feared, killed, though he is, unfortunately, badly injured for life. A skillful doctor was found at the next station, and he is today hale and hearty. Probably the League of the Red Hand never knew of the blunder that resulted from our exchange of seats, and also believed that its intended vengeance on myself had been carried out to the death. The actual assassin, however, had a very narrow escape, for a cap was picked up on the line with a bullet hole in the crown. I had missed my man by less than an inch.

THE KING OF GREECE.

ASCENDED THE THRONE WHEN A BOY OF SEVENTEEN YEARS.

The Greeks Have Desired Him to Abdicate and Allow Prince Constantinos to Reign Instead—The Second Son, Prince George, a Strong Character.

Three and thirty years ago a picturesque scene was enacted in the British capital. A deputation of Greeks—we ought to call them Hellenes, but we do not—a deputation of Greeks demanded an audience of Frederick VII, the old King of Denmark, and asked leave to offer their country's crown to his great-nephew, George of Schleswig-Holstein. For reply the monarch turned to the handsome stripling who was presented by and had him take his place beside him on the dais, saluting him as his brother sovereign. Four months passed, and the youth of seventeen was proclaimed King at Athens, Egbert, Prince of Wales, being his sponsors. Ever since then the Greeks, by right be, the impatient Greeks asserted he was man enough for them, and before the end of the month they declared him of age, finally placing the reins of government in his hands on the last day of October, 1863. Fourteen days more were then told off, and the aged Frederick died, leaving his own throne free for King Christian, the father of the new Greek King, this forming perhaps the solitary instance of a son being an older sovereign than his parent.

Having watched him carefully through the first four years of his reign, and seen him steer clear of all strife, which caused some stir at the time, secured the young monarch's hand for one of her Granddutchesses, Olga Constantinovana, her family considering that the imperial bride's blood was greatly improved by the fact that she was only fifteen years of age at the time of her marriage. King George, who did everything early in life, became a father when he was only twenty-two, and within eleven months his little bride had presented him with a second son, the magnificent young giant, George, hero of the present hour. The gift of a series of stalwart Princes was hailed with as much satisfaction as the Ionian Islands, that other present which the Prince from the north bestowed upon his new subjects. Their King was a Lutheran, a foreigner, and not skilled in their native tongue; but his boys were born on the soil, and bore a promise that not only should they be Orthodox, but that the first lisping of their baby mouths should be Greek. In consideration of this, as time passed they almost, never quite, consented to forgive their sovereign for being a stranger. They have demanded that he should abdicate in favor of his son a score of times in as many years, it is true; still, when he replied that he would do so with pleasure, but that it would be to the detriment of all concerned, they have gone home in peace, consenting to put up for a little longer with the man who has increased the area of their country by one-third and won for them a leading place among the secondary Powers of Europe.

Should the King abdicate his successor would of course be the Duke of Sparta, more commonly known in Athens as Prince Constantinos. Many think, however, that Constantinos, the Crown Prince himself, would prefer the Athleticos Prinkyos, George. However, even Greece, who passes her days in doing strange things, would hardly venture such an innovation as that. Moreover, you cannot be both Nelson and a King, and sailor George means to be Nelson, find a Napoleon where he may. In alluding to a preference for the younger brother is by no means insinuated that the Crown Prince is unpopular. He is admired, liked and respected, as he well deserves, but he is somewhat silent and retiring.

King George, a true constitutional sovereign, wants to follow rather than to lead his people, but he will not follow to their destruction. As has happened before, he will pull his team up on the edge of the precipice—if they will go that far—the Crown Prince, farsighted, level-headed and wary, in one degree more cautious than his father, and will advise keeping a little, just a little, further away from the abyss. Prince George, who is neither Greek nor Danish, but a combination of both, pure and simple, looks impatiently at his seniors and tugs at the lace on his sleeve, yearning as did his forbears to seize on some Normandy or some Anglia or to take his Long Serpent up Thames and every navigable river within his reach, and what, he would say, is beyond the reach of a man with a stout heart and a strong arm? Prince Nicholas and Prince Andreas ask only to be allowed to go wherever George will take them.—Pall Mall Gazette.

It was before an Irish trial justice. The evidence was all in, and the plaintiff's attorney had made a long, eloquent speech, and so had the defendant. The defendant's attorney took the floor. "What are you doing?" asked the justice, as the lawyer began. "Going to present our side of the case." "I don't want to hear both sides argued. It has a tendincy to confuse the court." So the defendant's lawyer sat down.—New York Evening Post.

The Advantage.

"My wife has been studying geology, and she knows a lot of rocks that I can't find a place to sit down."

"What will you do about it?"

"I've induced her to take up astronomy."

"Is that any better?"

"Of course; she can't collect specimens."—Chicago Record.

A TUMBLE IN PRICES.

A war for existence is now on among the smaller bicycle manufacturers and the public will benefit by it by getting wheels at greatly reduced rates. The Pope Manufacturing Company reduced the price of their wheel yesterday, and most of the other leading manufacturers will fall in line. The news comes as a surprise to all and many opinions are hazarded as to the result. The spring trade, the greatest of the year, is over, but the reduction of the prices will enable many who hitherto could not afford a wheel to invest in one. The bicycle has become such a necessity to the American people that great cars should be exercised in its manufacture and none but the best material used. If the cut in the prices will result in the extinction of the many small companies that make up wheels out of the cheapest material to be had without regard to the life and limb of the riders, then the movement just started will be a good thing for wheelmen and the community, for no one cares to have a relative or friend brought home in small pieces as a result of a fatal defect in the wheel they were riding.

WONDERFUL PROGRESS.

Thanks to Dr. Warde and the North Plainfield Board of Education, the first year of the North Plainfield High School came to a most successful termination last night. The really wonderful progress made in the school in the last year was commented on by the State and county superintendents of schools, and both had nothing but the highest praise to offer. The commencement last Thursday was the culminating point of it all. The exercises were of a kind that would do credit to any high school in the State. The citizens of North Plainfield should realize the fact that their public school is among the best in the State, and that it is due to Dr. Warde and the members of the Board. We offer our congratulations to them for the successful accomplishment of their aims to make North Plainfield foremost in educational facilities.

COLLEGIATE ATHLETES.

Nowadays the collegiate boat race seem to attract universal interest. Every body wanted to hear the result of the triangular race between Cornell, Yale and Harvard, at Poughkeepsie, yesterday, and when the announcement came, hundreds of dollars changed hands. All the collegiate athletic contests have risen to a prominent place during the last few years. Now all of the small boys know everyone of the prominent athletes by name and discuss their abilities and defects with the air of experts. A few years ago scarcely anyone outside of the circle of the friends of the college boys knew about the games that were played and the races that were rowed. The college boy has increased in numbers with great rapidity and so has the interest in his achievements.

THE PLAINFIELD SCHOOLS.

Twenty-seven years have passed since the Plainfield High School made its initial bow to the public. Thursday night twenty young men and women were added to the long list of those who have graduated from that institution. The commencement exercises were eminently successful. The Board was fortunate in securing a talented speaker, President Merrill E. Gates, of Amherst College, for the occasion. His address was well worth listening to. Plainfield can well be proud of her schools and of the men who are doing their best for the good of the city and the education of her sons and daughters.

The New York and New Jersey Bridge Company must now begin anew in preparing and filing general preliminary plans for the approval of the Secretary of War, and this will require two or three months' work. If these delays continue the present generation will have little chance of seeing the bridge in practical operation. New Jersey is in sore need of some change by which trains can be run direct to and from New York without the delays and inconvenience incident to the use of ferryboats.—New York Tribune.

SOME REMEDY NEEDED.

If the members of the Plainfield Common Council were obliged to sit on their piazzas these summer evenings and digest the amount of dust and dirt that the residents along the line of the Plainfield street railway are compelled to, it would not be long before some action would be taken to remedy the difficulty. It is one of the greatest impositions that the people living on the route of the trolley have to put up with, and especially is this true from Grant avenue to Dunellen. Residents along that thoroughfare are compelled often to forego the pleasure of enjoying their piazzas owing to the unbearable quantity of dust raised by the trolley. On the trolley road between Elizabeth and Newark, a special car for sprinkling the roadway is kept constantly in use. Some similar action should be taken here.

A WISE PRECAUTION.

The action of the Scotch Plains township committee in attempting to stop coasting on Grenside Park hill is a very commendable one and the sooner the ordinance that will have that effect is passed the better. The hill is a dangerous one and already several cyclists have had serious accidents there. It is far better to take precautions to stop the coasting and not wait until some foolhardy rider receives fatal injuries through a tumble on that hill.

NEWARK BARBERS IN LINE.

The barbers of Newark are following the example set by their fellow craftsmen in Plainfield some time ago and have started a movement to close their shops on Sunday. It is planned to close them only through the summer, however.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

Partners Liable for the Firm Until Notice of Dissolution is Given.

Some time ago the case of Herman Boker & Co. vs. Cobb & Archer, partners, came up for trial before Judge Van Syckel in the Supreme Court at Elizabeth. It appeared from the evidence in the case that the plaintiffs had sold hardware etc. amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of $700. The evidence showed that these goods were ordered by one of the firm of Cobb & Archer and ordered to be charged to the firm of Cobb & Archer. The evidence also showed that at the time the goods were ordered the firm of Cobb & Archer had been dissolved for some months. The defendants sought to avoid payment on the ground that there was no such firm in existence at the time of the purchase.

Assemblyman Codington, who represented the plaintiffs, however, insisted that all the partners would be liable under such circumstances where no notice of the dissolution of the firm had been given, either to the creditors in person or by advertisement. The court on Saturday handed down its decision sustaining this view, giving the plaintiffs judgement for the full amount. Lawyers Hetfield and Kirch represented the defendants.

TO REORGANIZE THE CATHOLIC CLUB.

A Meeting Was Held Sunday Afternoon to Discuss the Project.

The members of the Plainfield Catholic Club met at their club house on Liberty street Sunday afternoon for the purpose of discussing the advisability of reorganizing the club and putting it on a better foundation than heretofore. George J. Tobin was chosen temporary chairman, and the discussion on the subject was thorough and interesting. Nearly everyone of the seventy-five members present were heartily in favor of reorganizing and they expressed their opinion that way.

In accordance with a motion the following members were appointed a committee to draft resolution and by-laws and ascertain how many of the members are in favor of reorganization. They will report at a meeting to be held next Sunday afternoon at the same place and hour.

Renewing Life.

Dr. Campbell's Capsuloids Supply the Blood with Natural Iron, Renewing the Vitality and Restoring Health.

A celebrated German doctor some time ago suggested that all flour of which bread is made should, by law, contain a certain percentage of iron. If this was done, he claimed, death would only come with old age.

Physicians concede that both health and life depend upon the iron or Hæmoglobin in the blood. When this exists in abundance the blood is rich, pure and strong and free from the germs of disease; the pulsation of the heart is regular, the circulation continuous, there is no palpitation, respiration is easy, and the brain is clear.

Modern methods of preparing food are fast diminishing the quantity of iron that nature intended man should get from that food. Science long strove to supply the deficiency. All failed until Dr. Campbell, one of the leading physicians of England, discovered that bullock's blood was charged with iron or Hæmoglobin. He extracted this iron and enclosed it in a gelatine covering in which form it was first administered to chronic sufferers from anæmia and chlorosis. The effect was so marvellous that experiments were then made with severe cases of paralysis, locomotor ataxia, nervous prostration, scrofula and rheumatism. The results have placed Dr. Campbell's name among the most honored savants of the age.

When a Capsuloid is swallowed it goes down the throat like a piece of jelly without injuring the teeth, the gelatine covering melts in a moment and the dissolved Hæmoglobin or natural iron passes directly into the blood, making it rich, pure and strong.

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids are sold by all leading druggists at 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50, or sent direct at the same price from the office of The Capsuloid Company, Downing Building, 106 Fulton Street, New York City.

OFF TO THE GOLDEN GATE

SPECIAL TRAIN OF ENDEAVORERS START FOR THE CONVENTION.

It Will be Held in San Francisco This Year and New Jersey is to be Well R-presented in the Convention.

No international Christian Endeavor convention for some time past has aroused the interest that is felt in the grand gathering which will be held in San Francisco, California, July 7 12. Besides the meetings that will be held with the finest speakers the world affords, music like a great sea of harmony, and a general atmosphere of Christian Endeavor enthusiasm, which will send the delegates home to do such work as they never did before, the trip offers other attractions, which conventions held in the east or middle states could not afford. Railroads have made special rates, and a large number will gratify the desire of many years to see the sights of the great west.

Rev. T. E. Davis, of Bound Brook, is transportation manager for New Jersey, and everything has been arranged for the comfort and pleasure of those who will go from this State. A special train, in two sections, is now on the way, and about four hundred applications for tickets were received. The first section left New York at nine o'clock Monday a. m., closely followed by the second, stopping at Plainfield to pick up a number of enthusiastic travelers. The journey will be a long one, but every hour will be full of pleasure, as all know who have ever traveled in a Christian Endeavor special train.

Among those from this city and vicinity who go on the excursion are the following:

Plainfield—Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Roberts, Miss Mary E Robinson, Miss Adeline B. Parsons, Miss Barber, Miss Bullock, Daniel Loizeaux, Miss Janes, Elie Loizeaux, Alfred Loizeaux.

Bound Brook—Miss Jessie Cook, Rev. and Mrs. T. E. Davis, Mrs. Thomas Davenport, Miss Elfleda Dunham, Miss Mary Hickman, Edwin Powelson, Miss Alice Rockfellow, Miss Addie Tappen.

New Germantown—Mrs. R. T. Cook.

Raritan—Chris Ehni, Edward C. Ehni, J. C. Kinyon, Mrs. A. B. Rohn.

Somerville—Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Bateman, N. Y. Dungan, Mrs. A. A. Emery, Miss Leigh, Miss R. Anna Miller, Miss Amelia Porter, Mrs. G. W. Sanborn.

Basking Ridge—Mrs Oscar Conklin, Miss Conklin.

Dunellen—Rev. A. I. Martine.

Kingston—Rev. and Mrs. D. D. Warne.

East Millstone—Rev. A. P. Peake, Miss Anna Ribble.

Another Plainfield representative at the convention will be Miss Elma Thayer, who will be in San Francisco at the time of the great gathering, and has been appointed a delegate by her pastor.

"Last summer one of our grandchildren was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory, of Fredericktown, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed, then we tried Chamberlaine Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, Park & North Aves.

An informal hop was held at the Hotel Hunterston, Saturday evening. It was attended by a number of the residents of Netherwood and the guests of the hotel. The evening was a delightful one and all had a very enjoyable time.

Not on the Ice Wagon.

John Morton denies that he was on the ice wagon which was nearly run into by a girl on a wheel last Friday afternoon near Scheuer's grocery store.

REVIEW ILLUSTRATED.

TWO SPECIAL SERVICES OF THE CONGREGATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Missionary Day Was Observed in the Morning Session While a Novel and Interesting Review Was Held in the Evening.

The next generation of men and women in the Plainfield Congregational church will certainly be a generation trained to interest in missions, for the children of the Sunday school contribute regularly to home and foreign missions, and have periodical missionary days, when they hear reports from the mission stations to which they send contributions and listen to missionary addresses. Such a missionary day was observed Sunday morning, the quarterly review of the school being postponed until evening, in order that it might be conducted by means of stereopticon views.

After the opening exercises, the report of the missionary committee was read by the superintendent, J. A. Robinson, showing that during the year the school had appropriated for missionary work, $107, partly for home and partly for foreign missions. Letters from two workers in the home field were then read, one from Mrs. Anna Wade Richardson, the principal of a mission school for colored children in Marshallville, Georgia, and one from R. A. Rowley, telling of work in the great west.

A brief but very bright and entertaining address by Rev. M. E. Dwight, followed, telling in a few words the fascinating story of William Cory, the first missionary to India, and teaching lessons of zeal and devotion in extending Christ's kingdom in the world today. The attendance at the service was large, and the exercises were much enjoyed by all.

The review lesson which was held in the evening covered the Sunday-school lessons of the past six months. The pupils of the Sunday-school, with their parents and friends, attended in large numbers, and thoroughly enjoyed the novel way in which the review was conducted. A large screen was placed in the front of the church, and after the opening exercises the lights were extinguished and a number of fine stereopticon views, illustrative of the lessons of the past half-years, were thrown upon the screen.

The titles and golden texts of the lessons were read by J. A. Robinson, superintendent of the school, with occasionally a portion of the lesson text, while Rev. C. L. Goodrich explained each picture in an informal talk, carrying the thread of the history straight down from the ascension of Christ to the close of the council at Jerusalem. A map of the Roman Empire, ahead of the Emperor Claudius, various painters' conceptions of the appearance of the apostles most prominent in the texts and many the colored photographs of the cities and buildings referred to, were included in the views, as well as the best-known pictures of the occurrences described in the apostolic history.

DEATH OF AN OLD RESIDENT.

Miss Kiely Passed Away After a Long Illness.

Miss Bessie Kiely, who has been a resident of Plainfield since its early days, died at her home on the corner of Spooner avenue and West Fourth street, early Sunday morning. She was ill for two months before her death and has been gradually failing until death came. The end was a painless and peaceful one. Miss Kiely was in her sixty-second year, and has been a resident of Plainfield for forty-six years. She had many friends in this city and was greatly beloved by all who knew her. She was an aunt to Sergeant Kiely, of the Plainfield police force.

Mr. C. L. Hasbrouck, a druggist at Mendon, Mich., says all of the good testimonials that have been published by the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy could be duplicated in that town. For sale By T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, Park and North Aves.

You Can't Do It

It isn't possible to boil any oatmeal long enough to break the starch cells, and so render it digestible. Starch is not converted into digestible material until 250 degrees is reached, and 212 degrees is the maximum boiling temperature. Oatmeal can only be made digestible by dry heat, and is the only oatmeal in which the starch is rendered soluble by bursting the starch granules. This makes it the only safe oatmeal for infants, children, and those of weak digestion.

Be sure and get the package with the big H-O on the end.

WILL STOP COASTING.

IT IS A DANGEROUS PRACTICE ON GLENSIDE HILL.

So the Scotch Plains Township Committee Has Introduced an Ordinance To Prevent It—Other Business Done.

The Scotch Plains Township Committee held a meeting last Friday night and passed to its second reading an ordinance regulating the speed of bicycles to twelve miles an hour. The purpose of the ordinance is to prevent coasting upon Glenside Hill, where so many serious accidents have recently happened. Town Clerk Hand was instructed to post a sign at the top of the hill and one at the bottom, warning cyclists of their danger. The committee decided that it could not at present grant the petition sent in by citizens for more lights in the town, as the appropriation for street lighting for the current year has already been used up.

Winfield S. Abgleman, of Plainfield, appeared before the committee as counsel for Bucket and Engine Company to urge it to purchase the company's fire engine for $150, with the proviso that it could be bought back again by the company for the same price at any time within five years. In view of the fact that W. C. Stanbery, executor of the Baker estate, which has a claim of $150 against the company, objected to the sale on the ground that it would interfere with the settlement of the claim, Mr. Angleman was told to talk with the township counsel, ex-Judge W. R. Codington, about the matter.

Before adjournment the township treasurer was ordered to pay a number of bills for crushed stone and for work upon the township roads.

A Suburb for Elizabeth.

Hon. John R. McPherson, former United States Senator from New Jersey, is now at Elizabeth-looking after his landed interests at Colonial Park, a few miles this side of Elizabeth. It is planned to make Colonial Park a charming little suburb to the county seat, and with that object in view the promoters of the place are trying to persuade some of the Elizabeth people to build handsome residences there.

DOWNED PERTH AMBOY.

THE CRESCENTS DEFEATED THE UNIONS BY A BIG SCORE.

The Fun Began in the First Inning and Continued to the Last—Lots of Runs Scoring by the Home Team.

Perth Amboy's strongest aggregation of baseball players came to Plainfield Saturday afternoon and were mercilessly defeated by the Plainfield Crescents by a score of 25 to 10. The high score was more due to the fault of the Unions, as the Perth Amboy nine was called, than to anything else, but it was very evident that the visitors were outplayed and fairly beaten.

Those who saw the game with the Westfield Athletic Club a week ago were pleasantly surprised by the showing that the Crescents made. Several very needful changes had been made in the team and Saturday last everybody played good ball. Vroom, a catcher from Staten Island, was behind the bat and made a very satisfactory impression. He was strong and quick as a cat while his throwing to bases was a delight to the lovers of the National game. At batting, he was a great addition to the team. McLarty was hit rather freely during the game, but it did not lose his head and pitched a good game. He made the only home run of the game by a hit in far left field.

The fun began at the start and the rooters were given a chance to yell immediately. Some costly errors by the Amboy infield, two passed balls, and singles by Lederer, Symous, Corbin, Mumford and Vroom, netted seven runs before the agony was ended. In the third, Bradley, the visiting pitcher was batted freely and three more runs were the result. Then Noonan, an old league player, was put in the box. After one inning to get used to him, a three-bagger by Vroom, a single by Lederer and more errors on the part of the visitors allowed four men to cross the plate. Then they took it easy until the last inning when ten runs were scored on errors and a home run by McLarty. There was lots of base running in which Polhemus especially distinguished himself.

The fielding of the visitors was very ragged at times while they showed remarkably poor judgment while on bases. Only two bases were stolen off Vroom while he nabbed several in their efforts to get to second and third. In the sixth inning, the visitors had a batting streak and with two doubles and five singles made things lively for a time. Haddon Ivins, of the Perth Amboy Chronicle, the scorer, woke up and delighted the cranks with an exhibition of Amboy enthusiasm.

Although the score was uneven, there was plenty of excitement and the crowd was satisfied with the game.

The score in detail was as follows:

DAY OF FATE AT HAND.

BLOOD-CURDLING REVENGE AND SELF-DESTRUCTION PLANNED.

His Neighbors Allege That Liebie Says That His Day Has Come, But That Four of His Friends Must Go First.

Next Sunday is the day of fate for Burnett Liebie, an old resident from the clump of dwellings spoken of as Greenbrook, or Sebring's Mills. He says that he has been called, that his time has come and that on Sunday next he will be laid six feet under clay. But before he goes, and as he says this a wild smile lights up his rough features, there are four of his friends that must precede and then he will join them down in the cold damp earth. Such, at least, is the story that all his neighbors tell, and from their earnest faces it would seem as if they spoke the truth.

Last Friday, an old man was brought before Justice Storms, of New Market, on the charge of carrying a revolver and threatening the lives of his neighbors with it. He was held for the Grand Jury and was bailed out by his son and a friend. There was apparently nothing very strange about the case, but a queer story has leaked out that puts a far different face on the matter. The authorities for the facts are the farmers living in Greenbrook and they have sworn to the truth of their statements.

Greenbrook is a small settlement in the neighborhood of the mill and electric plant of Charles F. Sebring, about three miles from Dunellen. The road that leads to it turns off from the main thoroughfare to Bound Brook, at the corner where Mannion's roadhouse stands. A mile down this road lives Burnett Liebie with his two sons. He is fifty-seven years old.

For nearly a year, his neighbors say, he has been acting queerly at times. He said that his time had almost come and that soon he would be under six feet of clay. Then he told them that there were four others there that must go before and he told them how he had planned to invite the fated four to his house on the event*ful night and there drink and make* merry. He had two big casks of wine that they would broach and all would be well until midnight, when he would draw his revolver from his pocket and kill them all in cold blood and then end his own life. He constantly carried a revolver in the breast pocket and refused to give it up, despite the earnest solicitations of his sons.

Two weeks ago, the Greenbrook people say, he declared that the time when he was to go was only two weeks off, and he picked out next Sunday as the day for the ending of his life. Then he stopped work. Next he announced who his companions in the will revelries were to be. The four were August VonEssen, David Jones, John and Jacob Sebring, all farmers living in the immediate neighborhood, according to the testimony of the four and the others that heard the remarks, and they were many, for Liebie has talked of it often.

Liebie says that once John Sebring called him a name, a mean, contemptible name, and that "Jake" Sebring laughed and August VonEssen heard it. For that they must die. The reason he has for the doing away with Jones was not learned. The farmers there say that the man is stark mad on that subject, although perfectly rational on any other. They say his madness is caused by drink.

While he is accused of saying much, the first of his alleged actions took place on Monday evening of last week. Ed Jones, the Beekman boys and the Lavender children drove up to Abram Giddis' home to get their pay for picking strawberries. When they returned it was dark. They were just going up the road to Greenbrook when a shadowy form stepped out from behind the bushes and pointed something at them. There was a flash, a crash, and a bullet sailed over their heads. Two more followed in rapid succession and then the horses broke into a run and soon carried the children out of danger. It is alleged that Liebie was the one that did the shooting.

Thursday night Liebie came to the rear door of the VonEssen homestead. Mrs. VonEssen went to the door while her husband stood unobserved behind the door. The story told by Mr. and Mrs. VonEssen is that Liebie came and demanded VonEssen, and his wife said that he was out at the barn. Then he raved about the four men and continued to say that his time had come.

"I'll pour wine into 'em," he chuckled, "and then I'll give 'em something they'll never forget." Then his wandering mind turned in the direction of religion. At last he departed for the barn with the injunction to the frightened wife that he would soon return and fix her.

The door was quickly barred and the couple retired to the upper story to spend the long night anxiously watching for the mad man.

Then Liebie went to the home of Mr. Johnson, nearby, where "Jake" Sebring was calling. "Jake" quietly departed at the first appearance of Liebie, fearing trouble. At 10:30 o'clock, three shots were fired down the road and the farmers supposed that Liebie was practicing for his promised slaughter.

The next day a warrant was sworn out for Liebie's arrest, and he was taken to the New Brunswick jail to be released Saturday night after bail of $400 was furnished by James Mannion and Charles Liebie. Then the Elder Liebie returned to his home and sat about the place waiting for the time to come.

The neighbors are very much worried over the present state of affairs, and it is needless to say that none of the four will accept any invitation from Liebie for Sunday, even if the most alluring time is promised.

TROTTING IN FAST TIME.

TWO EXCITING MATCHES AT THE GENTLEMEN'S DRIVING PARK.

There Were Several Single Heats Trotted Besides—Summaries of the Principal Matches Saturday Afternoon.

Lovers of fast horses and good sport have found the Gentlemen's Driving Park a very congenial place on Saturday afternoons, this month. The attendance at the matches on those occasions number up in the hundreds. Plainfield and the surrounding towns have a number of fast trotters and pacers and their owner like to meet weekly and try conclusions with their friends.

Saturday afternoon, there was a large crowd at the track and a number of the prominent men from the city were present. There were a number of single heats between some of the local horses, but the events of the afternoon were two matches which were closely contested and furnished lots of excitement to the audience in the grand stand.

One match was between the horses of W. E. Brock, Thomas Brantingham and J. W. Johnson. Three heats were trotted and the finishes in all were very close. Brock's "Active" passed under the wire a winner by a nose from Johnson's "Sidnut" in the first heat. Brantingham drove his pacer, "Myrtle Twig," to victory in the second heat, winning by a small distance. "Active" took the third heat in a race equally exciting. The fastest time was 2:26.

The second match, although not quite as fast, was of equal interest. The horses of Mr. Hayes, W. L. Smalley and N. B. Smalley were the contestants. Three heats were trotted and each horse finished first in one.

The summaries of the races were as follows:

FIRST MATCH.

W. E. Brock's b. g. "Active" (Campbell)	1 2 1

J. W. Johnson's b. h. "Sidnut" (Osborn)	3 3 2

Had Sold It For Years.

On a charge of selling liquor on Sunday Joseph Fagan and Jerome C. Neal, proprietors of Florida Grove, a summer resort near Perth Amboy, patronized by many from this city, were arrested last Sunday by Detective William A. Housel, of New Brunswick. They were released on bail by Recorder Ward, of Perth Amboy. Both men protested that their arrest was an outrage, as liquor had been sold there on Sunday for forty years.

DANCED IN HONOR OF '97

PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL ALUMNI RECEPTION WAS A SUCCESS.

Although the Night Was Warm, the Three Hundred Guests Danced Away the Evening—List of the Most Prominent Ones.

The social event of the school year of the Plainfield High School is the reception to the graduating class. Thursday the Casino was the scene of the reception to the class of '97, of the Plainfield High School, tendered by the classes of '95 and '96. About three hundred of the alumni and friends of the graduates were present. The reception was held after the commencement exercises, so that it was nearly 11 o'clock when the orchestra struck up the grand march that opened the reception. Then followed two step, waltz and lanciers until 2 o'clock with an intermission for the serving of refreshments.

The reception was pronounced a complete success by all who attended, though the night was an exceedingly warm one and collars melted with unpleasant frequency. The members of the Board of Education, President Merrill E. Gates, of Amherst College, who was the speaker of the evening at the commencement, Superintendent H. M. Maxson, Principal I. W. Travell, of the High School, and several of the teachers attended and remained during the first part of the evening. Many of the preceding classes were represented.

Blue and white, the colors of '97, were used in the decoration of the balcony, while American flags were tastefully draped about the walls. Small flags were used to decorate the electric light fixtures on the walls. A rustic scene was shown on the stage, where the orchestra sat, half hidden in a bower of palms and other potted plants.

The finance committee had general charge of the reception and looked after the welfare of the guests. The committees by whom the reception was arranged were as follows: Finance, Charles B. Morse, '95, chairman; John V. Beekman, Jr., '95, Henry B. Drake, '95; Henry Eggerding, '96, Charles M. Dolliver, '96, Raymond Carroll, '96; (that committee also looked after the caterer and Casino); music order, Miss Mary Hull, '96, Miss Grace E. Overton, '96; printing, Charles B. Morse, '95, Edward O. Clark, '95; decoration, Miss Grace E. Overton, '96, chairman; Wilbur F. Cornwell, '96, John V. Beekman, Jr., '95, Geo. A. Horne, '95, Miss Clyde Burnett, '96.

TO PROTECT CYCLISTS.

MORE WATCHMEN AT LEHIGH VALLEY CROSSING ON PARK AVENUE.

Letter From a Plainfielder Results in Better Protection for Pedestrians, Vehicles and Wheels at the Crossing.

Accidents at the grade crossing of the Lehigh Valley Railroad on Park avenue have been very infrequent, in fact, it has been many years since anything serious occurred there. Nevertheless, it seems rather remarkable that there has not been more accidents there considering how hard it is to see the approach of the train until the observer is almost on the tracks. There was a flagman there between the hours of 7 in the morning and 7 at night, but the rest of the time the passersby were compelled to look out for themselves.

The day after the terrible Valley Stream disaster when a coach crowded with young people was run into by a train, F. R. Stevens, of East Fifth street, happened to cross the Lehigh Valley at the point mentioned and noticed the similarity with the crossing where the accident occurred the day before. He wrote a letter to J. B. Hunt, soliciting freight agent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, with whom he is in frequent communication in a business way, calling his attention to the crossing and to the fact that a watchman was stationed there from 7 to 7 o'clock. He asked that the matter be referred to the proper official and suggested that the time of the flagman be extended or else the engineers be notified to double or thrible the usual warning of four short blows of the whistle.

Mr. Stevens has just received a letter from Mr. Hunt, inclosing a letter from Superintendent John Donnelly, of that division, to whom Mr. Hunt had referred the matter. Superintendent Donnelly wrote that he had arranged to have a watchman go on duty at 6:45 o'clock in the morning and remain there until 10 o'clock that morning, and then have another watchman stay on duty from 10 in the morning until 10 at night. He said that a census had been taken for six days and it was found that forty-five foot passengers, ninety-two teams and 251 bicyclists, out of a total of 1,014, had passed there between the hours of 10 o'clock at night and 6 o'clock in the morning. He said that the question had come up at one time of putting an overhead crossing at that point, but the difficulty in the way was from the objections of the adjoining property owners whose land fronts on the approaches, and would raise objections at once.

GRADUATES RECEIVED.

NORTH PLAINFIELD ALUMNI ENTERTAINED IN THEIR HONOR.

The Reception Was a Great Success and Was Well Attended—School Hall Beautifully Decorated for the Occasion.

The success of the alumni reception of the North Plainfield High School, last Friday, was assured even before it was held, for an energetic committee was in charge and everything was carefully planned and arranged. It is but fair to say that the reception was the most successful one that has yet been held. A delightful change from last year was in the omission of the business meeting at the first part of the reception and the change of the affair into a regular reception and dance.

The reception was held in the hall in the school building, which was charmingly decorated for the occasion. Red prevailed and was to be found in the shape of bunting and flowers. The banners of the different classes were hung about the walls, and altogether the general effect was delightful.

The first part of the evening was an informal reception, in which the guests were presented to the fair graduates and to each other. Dr. Warde, the superintendent, was present as were a number of the teachers. Then the music began and dancing followed for the rest of the evening, with an interruption for the serving of refreshments. Everybody did not dance, and seats were arranged for their benefit in the side of the rooms where they could watch the others or chat with their friends.

About a hundred were present. Rogers furnished the music.

All the Household Goods Are Covered By Mortgages.

While all the household property of Dr. J. D. Wood, of Crescent avenue, was not sold at the chattel mortgage sale yesterday, the local creditors of the absent doctor are likely to come out the little end of the horn, for two other chattel mortgages, amounting to $1,200 altogether, are held by Mrs. Annie Wood and E. Mulford, the attorneys for the latter parties, Swackhamer & Williams, are preparing to take action in the matter and the goods will be placed in storage in security for the debt.

The local merchants still hold bills for the amount of $500, but at present it looks as if they will get left, as there is nothing else on which to make an attachment.

THESE WERE HORSE THIEVES.

Stable in Westfield Broken Open—Attempt to Steal a Trotter.

Thieves broke into the barn of George W. Wrennick, on Broad street, Westfield, early Thursday morning, and carried off considerable plunder.

Among the missing articles are a whip, two blankets and two sets of harness. The value of the stolen goods is valued at about $100.

Indications are that the thieves were attempting to remove Mr. Wrennick's horse from the barn, but were frightened, and left hastily.

Wrennick is the owner of a large orange grove in Florida, and has a finely appointed stable.

An Old Road Made New.

And now another joke is taken away from the already heavily afflicted paragrapher and specialty artist. No more can either ring the changes on that time-honored old minstrel joke about the man who wanted to go to Chicago "the worst way," and was directed to the B. & O. station, for the work of straightening the curves, which were at once the delight and the horror of all through passengers on the "picturesque B. & O." is about concluded, and the trip through the mountains no longer reminds one of crossing the English channel on a particularly rough day.

This will be welcome news to the general public and to B. & O. enthusiasts—people who would not take any other route to their destinations if the B. & O. would possibly serve them. These are mostly passionate admirers of natural scenery, to whom the gigantic panorama along the B. & O. route can never become stale. Indeed, why should it, when it is never twice the same? Scenery on the scale of such immensity is like the ocean in its susceptibility to change. Not only with the seasons, but with the days, does its beauty vary. Like a kaleidoscope, which the slightest alteration in position occasions a totally new view, so the forests and the mountains along this scenic route assume wholly new appearances with every passing cloud and every weather condition.

Now that the exaggerated bug-bear of the B. & O. curves has been finally disposed of, and the road be made second to none, the excellence of its equipment and the peculiarly "make-yourself-comfortable-we'll-do-everything—we-can-for-you" atmosphere which surrounds the traveler the instant he steps aboard a through train on this road, will shortly double and treble the number of B. & O. enthusiasts, to whom the journey over mountains is less a journey than a pleasure.

THE CULMINATION OF THE HIGH SCHOOL LIFE.

Commencement Exercises of the Plainfield and North Plainfield High Schools Held Last Thursday.

Twenty Young Men and Women Bid Adieu to the Plainfield High School—Address by President Gates, of Amherst.

Four years of hard study have ended for the members of the class of '97 of the Plainfield High School, and the class now exists only in the memory of those who worked so earnestly and faithfully for the event that took place last evening. The twenty young people who composed that class are still here, but they have bid farewell to school days and gone forth into the world, some to continue their studies at college and university, and others to learn from experience in the greatest school of all—the school of life.

Thursday the commencement exercises were held in Music Hall before a large and warm audience. The weather was of the proverbial commencement kind, warm and humid, and the many fans all over the hall kept time to the music that at intervals floated through the auditorium.

On the left of the stage were the members of the Board of Education, Superintendent H. M. Maxson, Principal I. W. Travell, and the speaker of the evening, Merrill E. Gates, LL. D., president of Amherst College. The graduating class, twenty in all, of which but four were young men, marched in at the opening of the exercises and took seats in a semi circle around the rest of the stage. The young women in front in their lovely white gowns, contrasted strongly with the sombre black of the dress suits of the young men of the class. The faces of the graduates were bright and energetic and showed in them the characteristics of the young men and young women of the coming century, who are to take the leading hand in the management of this great republic.

After the graduates were seated the scenery in the back parted and revealed the chorus of High School pupils, sitting tier above tier; a pretty sight to the audience. The first selection was by the orchestra, "Boussmunde," and then the chorus sang "March, the Men of Columbia," and "Now the Day is Over." Charles L. Lewis led them, while Miss Mabel Maxson acted as accompanist. The many voices, sixty in all, blended very harmoniously together with pleasing effect. The chorus was a new feature for the commencement, and altogether it seemed to find general favor.

The invocation was asked by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, Ph. D. Then another selection, "The Geisha," by the orchestra followed. Dr. Probasco, president of the Board, who acted as master of ceremonies, next introduced Miss Saran Edwards Schuyler, the salutatorian, who gave her salutatory and essay in Latin. While there were many in the audience whose knowledge of the language of the ancient Romans did not admit their understanding of it, those who could pronounced it well written. "Zenda," by the orchestra, followed, after which Dr. Gates was introduced.

Dr. Gates' subject was "Patriotism in Time of Peace." After several glowing compliments to the patriotism of New Jersey and her citizens, he talked of patriotism itself. Love of one country, he said, did not mean the hatred of all the rest. He referred to the intimate connection of the history of this country to that of all the nations of Europe. The United States, he said, had passed the self-conscious age and was beginning to enjoy the delights of old age. He spoke of the thorough reunion of the country since the Civil War and illustrated his remarks with several little anecdotes.

He referred to the things that made this country so united and hence so great in the eyes of the world. It was due to a common language, the modern methods of travel and communication that so easily connected the uttermost limits of the country, and to the strong central government. Everybody is a citizen and is entitled to the same rights, but they must all perform certain obligations. Some wish that the government might run itself and leave them to make money. The ideal state of government would not be reached if an absolute monarch of perfect intelligence were to rule. Men would then become mere puppits.

One principal of the government he characterized as making men realize that everyone was his equal. By following this policy, the trouble between capital and labor could be averted. He talked of the debasement of manhood, especially by the bribery that is now used in politics to a considerable extent. It was the duty of every man to see to the affairs and government of his country. The quiet toleration of what we know to be immoral will undermine our moral principles and relax our moral tone, said the doctor. Then he called upon his hearers to seek the blessing of God and pledge their thoughtful, disinter-

The Closing of the First Year of the North Plainfield High School Was an Auspicious One—Prominent Speakers.

The first graduating exercises of the North Plainfield Public High School, held last Thursday in the Y. M. C. A. building, were a triumph in every particular, and it can truthfully be said that never before in the history of the school has the department of education received such notable distinction, both at the hands of State Superintendent Baxter, and County Superintendent Rev. James A. Mets. The remarkable progress made by this school during the past year is the admiration and respect of all interested in educational matters, and it has surprised in no small measure those who are at the head of New Jersey's Public School system. During the year the school has received the distinction of being placed on the approved list which is a well earned honor.

The attractive Y. M. C. A. hall never looked prettier than it did last evening. The prevailing colors were red, and this color was arranged so as to produce an exceedingly pretty effect. On the platform there was a display of daisies, red bunting, pretty vases and banquet lamps, while at one corner was arranged a door which was used for an entrance. On one side was the inscription, "Class of '97. In Limine Primo." The latter part of the above is the class motto, "At the Threshold." On the other side were the words "Closed until '98." Surrounding the door was a profusion of daisies. In the main part of the hall there was an arrangement of red bunting, while the American flag occupied a prominent position. On either side of the gallery were placed the four banners of the classes of 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901.

The profusion of red gave the hall an appearance that was cheerful and attractive. At the proper time President S. St. John McCutchen, the members of the Board of Education, Superintendent A. D. Warde, and Miss Glass, Miss Petrie, Miss Crowther, Miss Mann, teachers of the High School, took seats on the platform. After a very earnest prayer by Rev. H. J. Johnston, pastor of Grace M. E. church, the programme was opened with a piano selection, "Le Tourbillon, Op. 37," by Miss Mabel Ising and Master Bert Simpson. The rendition was pleasing and deservedly won the applause accorded.

Following was the first essay by Miss Harriette Helen Phillips, class '97. Her subject was "A Nation's Literature, Its Life and Glory," with salutatory. There is very much that can be said in commendation of the above and all credit is due Miss Phillips for the talent displayed in delivering her essay. Her subject was rich in material and the clear and concise manner in which she unfolded it was currently spoken of. The ease and grace shown by Miss Phillips in her delivery was noteworthy. She complimented the Board of Education, superintendent, teachers and the people of North Plainfield for their very earnest efforts in giving the graduates such excellent advantages. Her essay treated of great writers and philosophers who had given to the world such literature full of life and glory. The composition of the essay was very good and reflected a great deal of credit on the writer.

A selection by the High School Glee Club, under the direction of William E. MacClymont, followed, and the club certainly acquitted themselves with credit. The selection was a bright and catchy air.

The next essay was given by Miss Edna Louise French, and her subject was "That Everlasting Why." The fruitfulness of the subject was an occasion for much food for thought. The speaker was a talented one, and she, like her predecessor, displayed rare grace and ease in delivery. She exhibited a manner of being thoroughly acquainted with her subject, and she gave it most impressively. She claimed for the word "Why" the introduction of the telegraph, cable, steam engine and many other things that have made the present century so much up to-date.

The next number on the programme was a soprano solo, "Letter Song," (Rip Van Winkle) Planquette, by Miss Eugenia Barker, of Brooklyn, and so well did she sing that she was obliged to respond to an encore. Her accompanist was Richard Menzell, of this city.

The last essay was delivered by Miss Bessie Thompson Day, whose subject was "At the Threshold," with valedictory. Her subject being the class motto, much interest was awakened. As she appeared on the stage through the improvised entrance, she closed the door, and there was displayed the words, "Closed Until '98." In addressing the officials of the school and associates she said: "We say goodbye. We have spent a most pleasant and profitable year together under the guidance of competent teachers. I can truthfully say that I learned more this year than during the entire balance of my High School life. To the Juniors, your days are coming. It must be said that you want our crowns if not our scalps. To the freshman class we owe much for the beautiful decorations, and to our kind friends for the support.

"Classmates, we must part. We have been together a long time and it must bring sadness as we separate. It is not possible to have the past and future at once. We are now at the threshold and it is necessary that we accept every opportunity as we see it.

"In conclusion, we thank all for the kind and faithful treatment and support given to the graduating class."

The essay and valedictory was a most admirable one and too much praise cannot be given to Miss Day for the masterly manner in which she presented her part. She displayed talent equal with her sister graduates, and the efforts on the part of each graduate gave undeniable evidence that three graduates never left the North Plainfield Public School better fitted to enter upon life's duties.

Following the above was a piano solo, "The Last Muster," by Master Bert Simpson. The rendition was a creditable one and won hearty com*mendation from all present. The next* number was an address by State Superintendent, Hon. Charles J. Baxter. Mr. Baxter is a pleasing speaker and he certainly won many friends last evening by his able address. He spoke in the highest terms of the North Plainfield School and its management, and congratulated all who have had anything to do with the direction of the school. He urged the scholars to push forward in their work and strive for better things. He expressed some surprise that his sex was not represented in the graduating class and said that he had noticed in this State that the proportion of male graduates to female was about one to four. This he thought showed that the gentler sex was becoming wiser and by next September would be able to cast their votes for school commissioners. He thought that the mother was nearer the child than any other person and should be entitled to have a say in school matters. The next speaker was County Superintendent, Rev. James A. Mets, who made a most admirable speech in which he congratulated the North Plainfield Public High School on its fine showing. He also congratulated the Board of Education, the superintendent and teachers for the very excellent work accomplished.

The next part on the programme was an interesting and somewhat novel one. It was the presentation of the Class of '97 to the audience by Miss Susie P. Glass, Principal of the High School. Miss Glass in presenting the class made a short address which was full of wisdom and meaning. She paid a compliment to the efforts of the class and stated that the past year had been a very pleasant one to her as well as the scholars. She congratulated the graduates on the fine records they had made and she wished them all the success as they step out into the world.

The presentation of the diplomas to the graduating class by President St. John McCutchen, of the Board of Education, was an interesting portion of the exercises. He spoke in a congratulatory manner and remarked that a new volume had been opened and a new page had been turned over in the history of the school. He hoped that the graduates would not accept their diplomas and think that their work was now finished, but that it gave him great pleasure to do so and he extended his best wishes to the class.

After the rendition of the "Spanish Dance" on the piano by W. E. MacClymont, the benediction was offered by Rev. J. A. Mets.

A large horseshoe, made of red roses, was suspended over the platform.

All But Two to Remain.

All but two of the teachers in the North Plainfield Public High School will remain with the school next year. Miss Mann has accepted a position as assistant principal of the High School at Lakewood, and Miss Johansen will teach in the public school at Rutherford. The many friends of Superintendent Warde will be pleased to learn that he is likely to remain in Plainfield, although he will not be associated with the North Plainfield school.

Will Meet Evenings, Too.

The Commissioners appointed under the Martin Act are desirous that all interested should be made aware that they will meet in the evening of July 8th, from 7:30 to 9 o'clock, as well as in the afternoon of that day, thus endeavoring to give all an opportunity of meeting with them either in the afternoon or evening of the date fixed, July 8th, as convenience may offer.

May Build a Theatre.

The site of the Allen Theatre, at New Brunswick, which was destroyed by fire in December, has been bought by William Sutton, of New York. The deed was filed Thursday. The building was formerly owned by the Newark Home Builders' Association, of which Edward Ward is president. The consideration is not set forth. It is understood Sutton will build a theatre.

MARRIED 'MID DAISIES.

WEDDING OF MISS CORA E. GARDNER AND JOSEPH F. T. FULLER.

The Ceremony Was Performed by Rev. Cornelius Schenck at the Bride's Home on Arlington Avenue—The Bridal Party.

A very pretty wedding was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Gardner, of 998 Arlington avenue, June 23d, when their daughter, Miss Cora Earl Gardner, was united in marriage to Joseph Floyd Tracy Fuller, of this city. The ceremony was performed at 7:30 o'clock in the presence of the families of the couple and their near friends from this and other cities.

Daisies predominated in the decorations and the interior of the house was a perfect bower of them, with smilax and ferns to add to the charming effect. The ceremony was performed in the front parlor, the bridal party entering through an aisle formed by ribbons, held by Miss Carrie Fuller and the Misses Mygrant, Gardner and Fuller.

The bride was gowned in white organdie over white silk, trimmed with old lace taken from the mother's wedding dress. Her flower girl was Miss Mygrant, who was gowned in yellow organdie over white silk, trimmed with Venetian and white lace.

The bride was escorted to the front of the room by her father while the Lohengrin wedding march was played. The ushers who headed the party were Moreland Townley, of Westfield, and George E. Fuller, of Plainfield. They were met by the groom and his best man, Joseph A. Fuller, of Plainfield, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., performed the simple but impressive ceremony.

An informal reception followed the marriage and all sat down to the wedding supper which was served in another room. The couple received many useful and valuable gifts which were displayed in one of the upper rooms.

The newly married couple left on the 10:17 train for New York, amid a plentiful shower of rice. They will make a tour through the western part of the State of New York and will then return to make their home in Plainfield.

Although a quiet affair, it proved a very delightful one and the couple were showered with congratulations as well as rice.

Among the guests present were: Mr. and Miss Turner, F. A. Dugdil, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Atteridge, Miss Elsie Atteridge, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Trowbridge, of Chatham, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. H. Hooker, Mrs. J. N. Hall, John Hart, of Elizabeth; Mr. and Mrs. W. Welch, the Misses Crosley, the Misses Welch, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Fitch, Mr. Townley, of Westfield; John Miller, Edward Miller, of Roselle; Mr. and Mrs. George Haines, George Haines, Jr., the Misses Haines, of Union; Mrs. Lulu Barr, Mrs. W. L. Mygrant, Miss Louise Mygrant, Perry Mygrant, of Brooklyn; and the following from this city: J. A. Robinson, Miss Mary Robinson, Mrs. Robinson, Miss Lessie, Miss Webster, Miss Terry, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Rockfellow, Miss Cornelia Rockfellow, George A. Rockfellow, Mr. and Mrs. George Fairchild, Mrs. Mary Wade, Miss M. C. Gardner, Mrs. J. Darling, Miss Mabel Darling, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Fuller, George Fuller, Miss Lulu Fuller, Miss Carrie Fuller, Ray Fuller, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. Elmore Mowtt, Louis Eaton, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Wenneman, Mr. and Mrs. Messersmith and the Misses Giles.

FOUND DEAD BY THE ROAD SIDE.

The Aged Man Had Been Stricken Down by a Sunstroke.

The first death from the heat reported from Middlesex county is that of Timothy Burns, seventy-two years old, who was found dead near his home at Wyckoff Mills, near New Brunswick, Thursday. After a day's work near the mills he started for home and was seen late in the afternoon by Mr. Johnson sitting on a stone by the side of the road. He then complained of feeling ill, and Mr. Johnson offered to take him home but he said he was in no need of assistance.

Another man passing half an hour later found Burns dead. Justice John M. Lucas, of Monroe township, the acting coroner, decided that Burns had died of sunstroke or of apoplexy and that an inquest was not necessary. The sunstroke theory was confirmed by a medical examination.

A Strange Combination.

B. B. Waldron, of Coddington avenue, has quite a curiosity on his front lawn. It is a beautiful Magna Charta rose bush, in full bloom, on a small dog wood tree, he having grafted the rose bush into the top of the dog wood tree. The effect is quite pretty as it resembles a large bouquet of roses on a cane stuck into the lawn.

Politics at an Outing.

The Democratic City Executive Committee of Elizabeth is planning for an outing on August 19th to Whitestone, L. I. The steamer Isabel will be chartered for the trip. The committee intend this to be a big gathering of Union county Democrats

ST. MARY'S SCHOLARS

ENTERTAIN A LARGE AUDIENCE IN THEIR SCHOOL HALL.

It Was the Occasion of the Closing Exercises of the Parochial School—Delightful Features of the Programme.

The closing exercises of St. Mary's school, which took place in the school's assembly hall, Friday evening, were something of an innovation, and judging by the enthusiastic applause given by the large audience, the whole affair was a success. The walls of the assembly room were tastefully decorated with pale blue and white bunting, the class colors; and large clusters of exquisite roses were placed on the piano and the front of the platform. Not a seat was vacant in the room, and many were standing in the aisles and at the rear.

The programme commenced at 8 o'clock by a "Welcome" chorus, sung by boys and girls of the school. Next came a solo and chorus, "The Little Old Woman," by Little Miss May Murray and a number of primary girls. Although it was difficult to distinguish the words of this song the sight of the pretty little girls in white completely won the audience, and much applause was given. About forty primary boys next appeared and scored a hit with their action song, "Hear Me Say My A. B. C." In some respects this song was the hit of the evening. The next chorus, by fifty grammar girls, was entitled "School," and was well rendered; eighteen boys of the grammar school department gave a character song, "The Dashing Soldier Boy," in uniform. The piece included some difficult marching evolutions, which were well carried out. The leader of the march was John Traynor.

The second part of the programme began with a drama, "My Uncle, the Captain," which was enacted by six grammar boys. The story of the play was that of an innocent young man who was mistaken for a thief and was identified and rescued at the critical moment by his uncle. The part of "Landlord Hauscomb," who was on the lookout for suspicious characters in his hotel, was well taken by Charles McCann; "Sam Skillings, of Dismaltown," who came to the hotel and was taken for "John Smith," a thicker of silver spoons, was impersonated in lifelike fashion by Albert Traynor; the part "Captain Nat Skillings" Sam's uncle, a briny sea captain of a week's experience, was played by John Madden; John Carty and John Berry as "Pete" and "Steve," two waiters who had their eye on Sam Skillings, were good in their parts, as also Thomas Mack in the part of "Bobby Small," an enterprising bootblack. As a whole the cast of the play showed exceptional talent for an amateur performance.

Tennyson's "Come Into the Garden, Maud," was sung with fine expression by Miss A. Daley. The song gave evidence of fine vocal powers well trained. 'God Bless You, My Boy," was sung by Master T. Carty, as a soloist, and a chorus of twelve boys.

The most lengthy and pretentious part of the programme was a fantasie, entitled "The Nations Greeting Liberty." Miss A. Daley, costumed as "Liberty," stood upon the stage and received the representatives of the different nations as they were brought forward with their flags in hand. After the introduction, a dancer, costumed to represent the nation just introduced, came upon the stage and executed a dance characteristic of the country in question. The dancing was excellent and of interest as it was designed to show the prevailing custom of dancing in each country. The costumes were in good taste and presumably correct. Those who represented the different nations were: England, Miss E. Barrell; Ireland, Miss G. Corrigan; Scotland, Miss E Shea; France, Miss J. Lutz; Germany, Miss M. Doll; Italy, Miss M. Burke; Spain, Miss A. Ryan; Russia Miss M. Shannon; Switzerland, (the Misses R. Roche and F. Hillman; Japan, Miss W. Kane; China, Charles McCann; American Indian, T. O'Keefe; Cuba, Miss E. Johnson. The representative of China was somewhat embarrassed during his dance, when his Chinese shoes came off. He finished without them, however, and was loudly applauded. T. O'Keefe, as the American Indian, looked like a genuine savage, and caused much merriment. Cuba, represented by a small colored girl, was greeted cordially. Liberty came forward and took her into her arms. A fine tableau, in which all the nations figured, was given as the curtain went down.

Thomas Mack next gave a vocal solo, "The Old Fashioned Mother," succeeding well in his efforts. The only recitation of the evening was extremely well done by Miss M. Barrell. The title was "My Funny Uncle Phil."

A cantata, "A Quarrel Among the Flowers," was next given by thirty-two little girls. The dispute for supremacy was finally decided in favor of the rose and it was crowned queen by the other flowers. The difficult dances in this piece were executed with much skill and formed an ever changing picture of great beauty. The evening's exercises closed with a good night chorus.

Mrs. Abner Bartlett trained the students for their parts, and the result reflects much credit upon her ability as a teacher. Miss May Smith presided at the piano and accompanied all the pieces with excellent judgment.

There is no graduating class at the school this year.

TO IMPROVE THE MOUNTAINSIDE.

The Company is Composed of Some of the Leading Business Men of Bound Brook.

The Middlebrook Heights Association, which has been incorporated has purchased several large and valuable tracts of land back of Bound Brook, extending from Mapel avenue to the summit of the mountain.

The President of the Company is Geo. LaMonte, president of the First National Bank of Bound Brook. Charles Howell Cook, the vice president, is widely known as the owner of the "Cook Potteries," of Trenton, a prominent banker and capitalist. The secretary of the company is F. Frank A. Wright, of the firm of Rossiter & Wright, prominent architects in New York city. Mr. Wright acts also as supervising architect of the association and has already prepared plans for several private residences and association buildings, which are eliciting universal commendation. George LaMonte, who is associated with his father in the paper manufacturing business, is the treasurer of the company.

Work has already been begun on the mountainside.

PLAYED CROQUET.

Miss Tier Made a Charming Hostess and Everybody Enjoyed Themselves.

A pleasant croquet party was given Friday afternoon by Miss Gertrude Tier, of Bank place, to a few of her friends. The grounds were in fine condition and everyone present enjoyed themselves immensely. Miss Tier made a charming hostess, and entertained her guests in a delightful manner. Miss Nettie Young secured the prize for being the best player. Like the game, the boat ride to Lake Inke was indulged in by all present. This finished a good time for all and the serving of refreshments, which followed, was an enjoyable feature. Those present included:

The Misses Grace Ten Eyck, Bessie Ten Eyck, May Mulford, Louise Corriell, Martie Anthony, Marion Sherwin, May Schimer, Bessie Martin, Nettie Young, Lula Vail, Violet Van Winkle, Beulah Waters, Florence Williams and Maude Van Dyke.

LAST GATHERING THIS SUMMER.

Progressive Whist Was Played on the Cool Piazza.

The last meeting for the summer of the whist club was held at the home of Miss Arline Crane, of West Eighth street, Thursday afternoon. There were five tables arranged on the piazza around which the twenty guests gathered and spent most of the afternoon at progressive whist. The first prizes were won by Miss Lulu Patten and Miss Delphine Bowers. The winners of the second prizes were Miss Mary Brown and Miss Genevieve Daniel. The third prizes went to Miss Lulu French and Mrs. Miller Bauchelin. There was a consolation prize to be contested for by those who had not won a prize during the season, and it was taken by Miss Grace Nevius. Refreshments were served on the piazza.

May Open a School.

The many friends of Dr. Warde, who has been superintendent of the North Plainfield Public School this year, are urging him to take the school, which has heretofore been conducted by Rev. Joselyn Johnston, and continue it. Dr. Warde has the plan under consideration for some time. If he decides to take the school, he will make it a military school.

A Handsome Monument.

L. L. Manning & Son, corner of Front street and Central avenue, have just received a contract to erect a very handsome spire monument in Hillside cemetery for the estate of J. Hervey Ackerman. The monument is to be of Vermont Barre granite, and will be one of the most attractive and pretty that has been placed in Plainfield.

Junior Sociable.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church, held their last social of the season in the church Friday. The feature of the programme was an address by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Richardson. Refreshments were served by the officers of the society.

A Pleasant Invitation.

The members of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., have received an invitation from Clinton Commandery, of Brooklyn, to join them Saturday, July 16th, in an outing to Patchogue, L. I. It is expected that a large number of the members will enjoy the trip.

Graduates Dined.

The members of the graduating class of the North Plainfield High School and a few of their friends enjoyed a dinner at the Mountain Park Inn, Saturday evening. It was an informal affair but a very pleasant one.

ENDEAVORERS AWHEEL.

THEY COMBINED THE DELIGHT OF A PICNIC WITH BICYCLING.

The Inovation of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational Church Proves a Success—Various Adventures.

The Congregational church may be small, but it is certainly progressive, especially where bicycling is concerned. The first church run ever heard of was arranged by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, last summer' and this year another new departure had its source in the fertile brains of the social committee of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. Sociables in the church, even with delightful programmes, are not things of joy in hot weather, when no one likes to be shut up in a hot, crowded room, and ice cream is the most enjoyable feature of the evening; even bicycle runs are no longer a novelty. So the social committee planned for something entirely new; namely a bicycle picnic; and Saturday afternoon the affair took place, the picnic being a thoroughly enjoyable one, and a perfect success. The start was made from A. C. LaBoyteaux's pleasant home on Fairview avenue, at 3 o'clock, Rev. C. L. Goodrich leading. A generous supply of luncheon was carried by the party. The afternoon was perfect, not too warm for riding, and not wind enough to change pleasure to work. The party in their pretty and becoming cycling costumes, made a pleasant picture for passersby as they took their way up Front street to Scotch Plains, and from through the gap, past the old mill to the pretty "deserted village," seldom deserted in these days, Glenside Park. Luncheon parties are not allowed within the park limits, however, and a watchman cast disapproving eyes at the parcels carried by the picnicers, until the chairman of the social committee took pity on him, and called out gaily, "No, we won't eat our lunch here!" No watchman, or any one else, could object to the party "doing" the sights of the Park, and a circuit was made, everyone enjoying to the utmost the charm of the beautiful spot, unusually lovely in the clear afternoon air, with the brilliant June sunshine falling over it and making every shadow more distinct, and the glorious summer sky over all.

The wanderings about the Park ended, the company took their departure and went into camp a short distance outside, near a large farmhouse. Supper was prepared, and some of the men of the party were sent to the home after water. They were dreadfully alarmed by the barking of a number of dogs, and bade their friends a solemn farewell as they started on their dangerous errand, John Barnett calling to A. C. La Boyteaux to explain matters at his office in case he did not return alive! No loss of life was sustained by the adventurers, however, and they returned safely, bearing the water for the feast, which consisted of all good, or else the cyclists had procured an amazing appetite somewhere in their travels. Supper over, the party mounted their wheels once more, and rode homeward through the golden June evening, arriving about 7 o'clock, having found the afternoon all too short. Glorious weather, a lively and congenial party, and very few accidents, made up a thoroughly successful excursion; only one wheelman, John Messersmith, was unfortunate enough to meet with a puncture.

Melodies from "The Wizard of the Nile" were played by the orchestra. Lewis Squires then delivered an essay, entitled, "Our Obligation to England," and the valedictory. He spoke as follows:

Just what obligations we are under to England and what our personal feelings to her ought to be, have been questions of great interest ever since we became a nation. The present international complication has afforded an opportunity for debate upon this important subject. The opposers of the measure have been loud in their denunciation of any mistaken leading to better international and more confidential relations with England. They have declared that even though such an allowance might be of advantage to us, we ought to let our sense of justice and the true gender recles of a nation that has shown so little friendship for us in the past. Such sentiment has done much to defeat the treaty. Why should we consider the kind feelings towards England and the English people than for distrust. There are peculiar ties which ought to bind us together in mutual accord. It is our natural heritage. It is the mother forgot the love due the child and, by injustice, drove her to rebellion, even though the child has far outgrown the need of parental protection, it is the duty of the child to honor due the parent, or cease to remember the sacred tie that binds mother and child.

We must not think that our civilization and institutions are the result of the American Nation and American people sprang into life and power on the Fourth of July, 1776. The vigor of character displayed during the struggle for independence was the product of carefully selected seed removed from its ancient plot and planted in a new soil, we adopted to develop it most highly. Two centuries of free institutions, of new ideas and more invigorating political atmosphere of the new world have wrought many alterations. The varied soil and climate of this vast land have brought into prominence forces latent in the character of our ancestors. That there have been changes in our National character since our birth is true of new environment, but that these changes have resulted in so grand a product is due to the sterling principles of honesty, of industry and of devotion, which inspired our forefathers. We have derived from England that very spirit of freedom and love of liberty that finally brought about the separation For American manhood of today we have the English manhood of two hundred and fifty years ago.

For nearly the whole fabric of our political institutions are we indebted to the mother country. The calling of that first legislative assembly at Jamestown, allowed the colonists a turn and a half of training in politics and the art of government. The colonists recognized the advantage of England's time honored political systems and based their newly formed institutions upon them. Indeed they did not enter into that long and bloody conflict in the hope of gaining any new form of government but to protect and perfectuate the old. It was not until they had lost every hope of maintaining the former relations that they solemnly declared that, "these united colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent States."

Even when independence had been gained, they proved their sincerity by adopting as close a copy of the English political system as the changed circumstances permitted. In each State, the legislature was patterned after the English Parliament. The Governor was vested with the power of pardon, among them the power of pardon. Except for a change in the tenure of office of the judges, the judiciary system of England was adopted in an unaltered form. The common law of England, that great bulwark of the nation's welfare, was transplanted bodily, surely no mean legacy from the mother country. Our national constitution, also, was derived, indirectly at least, from the English political system.

Thus we see that we owe to England our institutions, our common law, our state governments, and our national constitution—four systems that have contributed very largely to our present strength and glory. No original conception of such minds as Franklin's or Hamilton's or Washington's could have equalled in efficiency that already outgrowth of the struggles and experiences of a people whose love of freedom and whose genius for self-government have been proved surpassed.

It may be asked, can we ever love a nation which, when we were weak, oppressed us with unjust taxes and unjust laws, and, when we rose to defend our sacred rights, shed such rivers of patriotic blood? Can we ever honor a nation which tried to impede our progress and entangle our feet while yet the path of independent national action was new and strange to us? A nation so eager, on any pretext to take up arms for a war of conquest? Can we ever trust a nation which, when we were torn asunder by civil war, while our fate was trembling in the balance, cast her influence on the side of disunion and national dishonor?

Our answer to these questions will be easier and its truth more apparent if we regard the distinction that must necessarily exist between the acts of a government and the desire of the people.

Though England, at the time of the American Revolution, had long possessed a representative form of government, the actual administration was far from justly representative. Many large towns were without an exponent in Parliament, while "rotten boroughs," with a constituency of a half-a-dozen or a score, were frequent. This state of affairs naturally fostered bribery and corrupt legislation.

With a servile Parliament, bought and paid for, King George might rule as absolutely as he wished. But money was necessary. To tyrannize over England he must first tyrannize over America.

While a corrupt Parliament was levying the unjust taxes, the intelligent people of England were warm in their friendship for America and loud in their denunciation of the king. In the House of Commons their sentiments were voiced in the fiery speeches of Pitt and Burke, and Fox, the greatest of modern historians, a man to whom Plainfielders delight to hear, has declared that the ultimate independence of the colonies was due to the efforts of the Whigs in England not less than to the patriot arms.

Viewing the question from this standpoint, one would indeed be narrow-minded to treat the English Government as allowing the acts of their foolish and ambitious king. Indeed we ought to place in them the fullest confidence and respect and honor them the more as the people, the real power, the source of honor should the attitude of England toward us during the War of 1812 tend to neutralize this feeling. During the Civil War, when the British Government was allowing the Confederate privateers to fit out in English ports and was giving aid and comfort to our foes, the citizens of Manchester and Sheffield were holding mass-meetings to express their sympathy for the Union and their good wishes for her success.

It is from this good will of the English people for us that we ought to base our trust and friendship. Ever since the first settlement of our land the people of England have been to us the firm and faithful friends.

Were England today ruled by king or aristocracy alone, we might hes tate to enter into an alliance with her; out of friendship for her people. But when, by universal sentiment, a strong enough to compel the Prime Minister to utterly reverse his policy and to pursue a course which but three months before he had thought would be war, why have we no fear.

Today the people are the rulers of England, and the people have shown us that whatever may be the sentiments of the aristocracy, that at least, consider themselves bound to us by more than common affection. Every tie of lineage, of common progress and culture demands a like expression of good will from us to them. Why should we owe as much to England hesitate to return their affection?

Let the two great branches of the English stock come into closer national communion, they and we, who are already so closely allied in commerce and trade, customs and manners, and by the mighty bond of a common language.

Let us not love our country less nor cherish less her individuality as a nation, let us be more loyal to her, but let us be slow to show her flag from insult or her name from dishonor, let us enter into no alliance that could harm her or hamper her majestic progress, but let us, by all honorable means, the mightiest we owe to that land that has done so much for us, that has been and now stands ready to tread with us, as an example to the nations, the path of peace, of progress, through international arbitration.

Classmates—Tonight for the last time as a class we meet together. In a few brief moments the class of '97 of the Plainfield High School will step forth into the ranks of the alumni. For four years we have been together in the school and have come to know each other as only they can who have labored and played day by day, equaling the same obstructions and inspired by a common ambition. Tomorrow we shall fall short of that pleasant social intercourse that makes school life sweet in passing and a food and inspiration in memory when it is gone. Our senior year especially has been brightened by the many pleasant hours we have enjoyed in course and now comes the time of parting. Let us not say farewell, but adieu to the to borrow. What fortune the vast and unknown future may have in store for us or how far we may become separated in after years we cannot tell, but let us resolve that we will in endeavor to keep strong the ties formed in these our school days, and remain in hearts as true friends as we have been of friends. And now, class of '97, I bid you good-by.

A medley of popular airs of the day was the next selection by the orchestra.

The valedictory, being the last address so precious in the eyes of the graduates, was brought in and then Dr. Probasco presented them to the graduates, one by one. The graduates were:

General Course — Mary Estella Buckle, Edith Louise Burt, Grace Agnes Crane, Emma Cutter, Alice Jenkins, Adeline Mabel Manning, Adah Elizabeth Woolston.

Classical Course—Gertrude Louise Cadmus, Edith Louise Pruden, Sarah Edwards Schuyler, Lewis Squires, Ernest Salisbury Suffren.

English Course—Eva May Dayton, Florence May Duck, Louise Egan, Clara Emma Fellows, Lilla Clifton Livesey, Sarah Cordelia Miller, Sydney Ross Titsworth, William Becker Van Alstyne.

Honor Pupils—First Honor—Emma Cutter, Lewis Squires, Sarah Edwards Schuyler. Second Honor — Grace Agnes Crane, Ernest Mabel Manning, Clifton Livesey, Alice Jenkins, Adah Elizabeth Woolston.

"America" was sung by the chorus and then the exercises came to an end with the stirring march from "El Capitan" rendered by the orchestra. The fans were laid aside for a moment and the large audience began to disperse, some hurrying to the stage to grasp the hand of a friend in the graduating class and congratulate them on the successful ending of the affair, others speeding home or to the theatre to receive the reception to the graduating class was to follow the commencement exercises.

There was a profusion of flowers for the graduates and the front of the stage was lined with baskets and bouquets of choice summer flowers. Other gifts were also presented. Henry W. Brower, William A. Deland, Jr., and Henry Pierce, all members of the Junior class, had charge of the passing of the flowers.

So ended the graduation of the class of '97 of the Plainfield High School.

HE IS A HAUNTED HERMIT

DISAPPOINTED OF A FORTUNE HE RETIRED FROM THE WORLD.

Now He Lives in the Shell of a House Near Netherwood and Converses With His Departed Friends—History of His Life.

New Jersey has a haunted hermit.

In the shade of Netherwood, a fashionable suburb of Plainfield, lives William Hetfield, says the New York World. While all around are modern villas, he occupies a house of the revolutionary period.

Hetfield's only visible speaking companion is his trusty gun. He is a sure shot, and on that account the fact that he is worth $50,000 offers no temptation to robbers.

William, the hermit, says he is the only haunted man in New Jersey. Day and night he hears voices of those dead and gone. He is more than sixty years old, and a long, lonely life has told upon him.

He lives at Two Bridges, has always lived there. At one time, long ago, he was a man of note in Fanwood township, being collector of taxes. He also taught the village school, the schoolhouse still standing a mile away from his lonely home.

William's life, always secluded, became a thing of the past when he lost a large sum of money through the law.

Daniel and Frazee Lee, his cousins, bachelors, had by miserly habits accumulated a fortune estimated at $300,000.

The Lees died together as they had lived. Both were taken ill, and Daniel died first. When Frazee learned that his brother was dead he said he would not live. Before he died he called in a lawyer and left his money, then all his own, to the Scotch Plains Baptist church.

Alive he was not so generous. In the testimony in the suit brought by William and Jacob Hetfield to break the will it was proved that in ten years he had given but $1.50 to the church for charity, festivals, Sunday-school picnics and Christmas trimmings.

When the decision of the Court gave the personal property to the church and divided the real estate among relatives William Hetfield withdrew in his shell. He owns his house, however, and a large tract of land besides, the results of his own shrewdness.

William ever since has lived the life of a hermit. He cooks his own food, makes his own bed, is careful of his bolts and bars, seldom goes out, never goes off his premises, and he talks only with the voices he hears.

That he hears these voices nobody talking to him would doubt. On all other points he is an intelligent man, shrewd and full of hard sense.

In person he is tall and stout, with a full face. He wears a farmer's suit topped with an old straw hat.

His neighbors, except the dead ones, never call on him, he says.

He has made friends with a neighbor's horse. As the horse does not know that his friend is a hermit he comes into the back yard to get his nose rubbed.

The house is a mere shell. One part has fallen into a decay so that it cannot be used. But there is plenty of room remaining for the hermit, as his wants are few.

He stopped going to church when the church got the money he still believes should have come to him.

Jacob, the brother, would be a hermit but for the fact that he has two sons. No women, however, is allowed in the house, which matches William's home in age and is still more dilapidated.

Jacob is the elder. He was married nearly fifty years ago.

With his brother he fought for the five hundred thousands and in sympathy with him retired from the world as much as possible after the courts decided against him. The presence of these men in their old shells of houses in the very centre of a district popular with New York commuters is as strange as if a bit of West Virginia or Kentucky had been transplanted in Plainfield soil.

AVOIDED AN ICE WAGON.

But the Wheelwoman Turned too Suddenly and Fell.

A lady cyclist narrowly escaped being trampled under the feet of horses on West Front street, last Friday afternoon. As an ice wagon of the Plainfield Cold Storage Company, driven by John Morton, was turning into the alley way at the side of Scheuer & Co's store, the woman attempted to run past in front of the horses.

She turned her wheel too quickly and was thrown to the ground and one of the horses trampled upon the back wheel of the bicycle, damaging it considerably. The driver quickly stopped his horses and the woman scrambled out of danger, unhurt. Her name could not be learned.

Lamp Exploded.

The lamp on a bicycle exploded in front of Randolph's pharmacy on West Front street Thursday evening, the wheel belonged to a young man from New Brunswick.

HE POISONED HIMSELF.

ABRAM GULICK WANTED TO PREVENT SCARLET FEVER.

His Friends Told Him That Camphor Would Prevent Contagion and So He Tried it Internally as Well as Externally.

The recent scarlet fever scare in this city nearly resulted in the death of Abram Gulick, the twenty-three-year-old son of J. S. Gulick, a wealthy farmer living at Lincoln.

One day last week young Gulick came to this city to see some of his Plainfield friends and then learned of the epidemic of scarlet fever in town. Gulick had never had the dread disease and he didn't want it. He feared that he had exposed himself to contagion when he came to Plainfield and he worried over the fact considerably. His worry did not stop when he returned to his home and he asked his friends what was the best thing to do to preserve him from the fever, and camphor was suggested.

Gulick purchased a stock of camphor and filled all his pockets with it, but still he worried about the scarlet fever. His presence could be detected by the strong odor of camphor and he had to make frequent trips outdoors to relieve the household of the all-pervading odor. That did not satisfy him. While he felt that the outside was thoroughly protected, it was the inside that worried him. He was afraid that he might eat or drink something that contained the germs of the dreaded disease, and so all his precautions might come to naught.

There is no doctor in Lincoln, and Gulick had nobody to consult. Not caring to be laughed at by his friends who thought it a great joke about the camphor, he prescribed for himself. As long as camphor was so good a preventative on the outside, why should it not be as good within, he wondered. So last Wednesday afternoon he took a lump of camphor, in inch in diameter, and ate it, although it did not have a particularly pleasant taste.

The result of Gulick's little experiment was very serious; in fact, it nearly proved fatal to the young man. He was taken ill soon after he had swallowed the camphor. He lost his reason temporarily and raved terribly to the horror of his family. Dr Fisher was hurriedly summoned from Bound Brook and attended the young man.

At first no one knew what the matter was, but it was finally learned and he was brought back to consciousness. He was very weak, however, and it was several days before he fully recovered from the effects of his little experiment. Dr. Fisher said that the only reason that the young man did not die from the effects of camphor poisoning was that he took so much. Had he taken thirty grains, instead of a hundred, as he did, the result would undoubtedly have been fatal.

MR. HIGGINS' NOVEL IDEA.

To Foil Thieves He Took a Wheel from Each Carriage.

Wm. Higgins, a New York merchant, owns a handsome country place in Stelton, about two miles from New Brunswick. Some months ago the family went to Chicago for a time. Before going away Mr. Higgins hit upon a plan to make his four carriages safe from thieves. He took a wheel from each carriage, and these he stored in the garret of his residence.

Now, if anyone attempts to steal those carriages while we are away they will have a job to get along with three wheels," he thought.

But the home of Mr. Higgins was burned down while the family was away. The four carriage wheels stored in the garret vanished in the flames.

A wheelwright was summoned from New Brunswick last week to supply the missing wheels. Possibly Mr. Higgins may find it necessary to equip every one of the four carriages with a full set of new wheels.

WOULD CLIMB THE SPIRES.

Henry Brennan Proposes to Fix Flags on the Cathedral 300 Feet in Air.

Henry Brennan, of 844 Second avenue, Elizabeth, who on July 5, if the pastor of St. Patrick's new church at Elizabethport gives him permission, undertake the feat of climbing the lofty spires of the church and affix two American flags to their tops. The spires tower about 300 feet from the ground. Brennan is confident that he can perform the feat.

'TWAS EXCITING HISTORY

STORY OF An ALLEGED ASSAULT TOLD IN COURT.

The Testimony of the Plaintiff, Mrs. Bertha Guinaud, and the Defendant, Edward Galbraith, Did Not Agree.

A page from the history of a West End saloon was read over in Justice court Moffett's Tuesday a. m., in the examination of Edward Galbraith on a charge of assault and battery preferred by Mrs. Bertha Guinaud.

Judge DeMeza appeared in Galbraith's behalf, and cross-examined Mrs. Guinaud as to her condition previous to the visit to Willis' saloon on Friday afternoon, when the alleged assault took place. Under cross-questioning the witness admitted that she had drunk more or less beer during the day. She was not drunk, however, she said, but was faint from the heat and went into the saloon to get some brandy to revive her, when she fainted. While in that condition Mrs. Guinaud stated that Galbraith roughly ejected her, using unnecessary violence in doing so. She exhibited an ugly bruise on each arm to bear out her story.

John Scott, Thomas O'Keefe and Daniel Galbraith, a brother of the accused man, were called and gave evidence to the effect that Mrs. Guinaud was under the influence of drink when she visited the saloon. O'Keefe, in answer to a question from Justice Moffett as to the woman's condition at the time, replied:

"Well, if a doctor had been present he wouldn't have said she was sick."

While O'Keefe's evidence was being taken Mrs. Guinaud caused a sensation in the court. Without warning she aroused and started through the crowd for the door exclaiming hysterically:

"It's no use! That evidence is bought!"

She was reprimanded by the Justice and soon became calmer and sat down.

Edward Galbraith was put upon the stand and told his story. He was upstairs, he said, when Mrs. Guinaud came into the saloon on Friday afternoon. He heard her fall and came down stairs. Twice he raised her to a chair. He believed she was intoxicated and told her she must go. When she refused, he went after Policeman Flanagan to remove her. He could not find the policeman and returned to find Mrs. Guinaud in his mother's apartments at the rear of the house. She attacked him, pulling his hair and scratching, and he forced her out upon the sidewalk.

Policeman Flanagan testified that he saw Mrs. Guinaud after the trouble. She had evidently been drinking, but was not drunk. Chief Grant testified to the good character of Mrs. Guinaud.

The Justice, after hearing all the evidence, held Galbraith in $200 bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury.

DISABLED SIXTY-FOUR WHEELS.

Malicious Person Sprinkled Tacks Where Bicycle Tires Would Suffer.

The bicycles of many wheelmen who rode into Woodbridge, Sunday, to visit Boynton Beach, were injured by the act of some malicious person who strewed the bicycle path near the beach with tacks, causing the puncturing of tires on sixty-four wheels.

The place where the damage was done is a narrow path running from the sidewalk to the smooth path for the wheelmen. The road at this point is very dusty, and the tracks could not be seen.

About 100 yards south of the place is a bicycle repairing shop, which has recently been opened.

Several of the wheelmen said they would report the matter to the L. A. W. committee.

A QUIET WEDDING.

An Allentown Couple United at a Plainfield Home.

Miss Caroline Ehrie and Miles Smith, both of Allentown, were married Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Crouse, of 217 East Fourth street. Rev. Christian G. Fischer, of the Lutheran church of Elizabeth, performed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Crouse, the Misses Saxton, Miss B. Wilcox, Miss Marion Wilcox, John Ehrie, a brother of the bride, and others were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith left Monday for Allentown, where the groom has a successful business.

MODERN METHODS HERE.

STREET COMMITTEE IS TRYING SOME OF COL. WARING'S IDEAS.

The Latest is to Have The Streets in the Business Section Swept at Midnight—It Was First Tried Saturday.

Plainfield has no Col. Waring, but she has men who are just as much up-to-date as the man who runs the street department of New York city. The introduction of Col. Waring's methods of street cleaning is a new departure for Plainfield and it was tried last Saturday night for the first. Employes of the city could be seen at midnight on Front street sweeping and cleaning the streets. Three men were in the party and the aid of a horse and cart was employed to carry away the scrapings, etc. The only difference from the New York methods was that the men are not attired in a regulation garb such as are used in New York.

The chairman of the street committee, Mr. Frost, is the originator of this plan for Plainfield.

There is no doubt but what the present street committee has accomplished more this year in a systematic way than previous street committees. They have profited by the mistakes of the former members and today Plainfield is in a fair way to have the best roads in the State, if the good work is continued.

If the merchants about the city will only assist in keeping the streets clean much can be accomplished. Heretofore, Mr. McFadden and his assistant, who keep the streets clean, have had a tendency to do all of their work in the heart of the city, and it is only of late that the street committee has been able to impress on their minds the fact that other streets are to be looked after as much as the above. Orders have been given that papers, etc., are to be removed from the heart of the city once a week. If the merchants persist in allowing their clerks to sweep papers and dirt from their stores into the streets the committee will take the matter in hand and see that someone is punished for the offense. This is the decision of the street committee.

The object in having the streets cleaned at night is that the men are not bothered in their work and more effective work can be done.

GERMAN SINGERS ENTERTA'N.

The Afternoon Was Spent in the Mountains and a Supper Enjoyed.

The members of the singing section of the Gesang and Turn Verein met Sunday morning for the regular lesson which was postponed from last week. In the forenoon the members enjoyed a treat by having an unexpected visit from Prof. Hermann Elchorn, of Elizabeth, who stopped at Plainfield on his way back from Philadelphia where he was in attendance at the National Festival. Prof. Elchorn, while in the Quaker City, acted as leader of one of the singing sections which captured one of the best prizes.

In honor of their guest, the Plainfield members of the Gesang and Turn Verein went to the mountains in the afternoon and had a very pleasant time playing games, while the singing section rendered several of their most popular songs under the direction of Prof. Elchorn. During the afternoon a beautiful lyre made entirely of wild flowers was presented to Prof. Elchorn, who received the gift in a short speech. He said that he appreciated the kindness of his Plainfield friends and there had not been any feature of his recent trip more enjoyable than that of yesterday.

After the presentation a fine supper was served and the assemblage numbering about one hundred returned to this city fully satisfied with the time they had passed on the mountains.

Hospital to Have a Fire Alarm Box.

The regular meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital was held last Monday at the Public Library. There was a great deal of routine business considered, but the only thing of any great importance was the appointment of Mayor C. J. Fisk as a committee of one to arrange for the placing of a fire alarm box close to the hospital. This will be done so that practically those at the hospital will have the exclusive use of the box. The need of this has been apparent for some time. It will be intended for the protection of the hospital property, but if it is necessary it will be pulled for any fire which might break out close to the above institution.

Thieves Around Metuchen.

The gang of burglars operating in Metuchen show no abatement of activity. Saturday night they robbed G. A. Hoffman's home, on the Amboy turnpike, of money and several hundred dollars worth of silverware. Local crooks are supposed to be responsible.

B'G CUT IN BICYCLES.

for the Columbia and Hartford wheels. I know nothing about the Pope Manufacturing Company's cut in prices except that it will go into effect tomorrow. I received a circular letter yesterday announcing that fact. The truth of the matter is that while the Pope Company has kept prices up, never cutting below the list, the other makers have been secretly cutting their prices. It is a common practice to give away bells, lamps and cyclometers with machines, which is practically a reduction in price. Then in New York city wheels of well-known makes are sold at auction for whatever they will bring. I saw a wheel listed at $100 go for $40 yesterday, and shortly afterward an $80 wheel was knocked down for $26. This sort of thing has made it impossible for the Columbia people to maintain their price, and rather than indulge in secret cutting, while ostensibly maintaining the price, they have decided to make the reduction openly that all may know and take advantage of it. As to agreements among makers to maintain prices, the past history of the trade shows that they are always broken and amount to nothing in the end."

Manager George W. Macintyre, of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company's store, said: "The Cycling Board of Trade's agreement to maintain prices has been smashed by the Pope Manufacturing Company. The action was taken, I believe, without consulting the other makers. I am convinced that there will be no reduction this year in the price of the wheels we handle. Of course, the smaller manufacturers will feel the effects at once, and they will be forced to come down. Many of them will probably be forced to the wall. In fact, I am not sure that is not designed expressly to accomplish this. When the small makers are partly exterminated, a trust may be formed of the larger concerns. If this should happen the price of high grade wheels will be maintained at $75 or a figure slightly less."

Wm. H. Rogers, the North avenue bicycle dealer, was also interviewed. He said:

"The cut in Columbia bicycles is undoubtedly made by agreement with the other dealers, and they will soon do likewise. The reason for the cut is that people have been buying the '96 models instead of the '97, until they have exhausted the stock of the former. The demand for the old model continued, and rather than manufacture more '96 wheels the makers have decided to close out their '97 stock, which is quite large, at a reduced price."

gravel pits beyond Berekman street, as the people have been dumping refuse there and then burning it. It was decided that some action must be taken to prevent the continuance of such a practice.

Inspector Addis was called before the board and highly commended for his very efficient service during the last month when the scarlet fever made its appearance.

The board did not take action on the closing of the city jail for that matter is left to the discretion of the president of the board, and he has not yet decided on any immediate action.

DAMAGE SUIT POSTPONED.

It Concerned the Claim of E. C. Winters Against the Plainfield Trolley Company.

The damage suit of Edward C. Winters against the Plainfield Trolley Company which was docketed for trial at Elizabeth yesterday, was postponed until Thursday, July 8th.

Winter is a carpenter living at Westfield. Early on the morning of April 14th he was driving his horse attached to a light wagon along East Fifth street, opposite the Bryant school building. A trolley car in charge of Motorman Wesh was coming in the opposite direction. When Winter endeavored to turn his horse to the side of the street it balked, but soon became tractable again, and the car advanced. When it reached a place beside the horse the animal suddenly backed and threw the wagon in front of the car.

The motorman stopped the car in its own length, but the wagon was struck and overturned, and Winter was thrown out. The witnesses include E. B. Hope, John Adleman and Motorman Welch.

The Autocrat Again.

The second number of The Autocrat, the little quarterly published by the students of the North Plainfield High School, has made its appearance. While the first issue was excellent, this last attempt is even more successful. Photographs of Dr. Ward and the graduating class are shown. Then there are the essays of the graduating class and a poem by the county superintendent, Rev. J. A. Mets. The little volume is very creditable in general appearance and reflects no end of credit on its student editors.

WANTS HER WHEEL BACK THEY DINED IN UNITY.

MRS. SADLER CLAIMS THAT HER WHEEL WAS ILLEGALLY KEPT.

Says That She Was Arranging a Trade With Frucht and Left Her Wheel While She Considered the Deal.

Miss Pauline Sadler, a young colored woman, has started proceedings against Mrs. Rosa Frucht, in whose name the bicycle store of her husband at the corner of Park avenue and West Second street, is conducted. The suit was started in Justice Nash's court Monday.

The suit is brought to recover possession of a wheel which Miss Sadler alleges is in the illegal possession of the Fruchts. The story she tells on which she bases her claim is that she went to Frucht's store several weeks ago and made inquiries regarding the purchase of a new wheel. She had an old wheel that she wished to trade in if she could make satisfactory arrangements. She says that she was offered a new wheel for her old one and $20 in cash. Then she says that she left her own wheel at the store while she went back to the place where she was employed to consult her employer as to the bargain. She claims that she was to bring word in the morning.

The next morning, according to her story, she returned to Frucht's store and said that she had decided not to make the purchase. Then she says Frucht refused to give her back her old wheel, saying that he had put new tires on it and sold it and tried to force her to take the purchase. She absolutely refused and tried to get the wheel back but was unsuccessful. Now she has started suit through City Judge DeMeza, in Justice Nash's court, to recover the wheel.

The claim made by the defendants in the case was that she agreed to take the wheel and gave her own wheel in trade and then tried to back out of the agreement.

Traction Company at Work.

The New York and Philadelphia Traction Company will begin active operations in Bridgewater township, this week. G. D. W. Vroom, general solicitor for the company, has made application to Chief Justice Magie, of Somerville, for a rule to show cause why the return to the Schure certiorari should not be set aside. It will be argued on Saturday.

MANY OF THE DEMOCRATS GATHERED AT ELIZABETH.

The Dinner Was Gotten Up By the Union County Democrats—Some of the Strongest Gold Men Were Absent.

After many unsuccessful attempts, the gold and silver Democrats of Union county got together at the big Democratic banquet given by the Union county Democrats Monday. Some of the strongest gold Democrats stayed away, the guests declared the banquet a success.

The guest of honor was Senator Wm. D. Daly, of Hudson. James E. Martine, of Plainfield, the farmer orator, was present. B. J. Lawrence presided and made the address of welcome. The toastmaster was Wm. J. Langley. Wm. D. Wolfskiel spoke on "Our State," urging concentration of action and insisting that gold and silver must not separate Jersey Democrats.

Senator Daly spoke on the last Legislature. He said that Democratic defeat was due to "uncalled for legislation, prompted and suggested by alleged leaders of Democracy, who were willing to sacrifice their party for personal gain." His remarks were taken as direct raps at Allan McDermott, and seemed to please the assemblage.

Sewing Circle Formed.

The members of Paughcaughnaughsinque Council, No. 34, Degree of Pocohontas, met a few days ago at the home of Mrs. Leland, of Elmwood place, and organized a sewing circle. The following officers were elected: President, Miss Ada Nash; secretary, Miss Sophie G. Wilson; treasurer, Miss Gertrude Netherwood. The Circle will meet every Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and tomorrow afternoon they will meet at the home of Mrs. Baker, of 61 Warren street.

McMichael's Barns Burned.

A destructive fire, probably the work of incendiaries, occurred Sunday night at Bernardsville. The barns owned by Charles McMichael were burned and six horses, fifteen carriages, a sleigh, farming utensils and many tons of hay were destroyed. The loss will reach $5,000.

J. M. Clark and family, of this city, are enjoying the sea breezes at Asbury Park. They are quartered at Norwood Hall.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

A DEMOCRATIC MOSES.

SENATOR DALY ANXIOUS TO BECOME THE STATE LEADER.

He Thinks He Knows the Way Out of the Wilderness—Condition of Affairs in Several Democratic Counties.

Senator Daly seems to be now the active and recognized leader of the Democratic party of New Jersey. For several years he has held that position in the State Senate, and the Democratic rank and file now look up to him for advice as to the proper policy to pursue while preparing for the next campaign. On public occasions the Senator is called upon to fill the position of chief orator, and his admirers generally applaud him to the echo. At the recent "harmony gathering," at Elizabeth, the Senator made a long speech, telling his fellow-Democrats how to organize for future battles, and during which he made a caustic arraignment of Governor Griggs and the Republican Legislature for alleged breach of faith with the people and for unbridled partisanship.

With the Hudson Senator are former Congressman Cornish and Colonel Edward Livingston Price. Those men are in control of the machine now, and it does not seem plausible that they would relinquish it at the bidding of the old leaders, and more especially if there was any danger of the dethronement of Mr. Daly.

Should the Democrats elect three or four State Senators and a majority of the House of Assembly next November they would be greatly encouraged to make an earnest fight for victory next year. A triumph like that would go a long way toward the election of a Democratic Governor and a Legislature which would choose a Democratic successor to Senator Smith. With harmony in the ranks and good candidates this fall the Democrats should be able to elect Senators in the counties of Sussex, Hunterdon, Cape May and Middlesex. In olden times that was not considered a difficult feat for the Democracy. When former Secretary of State Kelsey was in harness he never let go his grip of his native heath, old Sussex. Senator Gould was the first Republican ever chosen for the higher branch of the Legislature in that county. His election was achieved owing to the indifference of Mr. Kelsey and the unpopularity of the Democratic candidate. Since then Sussex has given Republican majorities on the National and State tickets, and it looks as if the Democracy up there is much demoralized. However, with a good candidate for the Senate this fall and with an ordinary degree of harmony the Sussex Democrats ought to regain their lost prestige.

Miles Ross, one of the conspicuous leaders of the Democracy in days not so long past, is now summering at Spring Lake, and it is reported that he is fast regaining vigor. As a mere practical politician ever existed in New Jersey, not even former Senator McPherson himself excepted, than Miles Ross. In his day and generation he was always feared by the Republican leaders, who never could wrest Middlesex from his grip. Since the collapse of the coal combine legislation of a few years ago Mr. Ross does not seem to have taken much interest in politics. Anyhow, his health has been poor, and it is supposed that he thought it best to take a rest until such time as an opportunity presented itself for him to reassert his political prowess. The report is now that he will soon get ready for another battle, and if he really means business, the Republicans of Middlesex will find a rocky road to travel while trying to elect their candidate for senator.

Hunterdon county has been always Democratic, with but one exception, from the time of its creation. That exception was when Frederick A. Potts was elected Senator, nearly a quarter of a century ago, over the redoubtable James Watson Pidcock, who was then beginning his political career. Three years later Pidcock landed himself in the Senate, which was the opening of a record that made him conspicuous in Democratic leadership. Lawyer Gebhart and Senator Kuhl are now contesting for the Democratic nomination, and while some bad blood may be spilled still it is believed that either is strong enough to carry his party to victory. The silver god is idolized by the Democrats of Hunterdon, and, of course, they will insist upon the election of a silver man as their Senator.

Anxious to Get Crops in.

The farmers in Warren township took no active part in the celebration of Independence Day. The weather was so delightful that they were too anxious to get in their crops to spend a day in celebrating at this time.

George D. Hallock, of Willow avenue, has gone to New Orleans.

TORE THE COP'S UNIFORM

SECOND EDITION OF THE STORY OF A BATTLE ROYAL.

But for the Arrival of Sergeant Kiely Roundsman Flynn Would Have Had a Tough Time in Making the Arrests.

Last Monday Sergeant Kiely had his best trousers torn to shreds while Roundsman Flynn barely escaped with his life and would have had a hard time of it if the Sergeant had not opportunely appeared, for unlike the fabled policeman, the Plainfield officer has a frequent habit of showing up when he is needed.

Tuesday morning, William Goff came up for fighting and resisting an officer and part of the story was told. It was continued yesterday when another very interesting chapter in the history of the fight was made public at the trial of Phillip Sheridan, who was accused of interfering with an officer in the discharge of his duty.

It will be remembered that there was trouble between Goff and Wm. Brown, colored, as was told Tuesday. In the scrap Goff went home and later Kiely and Flynn went after him. Goff begged to go in the house after his coat and hat, and when once there he seriously objected to going out again. He told Judge DeMeza he thought an officer had no right to go after him in his house.

Philip Sheridan (no relative of the famous cavalry commander in the Civil War), was there. So also was a man named Eskerson and Mrs. Goff. Flynn went after Goff and the crowd went for Flynn. Sheridan tried to persuade Eskerson to go home and keep out of trouble, but he wouldn't. Kiely went to the rescue of Flynn and had his clothing ripped and torn in the struggle. The officers did not wish to hurt the prisoner's wife, and so had a hard time of it, as, they claim, she objected most decidedly to her husband's arrest. Sheridan got in the way and, the officers claim, blocked up the door to prevent them from taking their prisoner out.

After hearing both sides the Judge found the prisoner guilty and fined him $5.

A LAWN FESTIVAL.

Delightful Summer Event Arranged by the Endeavorers.

A lawn festival was given to the members of the Christian Endeavor society of the Park Avenue Baptist church on the lawn of the home of Miss Emma V. Fish, of Franklin place last Tuesday. Chinese lanterns were hung about the lawn and on the piazza giving a charming effect to the place. The clouds of the afternoon promised a storm and some of the members stayed away on that account. About twenty-five were present, however, and a very enjoyable evening was passed.

A coversation party occupied the first part of the evening and the guests sat about on the chairs and benches that were placed on the lawn and chatted on topics of interest. Refreshments and games were the principal events of the remainder of the evening.

The following contributions have been received for the Children's Camp: Mrs. J. Stephney, oil stove; Mrs. Samuel Milliken, hammock; "Charity" Circle, 4 hammocks; "Opportunity" Circle, baby carriage and hammock; Mrs. DeGraff, baby carriage; Mrs. Mellick, baby carriage; Mrs. Mead, refrigerator; Mrs. J. Advanced in the Service.

After two very successful years as manager of the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company, W. E. Martin has relinquished his position to accept a better one with the same company in New York. The patrons of the company have always found themselves well treated during Mr. Martin's management, while he has improved the service greatly during his term of office. His successor is W. J. Bradley, an expert young operator from New York, who comes here with the best of recommendations.

Justice Moffett's Court.

The case of Edward Rushmore against Henry V. Williams was tried in Justice Moffett's court Tuesday, and judgment in full was rendered for the plaintiff. The case of Rushmore against William S. Clark was settled out of court, and Rushmore against J. W. Hope was postponed to the 13th. In the case of Ballentine against Clark judgment in full was rendered for the plaintiff.

CHURCH 150 YEARS OLD.

SCOTCH PLAINS BAPTISTS TO HOLD SESQUI-CENTENNIAL SOON.

The Services to be Continued All Day, August 5th, in Which All the Living Pastors Will Take an Active Part.

The Scotch Plains Baptist church will celebrate its 150th anniversary with appropriate services on August 5th. The history of the church is a most interesting one. It was organized in 1747 from a membership dismissed from the Piscataway Baptist church. The first pastor was Rev. Benjamin Miller, whose name can now be deciphered on one of the moss-covered monuments in the old cemetery adjoining the church. In its long existence the church has had only twelve other pastors, of whom four are still living.

The present edifice is the third that has been erected by the congregation. It was constructed about twenty years ago at a cost of $30,000. Its style of architecture is gothic and the material is brick, with Ohio stone trimmings. The seating capacity is 600.

Five other churches have been constituted, or organized, from the Scotch Plains church during its existence, among them the First Baptist church of New York city. The churches are all active and prosperous at the present time.

The church will observe its sesquicentennial on August 5th by holding three meetings. At the morning session addresses will be delivered by the present pastor, and by James F. Brown, D. D., J. B. Buchanan, D. D., and Rev. J. H. Parks, D. D., and Rev. J. S. Braker, the four former pastors now living. The afternoon session will be devoted to the Sunday school, and addresses will be made by G. E. Hall, the present superintendent, and by the former superintendents now living. At the evening session of the pastors of the churches that have sprung from the Scotch Plains church will deliver addresses.

Under the supervision of the trustees, a competent committee has prepared an interesting historical sketch of the career and work of this venerable church. This work is now in preparation, and will be ready for delivery before the coming anniversary. The work of research in connection with this sketch has been mostly done by Rev. Dr. J. H. Parks, of Scotch Plains. A number of illustrations of historical value also appear in the work which will be of interest to students of local history as well as to members and friends of the church.

A Row May Result.

One of our contemporaries says that "there will be a big row on hand if Senator Reed insists upon the appointment of William Doyle as postmaster at Grand View." As we understand the case, Mr. Doyle lives next door to the school, a location much more convenient to the largest number of patrons of the office than the present location of the office, and that Mr. Doyle's petition has been signed by a large number of the residents of that vicinity. These country postoffices should be located so as to accommodate the greatest number, not according to politics.—Somerset Democrat.

Billing the Town.

The Great Wallace Shows No. 2 advertising car, C. A. Potter, manager, with sixteen men, arrived in the city Wednesday. All railroad towns are being heavily billed for the cheap excursion rates so all can come and see the Great Wallace Shows on July 14th. Among the things which can never lose their hold upon the public affection is the circus. It makes no difference how often one goes to it the novelty never decreases as the years go by, for one attends its each recurrence with an ever growing fervor.

Last Meeting of the Year.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian church held their last meeting for the season Tuesday afternoon in the Sunday school room of the church. The superintendent, Miss Pruden, gave the members a pleasing talk on how to spend the summer in helping others and living the right kind of a life. After Miss Pruden's talk the balance of the afternoon was passed in a social manner. Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

On to the Shore.

The annual excursion of the First Baptist church Sunday-school to Asbury Park will occur this year on Tuesday, July 27th. The Grace Episcopal and Washingtonville Sunday-schools will probably participate in the excursion. The Mt. Olive Sunday-school has decided to participate in an excursion of their own planning and will not accompany the above schools. A large crowd and a fine day is predicted for the above excursion.

MAY BECOME THE JAIL.

OPTION SECURED ON THE ULRICH BUILDING ON SECOND STREET.

Judge DeMeza, Representing the City, Has Until August 1st to Secure the Building for a Consideration of $9,000.

The same building in which Senator Reed, former Judge Coddington, Dr. J. T. Fritts, Clarence Teel, Tom Keller and the other devotees of the Crescent League spent so many good times in the palmy days of that famous organization, may now be converted into a city jail and court house where the City Judge will hold forth and the Chief of Police make his headquarters.

Every since the city was notified that its jail had been condemned by the Plainfield Board of Health, the police board has been on the hunt for new quarters. The warm weather has made the unsanitary conditions of the present lockup more objectionable while the vermin have flourished and increased. The trouble has not been to find a suitable place, but to find one that the owners would sell or rent for that purpose. Nobody was particularly anxious to have all the city's offenders in their neighborhood, and where the owner of the property did not care, the neighbors made a decided kick.

For some time the police board has had its eye on the Ulrich club house, on East Second street, the first floor of which is now used as a public lounging alley and the rooms on the second floor as the club rooms for the Cleveland Cyclers. Located in the centre of the city, it would be just the place for a station house and jail. It was understood that the owner, Mrs. Anna Ulrich, was not in favor of the sale of the property for such a purpose. Neither was her son, Charles M. Ulrich, who has occupied the building and had charge of the alleys. Judge DeMeza has now secured option on the building until August 1st for the city. The consideration is to be $9,000. If the terms are satisfactory to the board, the matter will be brought to the attention of the Common Council.

The first floor, in the event of the purchase of the building by the city, would be devoted to a general headquarters in the front and the cells in the back. There is room for four tiers of ten or fifteen cells each, of the modern pattern, built of iron and steel and well ventilated. On the second floor would be the city court room, which could be made by the removal of some of the partitions, and also the office of the Chief of Police and the sergeant and a bedroom for the warden. It is estimated that the cost of equipping the building for service would be about $500.

LIBRARY DIRECTORS.

Nominated by the Mayor Tuesday to Serve Until 1900.

The regular meeting of the Board of Library Directors was held last Tuesday. It was moved that $1,000 be appropriated from the Babcock fund for the purchase of books for the Babcock Library. Recommendations were made as follows: That the bound volumes of the Popular Science Monthly, Scientific American, and Scientific American Supplement, be purchased from the general library out of the Babcock fund; that the price of catalogues be fixed at 25 cents for the paper copies and 50 cents for the leather bound copies; that the system of book delivery at the Irving School be put in the public schools, or other places in the city as the committee may deem best; that $500 be appropriated for the purchase of the books for the general library, and an additional sum of $100 be appropriated out of the general fund to be expended under the direction of the librarian, and a like sum out of the Babcock fund to be expended under her direction for scientific books; that book-plates be procured for the Babcock Scientific Library; that the expending be made of Sunday opening during such hours as may be determined upon by the committee.

A case of wilful mutilation of one of the books of the library having been brought to the attention of the board, the matter of the prosecution of the offender under the statute, was referred to the library committee with power.

A communication was received from the Mayor, nominating the following as directors for the three years ending July 1st, 1900: Mason W. Tyler, J. Evarts Tracy, H. P. Talmadge. The secretary then cast the ballot in their favor, and they were declared duly elected.

New Fire Alarm Box.

OUT TO SEE THE WORLD.

AN EMBRYO TRAMP ANXIOUS TO BECOME A JOLLY TAR.

Was Hauled In With a Number of Other "Coal Commuters," and When He Told His Story He Was Released.

Two young fellows from the shops near Bethlehem and three tramps tried their luck riding on coal trains, Tuesday. They arrived as far as Plainfield in safety and then a quartette of Plainfield policemen raided the train and the five unlucky "coal commuters" were landed in the city jail.

The arrests were made by Patrolmen Cash, Saunders, Lunger and Fraleigh, and the crestfallen victims of *the little raid spent the night in mor*alizing over the ill luck that has followed them from start to finish.

Wednesday the five were arraigned before City Judge DeMeza on the charge of trespassing on the property of the railroad. They gave their names as Joseph McDoodle, James Williamson, Harry Rathford, Peter Mack and James McGinnis, but it was easy to see that those were not their real names, for on several occasions the individuals did not remember which was which.

The Judge sentenced all to go to jail for ten days if a fine of $3 was not forthcoming in each case. He afterwards called McDoodle back and heard his story in private. The prisoner was only a young fellow and he looked different from the rest. He said that he had been in the shops at South Bethlehem, but that they had shut down until next year. His father and mother were not able to support him, and finding no work there he had started for New York to enlist in the navy. He has always loved the water, he said, and thought that he could pass the examination. He did not mind hard work, he explained, he had worked hard all his life, but he wanted to get on one of the modern men-of-war and see the world. He had a dollar in his pocket and the Judge suspended sentence on him and told him to buy a ticket for New York and get out of town at once.

James McGinnis was a laborer in hard luck bound for Jersey City to get a job on the railroad where he had friends. He had $2, a portion of which he agreed to spend for a ticket if the Judge would let him go. The Judge suspended sentence in this case. The other three offenders were all in the art of coal train commuting and went down to Elizabeth for ten days.

THE DOCTORS DINED.

Medical Association's Quarterly Meeting and Dinner.

The quarterly meeting of the Plainfield Medical Association was held at the Mountain Park Inn, last Tuesday. The members enjoyed a dinner first, and then adjournment to a cool spot upstairs where the business meeting took place. Dr. Murray read an interesting paper on "How contageous disease can be most successfully quarantined." A general discussion upon the subject followed. Those present were: Dr. Probasco, Dr. Tomlinson, Dr. Long, Dr. Fritz, Dr. Murray, Dr. Turner, Dr. Jenkins, Dr. Carman, Dr. Davis, Dr. Manning, Dr. Clawson, Dr. Hallock and Dr. Cox, who is taking Dr. Ard's place during the latter's absence.

Epworth League on Wheels.

The Epworth Leaguers of the Grace M. E. church joined the procession and held a bicycle social on Tuesday. All the other Leagues in the city were invited to participate, but the clouds that rolled up from over the mountain predicted rain and most of the young people stayed at home. A dozen of the cyclists from the Grace M. E. church gathered together and started for a little spin under charge of Rev. H. K. Carroll, who acted as pacemaker. The run was to Pumptown and return, and those who did go spent a very pleasant evening.

Fell From a Wheel and Hurt.

Harry Hartpence, of West Front street, is obliged to carry his right arm in a sling, as a result of an accident last Monday. He intended to ride his tandem wheel up town to meet a friend. Mr. Hartpence's little boy ran out in front of the wheel just as a trolley car was approaching, and being afraid of injuring his son and also of colliding with the car he attempted to escape both. In doing so he struck a stone which threw him from his wheel. He fell on his side and fractured his arm. He is now detained from work and will be for some time to come.

Death of Margaret E. Avent.

The death of Margaret E. Avent, aged sixty-three years, of 245 East Second street, occurred Wednesday, after an illness of gastritis. The funeral services will be held Friday, July 9th, at 2:30 p. m.

THESE WARM JULY DAYS

NO PROSPECT OF RELIEF FROM THE HEAT AND HUMIDITY.

A Genuine Summer Hot Wave Arrived Tuesday and Chased the Mercury Far Up the Tube—Horses Have Succumbed.

It is as much as one a life is worth to mention the fact that it is warm today. There were some people who were not satisfied with the cool weather that continued through the greater part of June; it is probable that they are not satisfied now.

There was no need of fearing that the warm weather would not come. It is not the warm weather alone that makes life so unpleasant for everybody that has to move these days, but it is the humidity that is so high. Summer is here with a vengeance and the summer weather is in its full glory.

Monday, when Independence Day was celebrated, was not unpleasant. It was warm, of course, but the heat was bearable and a fresh breeze made things more comfortable. Yesterday morning, however, the mercury began to climb steadily up in the glass tube as if threatening to go out the top. The humidity increased and the prespiration began to stand out on the faces of the sweltering people. There was a general exodus in the direction of the soda water fountains and ice cream stands about the city that filled the hearts of the proprietors with joy.

At 3 o'clock, the mercury had risen to 97 degrees in the shade while in the sun it was some twenty degrees warmer. Men wandered about without their coats and vests while little streams of water trickled from their brows. The horses hung their heads in mute appeal and waited for a release from their troubles. Several horses were reported overcome by the heat in the country districts surrounding Plainfield. The poor dogs lay about panting and with tongues hanging from their mouths.

While no prostrations from the heat have been reported as yet, the continuation of the hot wave will surely cause them. The clouds began to gather in the afternoon as if promising a shower as a possible relief to the sufferers, but the rain never came.

Wednesday showed no abatement of the hot wave. The thermometer registered 70 degrees at 7 o'clock, and two hours, rose six degrees.

The rise in the mercury continued all the morning and at noon the mercury was close to the ninety mark. Clouds gathered and made the heat seem the more oppressive while the actual temperature did not rise. Nobody feels like working and everybody looks warm and discontented, as they wander around in their shirt-sleeves and think of the little beads of perspiration that are constantly growing. Light clothing is to be seen on every side, but that offers but little relief.

Walter Daniels, a farmer, living two and one-half miles south of Bound Brook, bought a team of black horses at a sale in New Brunswick two weeks ago. They were western horses and both seven years old. While working in the rye field yesterday the heat was too much for the horses and they suffered a sunstroke and had to be shot. The thermometer registered yesterday 102 degrees.

VALUABLE DOGS POISONED.

The West End is Agitated Over the Danger to Its Canine Pets.

Inhabitants of the West End in the neighborhood of Stebbins place and West Third street, are considerably excited over the poisoning of the dogs which has been going on for the past three weeks. In that time about half a dozen canines in the neighborhood have died suddenly with symptoms of poisoning.

In some of the cases it is evident that the poison was thrown to the dogs while they were upon their owners' premises. Among the poisoned animals was a fine Scotch Collie dog, belonging to Chris Freis, No. 221 Stebbins place, and a St. Bernard dog, the property of Eugene G. Bane, of Lee place.

Efforts to discover who is doing the poisoning have so far failed.

Anxious to Leave the Hospital.

Joseph Ingersoll, who was taken to the hospital last Monday suffering with an injury to his head which was received while riding a horse at the trotting track, left the institution Tuesday without giving due notice. The physician in charge was desirous that Ingersoll should remain a day or two longer, but he was anxious to go and left very unceremoniously.

Miss Lillian T. Glen, of Craig place, and Miss Nellie Schutt, of Duer street, will go to Asbury Park this week to spend their summer outing.

AMERICAN FREEDOM.

THE STORY OF OUR VICTORY OVER ENGLAND.

She was Invincible in War and Flushed with Conquests when the Colonies Defied Her Authority, and Declared Independence—Another Such Revolution Will Never Be Known in History.

The Fourth of July 1897 witnesses Cuba striving for independence, Crete seeking autonomy and Ireland chafing under British yoke yet yearning to be free. The sympathies of all loyal Americans intuitively go out to these struggling provinces, who, were they permitted to follow their own inclinations, would adopt a form of self-government patterned after that of our own glorious Republic, shaking off as did we over a century ago the monarchial fetters that are so prejudical to the advancement of society and obnoxious to the freedom-loving individual.

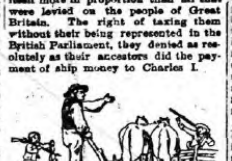
When we shall have accepted Hawaii which we come to us voluntarily, into the sisterhood of States, and have restored peace in Cuba to the satisfaction of her inhabitants and the acceptance of Spain, then should we be content and grow great within ourselves.

The story of our early rebellion against the unjust requirements of England is ever of interest, and none can read of the bravery and daring, the fortitude and privations and final triumph of those pioneers of American greatness without being stirred to warmer blood and patriotic pride.

The year 1763 terminated a war, which was both advantageous and glorious to Great Britain. The treaty of Paris, besides ceding to her several island in the West Indies and establishing her power in the East, gave her the sovereignty of the vast continent of America, from Florida to the Arctic Seas.

The expenses of the previous war had, however, been immense. In order to meet them and liquidate to some degree the national debt, resolutions were adopted by the ministry to tax the American colonies on certain articles of importation. Their ability to pay these taxes was not doubted; and it was considered proper that those who enjoyed so many advantages should contribute their portion towards bearing the public burdens.

The colonists, however, were fully persuaded that whatever might be the necessities of the mother country, yet, excissive of the restrictions laid during late years on their commerce, the sole enjoyment of their trade was a tax in itself more in properties than all that were levied on the people of Great Britain. The right of taxing them without their being represented in the British Parliament, they denied as resolutely as their accestors did the payment of ship money to Charles I.



THE MINUTE MEN.

Under orders of the Provincial Congress the inhabitants of the Colonies were enlisted as Minute Men, "to be in readiness at a minute's warning to appear in arms."

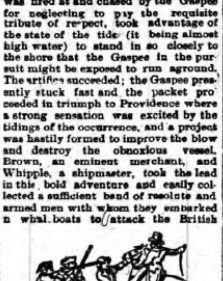
The ministry expressed astonishment at hearing such language from the colonists, charging them with ingratitude and disloyalty, and with being solicitous only to profit by the generosity of the mother country. The Americans repelled these unfounded charges with indignation. They gloried in calling Britain their mother country; they had never disgraced the title; they had ever obeyed her just and lawful commands; and they submitted, for her benefit, to heavy burdens and commercial restrictions.

In 1764 a bill was framed laying heavy duties (payable into the British treasury in specie) on all articles imported into the colonies from the French and other islands in the West Indies. This was followed by an act restraining the currency of paper money. In 1765, to complete the link so unjustly begun, was passed Greville's famous Stamp Act, the prelude to the most treasonous and destructive measure that had befallen Britain for several ages. It was styled "the folly of England and ruin of America."

Although some acts favorable to the commerce of the colonies were passed, the people became suspicious and placed no reliance on the good will of the British Government. They especially mistrusted the king. Resolutions were adopted to make no further importations from Great Britain; and so far was the encouragement of domestic manufactures persevered in that the use of all elegancies was laid aside and the eating of lamb suspended in order to encourage the raising of wool.

Ministers were chagrined and astonished to find that a great portion of the British nation espoused the cause of America. But, disregarding all opposition to Parliament, all remonstrances of the colonists as well as petitions from the United Kingdom the Government madly proceeded in the prosecution of its impracticable schemes. At this period the fame and grandeur of Great Britain were so great that no one imagined that the colonies would presume to dispute any measure dictated by the ministry. The splendid triumphs of the British nation in all parts of the world had excited the jealousy of Europe and the idea of the colonists risking a trial of prowess with the armies and fleets which had defeated the combined strength of France and Spain was considered presumptuous and visionary. It was, therefore, matter of astonishment to learn the extraordinary and resolute conduct of the Americans in opposing the restrictions on their commerce and the operation of the Stamp and Tea Acts. From the period of the Stamp Act in 1766 until the cargoes of the tea-ships were thrown overboard in December, 1773, included a period of seven years of seleme resistance.

The master of a packet conveying passengers to Providence (June 9), which was fired at and chased by the Gaspee for neglecting to pay the requisite tribute of respect, took advantage of the state of the tide (it being almost high water) to stand in so closely to the shore that the Gaspee in the pursuit might be exposed to run aground. The artifice succeeded; the Gaspee presently stuck fast and the packet proceeded in triumph to Providence where a strong sensation was excited by the tidings of the occurrence, and a project was hastily formed to improve the blow and destroy the obnoxious vessel. Brown, an eminent merchant, and Whipple, a shipmaster, took the lead in this bold adventure and easily collected a sufficient band of resolute and armed men with whom they embarked in whal boats to attack the British



CAPTURE OF MAJOR ANDRE.

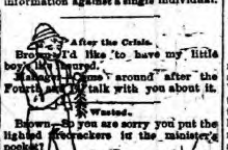
—Incidents of American History 1853.

Major Andre, a British officer, connived with Benedict Arnold, U. S. Commander at West Point, for the transfer of that garrison. After a conference with Arnold he was captured, convicted as a spy and shot. Arnold escaped to the British lines and received the price for his treason—a knighthood in the King's Army.

ship-of-war. At 2 o'clock the next morning (June 10) they boarded the Gaspee so suddenly and in such numbers that her crew were instantly overpowered, without hurt to any one except her commanding officer, who was wounded. The captors having despatched a part of their number to convey him, together with his private effects and his crew, ashore set fire to the Gaspee and destroyed her with all her stores.

The issue of this daring act of war against the naval force of the king was as remarkable as the enterprise itself. The British Government offered a reward of £500, together with a pardon if claimed by an accomplice, for the discovery and apprehension of any person concerned in the treasonable attack upon the Gaspee; and a commission under the great seal of England appointed Wanton, the Governor of Rhode Island; Peter Oliver, the new Chief Justice of Massachusetts; Auchmuty, the Judge-Admiral of America, and certain other persons, to preside upon the trial of the offenders.

But no trial took place. Nobody came forward to claim the proffered reward; some persons who were apprehended in the hope that they might be induced by threats and terror to become witnesses were enabled by popular assistance to escape before any information could be extracted from them, and in the commencement of the following year the commissioners reported to the British ministry their inability, notwithstanding the most diligent investigation, to procure evidence or information against a single individual.



After the Crisis.

Brown—I'd like to have my little boy take an errand.

Jones—Come 'round after the Fourth and I'll talk with you about it.

Wanted.

Brown—So you are sorry you put the lighted firecrackers in the minister's pocket?

Little Johnny—Yes, dad. It was the biggest one I had, and it didn't go off.

Plenty All.

The Fourth of July once more is brightly here,
The firecracker's shattering tone
It tickles the heart of the little boy,
The doctor and the undertaker.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

The day of days is near at hand—
The day we celebrate,
The day when men recall again
The grandeur of our State.
All hail the glorious Fourth of July,
That brings forth to mind
The thought of what the patriots wrought,
For us, in days long since!

Hurrah for the great, the glorious Fourth,
Fair Freedom's natal day!
The day when sons were brothers again,
And caste is pushed away!

Gunpowder and Fireworks.

Gunpowder plays every small part in modern fireworks. There are, for example, a single particle of gunpowder used in a rocket, wheel case, fountain or bomb, except so much as is necessary to raise it in the air.

The metal used for the purpose of coloring is generally nitrate of strontium. An ordinary white can be made of saltpeter, sulphur and charcoal, but antimony or orpiment is added for purity of color.

The strong points about Japanese fireworks is found in those used for daylight exhibitions. These are truly astonishing, and have attained a character unapproachable by other makers. They can fire bombs which explode and exhibit phenomenal effects. Again, they will appear a full rigged ship, which, while floating in safety, will run up her colors and fire a salute; another will produce a thunder cloud, others showers of fans, a man on horseback, revolving suns, and so on. Indeed anything which their desire. All are intensified and well executed. No other forces these daylight wonders at their best it is necessary to have a clear, bright sky, without a cloud to mar its purity. In spite of the Japanese have not yet made much progress, their efforts being immature.

APPOINTMENT OF WASHINGTON

Five Hundred Dollars Monthly Was Voted for His Expenses and Salary.

In 1774 the Continental Congress made fresh appeals to the King and people of Great Britain.

To his majesty they professed as strongly as ever their devotion to his person, family and government; their deep regret at any event which could weaken their connection with his crown and their ardent desire for the restoration of harmony. To the people they strenuously repelled the charge of aiming at independence, which none of their actions were said to justify. They had never made overtures to any foreign power nor availed themselves of the weak state of the cities to become masters of them. Complaining, however, that the clemency of their sovereign was diverted, that their petitions were treated with indignity and that their prayers were answered by insults; they dreaded that the nation wanted either the will or the power to assist them. In that case they expressed a firm determination that, "while we revere the memory of our gallant and virtuous ancestors, we never can surrender those glorious privileges for which they fought, bled and conquered; your fleets and armies can destroy our towns and ravage our coasts; these are inconsiderable objects—things of no moment to men whose bosoms glow with the ardor of liberty. We can retire beyond the reach of your navy and without any sensible diminution of the necessaries of life enjoy a luxury which from that period you will want—the luxury of being free."

Having exhibited these declarations Congress proceeded to make military arrangements which should comprehend the whole range of colonies. All the troops within their limits were to be now called the Continental Army; committees were appointed to devise ways and means for supporting and supplying it with arms and stores and preparing regulations for its government. An issue of paper money was voted to the amount of three millions of dollars. The first object was considered to be the choice of a commander and in this respect they were singularly fortunate. There had at this time sprung up among them an uncommon number of men of distinguished abilities, and though some were in this respect superior to him, it was generally agreed that the fittest person was George Washington. Without very brilliant talents or even very extensive information he possessed sound sense, comprehensive views, a deep and devoted patriotism. These had been displayed in a manner so firm, simple and manly as rendered it impossible even to entertain a doubt of the thorough dependence which might be placed on his fidelity to the cause.

Five hundred dollars monthly had been voted for his pay and expenses, but being possessed of an ample fortune he declined anything beyond the reimbursement of his actual outlay.

TRAINING OF CONTINENTALS

—From an Engraving 1813.

THE GROWTH OF PYROTECHNICS

No Grander Effect Ever Reached than that Produced at the Centennial.

It is only within the last twenty years that the art of making fireworks has been brought to its high pitch of excellence. The Centennial at Philadelphia, in 1876, and the summer exhibitions at Manhattan beach created a demand for something more than a firecracker, cascade or ordinary rocket.

The public of to-day craves big bombs, floating lights, intricate devices, aquatic wonders, and above all good colors. No country in the world is there so great a demand for high class fireworks as in the United States. It is estimated that more than $1,000,000 is burned up in fireworks on every "Glorious Fourth of July."

The ingenuity of pyrotechnists has been taxed to the utmost to supply new effects or invent combinations that should startle, as well as delight an insatiable public. Nothing finer will probably ever be invented than the balloon effect, which was one of the features of the World's Fair. A balloon was sent up over the lake with what appeared to be a lantern suspended from it. At a given moment the balloon blew up with a shower of stars, while in its place was seen a blazing similitude of the Stars and Stripes suspended in mid-air.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

The Men Who Wrote It and Their Patriotic Disinterestedness.

In May, 1776, the colonies on the proposition of Mr. Adams were invited by the General Congress to establish their several State Governments. On the 7th of June the resolution of independence was moved by Richard Henry Lee. On the 11th a committee of five was chosen to announce the event to the world, and Thomas Jefferson and John Adams stood at the head of this committee. From their designation by lot to this most honorable duty their elevated standing in the Congress might alone be inferred, for their amicable contention and deference each to the other of the great trust of composing the all-important document, we witness their patriotic disinterestedness and their mutual respect. The trust devolved on Jefferson and with it rests on him the imperishable renown of having penned the Declaration of Independence of America. To have been the instrument of expressing in one brief decisive act the concentrated will and resolution of a whole family of States; of unfolding in one all-important manifesto the causes, the motives, the justification of the great movement in human affairs which was then taking place; to have been permitted to give the impress and peculiarity of his own mind to a charter of public right, elevated to an importance in the estimation of men beyond everything human ever borne on parchment or expressed in the visible signs of thought, this is the glory of Thomas Jefferson.

PATRICK HENRY'S ELOQUENCE.

The Burning and Prophetic Words He Uttered to the Virginia Assembly.

The early example of Massachusetts in preparing for defence was followed by the other provinces, and war-like counsels were boldly broached in the provincial assemblies and congresses. When some members of the Virginia assembly urged the postponement of these preparations, reminding their colleagues of the power of Britain and the comparative weakness of America, and insisting that it would be time enough to fly to arms when every wellfounded hope of peace had entirely vanished, Patrick Henry, with enthusiasm and victorious eloquence, contended that time had already come. "It is natural," said he, "to man to indulge in the illusion of hope. We are prone to shut our eyes against a painful truth and listen to the song of that enchantress till she transforms us into beasts. There is no longer any room for hope. We must fight. I repeat it, sir, we must fight. An appeal to arms and to the God of Hosts is all that is left us. They tell us that we are weak and unable to cope with so formidable an adversary. But when shall we be stronger? Will it be when our supineness shall have enabled the enemies to bind us hand and foot? Sir, we are not weak if we make use of those means which the God of nature has placed in our power. Three millions of people armed in the holy cause of liberty and in such a country as ours are invincible by any force which our enemy can send against us. Nor shall we fight our battles alone. That God who presides over the destinies of nations will raise up friends to fight our battles for us. The battle is not to the strong alone but to the vigilant, the active, the brave. Besides, we have no longer a choice. If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late to retire from the contest. There is no retreat but in submission and slavery. Our chains are forged, their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston. The war is inevitable, and let it come! Gentlemen may cry 'Peace! Peace!'—but there is no peace. The war is actually begun. The next gale that sweeps from the north will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms." These last words proved propoetic.

Points for a Parent.

To have a successful display of fireworks the amateur or paper families should purchase samples and not get rattled. The constant firing of rocket after rocket of the same kind is monotonous and economics profuse.

A large amount of material it is just as well to look over pieces during the daylight, setting them up ready for firing before dark. You might get "rattled" at night and dare not go over the whole pile with a lighted match or spark. Have your pieces run freely on their nails. Burying the tubes and batteries half way in the ground, so that it will be impossible for them to turn over and bombard your friends, and always keep your parties rushed to a good distance away from the scene of operations, never putting them on the ground, but placing them against a wall or fence, so that there is no danger of their going off prematurely.

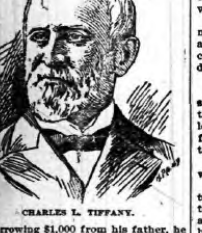
85 AND STILL AT IT.

WHAT NEW ENGLAND GRIT DID FOR ONE BOY.

Charles L. Tiffany Was but a Country Lad 15 Years Old When He Began Business in a Village Store—Now He is at the Head of the Jewelery Trade of the World

On the 15th of February, in the historic year of 1812, in Danielsonville, Windham County, Conn., was born Charles Lewis Tiffany, founder of the house of Tiffany & Co. Mr. Tiffany is now 85 years old.

The first fifteen years of this remarkable man's life were spent much as the average country boy's. In working around from time to time on the farm, and during the Winter months attending the little red schoolhouse. When Mr. Tiffany was only fifteen years of age, his father, Comfort Tiffany, opened a little country store in Danielsonville, giving his son Charles complete charge, and it was in this humble and modest way that the great jeweler made his start in life. In the capacity of village storekeeper Mr. Tiffany spent the following ten years of his life, making frequent trips to New York City to buy merchandise for his store, and where he formed many valuable business acquaintances. In 1837 he decided to move to New York and establish a business there for himself.



CHARLES L. TIFFANY.

Borrowing $1,000 from his father, he entered into partnership with John D. Young, a former neighbor and schoolmate, who had come to New York some six months previously.

By 1841 the business had grown to such proportions that it was decided to send a member of the firm abroad to purchase stock from the foreign markets. To-day this would seem a step of little or no importance, but at that time it was an almost unheard-of thing for an American to send a buyer abroad, and it was considered a bold and hazardous business venture. But this idea, which was Mr. Tiffany's, like all other of his ideas, proved to be full of wisdom and success.

In 1850 the Paris branch of the house was established. As in the case of the New York house, the Paris branch rapidly developed, and soon became one of the largest jewelry establishments of France.

Mr. Tiffany can look back with satisfaction at the results he has accomplished not only in the mercantile world, but in the mental as well, for it is largely due to his efforts that the minds of the general public have become so well educated in the fine arts as they have.—New York Times.

4,000 DUELS A YEAR IN GERMANY.

1,000 a Year in France and 2,750 Duels in the Last Ten Years in Italy.

More duels are fought in Germany than in any other country. Most of them, of course, are student duels, which culminate in nothing more serious than slashed cheeks or torn scalps. Of all German university towns little Jena and Goettingen are most devoted to the code. In Goettingen the number of duels averages one a day, year in and year out. On one day several years ago twelve duels were fought in Goettingen in twenty-four hours. In Jena the record for one day in recent times is seven. Of late 4,000 student duels are fought every year in the German Empire. In addition to these there are the more serious duels between officers and civilians. Among Germans of mature years the annual number of duels is about one hundred.

Next to Germany, France in most given to the duelling habit. Of the serious duels, France can boast fully 1,000 from New Year's to New Year's. The majority of those are among army officers. More than half of these result in wounds; nearly 20 per cent in serious wounds.

Italy has had 2,750 duels in the last ten years, and has lost fifty citizens by death on the field of honor.—New York Sun.

A Re-adjusted Programme.

"Things seldom turn out as we expect," remarked Mr. Harkins thoughtfully. "When I first went to the city I made up my mind that I would live in a suburb and lead a double life."

"Sir!" exclaimed the lady to whom he was talking.

"I merely meant I would have two suits of clothes. I would be a swell in the city and a farmer in the village."

"And didn't this plan work?"

"Not the way I expected it to. It wasn't six weeks before I acquired the firm impression that I was a farmer in the city and a swell in the country.—Washington Star.

A SACRIFICE.

(By Martha Alberta Freeman.)

Margaret sat on the time-clad porch smoothing the crumpled pages of the manuscript in her lap with a tender, caressing touch. Hamilton, coming slowly up the long walk, wished he had not pledged himself to show Margaret that Harold Fairfax was not the man she supposed him to be.

They talked of other things for a while; but at last he succeeded in bringing Harold's name into the conversation, and almost before he knew it he was unravelling the mystery of the manuscript.

Margaret looked at him with astonished eyes.

"How many times," she said tremulously, "I have passed him on the street and purposely didn't see him! Oh, if I had only known that Harold had gone into that burning house at the risk of his life to rescue my manuscript—why didn't somebody tell me, Mr. Hamilton?" And before Hamilton could answer, "Will he ever have the use of his arm again?"

"Oh, yes, in a few weeks, perhaps." Hamilton wished that it was his arm reposing in a sling instead of Harold's. "A lucky thing for Fairfax that it was the left one. He is working at the reviews again, and putting the finishing touches on his story. It is the best thing that he has ever done. He intends to enter the Times prize contest."

As Hamilton talked on he became so enthusiastic that Margaret saw Harold with his friend's eyes.

"I am going to write to Harold to-night," she said, "and tell him that I am sorry for our foolish quarrel. If I can, I will thank him for what he has done for me."

* * * * *

John Hamilton sat by the window, smoking, sometimes looking down into the almost deserted street, sometimes letting his gaze fall upon Harold Fairfax, who was writing away at the table at the other end of the room.

"Lord! almost dark enough to stop work, Fairfax?" he said.

Harold rose and brought his chair to the window, and Hamilton began to tell him of the visit to their old home at Fairville, and about Margaret, but he said nothing concerning the manuscript.

Just then a letter was brought to Harold. He held it close to the window to get light enough to read it. His face was bright when he finished.

"Hamilton," he said with a laugh, "I told you I was to tell her I liked that manuscript, and I especially warned you against telling her about the wonderful arm."

"But you know you are glad that I did."

Twilight deepened into night. They talked of the literary prize contest, and of Harold's chances of success; they talked, too, of Margaret. Hamilton said her story was inferior to Harold's, upon which the latter began impatiently to sum up the good points in her work.

"It's a fine story," agreed Hamilton, "but I think I can show you wherein yours is the better of the two."

Harold was silent after that, thinking of many things.

Hamilton puffed away, seeing nothing, thinking of nothing but the vision of Margaret in her white gown sitting among the green vines and the yellow roses, the sunlight tinting her red-brown hair, as she bent over the manuscript in her lap. At last he came back from his paradise.

"By the way, Fairfax, as your story is ready, you had better send it in. The time is short now."

"I have decided not to send it at all." Harold said in a quiet voice.

"What do you mean? Why, you have talked of nothing else for weeks."

"I am convinced," Harold said, "that my story is better than Margaret's. I am going to keep it back that she may have one more chance to win, one less to lose her prize."

John Hamilton was staggered. He was stricken dumb for a second, then he broke into a torrent of expostulation, rebuke, persuasion, but to no purpose. Nothing could shake Harold's resolution.

* * * * *

Margaret's story won the prize, and among the many letters of congratulation which she received, not one was more heartfelt and sincere than Harold's.

She was not at all puffed up by her success, and could not show her gratitude sufficiently to Harold for rescuing her manuscript from the fire; her distress that he still caried his arm in the sling was genuine; but Harold knew that he had more than his only gratitude, and Hamilton knew it, too.

Hamilton was between two fires at this time; torn and tortured by the conflicting voices of love and friendship.

As he sat opposite Margaret, one evening, he resolved to tell her of Harold's self-immolation. It was hard to do; he was loth to disturb the girl's rejoicing over her success, and he was more loth to make Harold a hero in her eyes. But he remembered a time when one of his friends at school, and Harold Fairfax alone had stood by him, so he told his story at last, with all the eloquence of earnestness.

Margaret's face grew white.

"Now that I know what you have told me"—her voice was almost a whisper—"I see that Harold, with his arm in a sling, and so pale and worn, I feel that I ought to love him as he loves me. But I can't!" she said after a little pause. "I can't!" And Margaret, the self-possessed, laid her head on the table and sobbed.

That was too much for Hamilton's resolution. Almost before he knew it he was imploring her to dry her tears saying he would make it all right—though he probably could not have told just what he meant by that—and telling her how much he longed to make all things right for her, and asking for her love for himself, as he had asked it for Harold, more earnestly, perhaps, more successfully, at least.

Harold came in unheard. He saw Margaret smiling through her tears at Hamilton, who was bending over her chair. He knew intuitively what had happened, and for the moment his heart was full of bitterness toward his friend. He had trusted him above all other men. He turned to go, murmuring something about not wishing to intrude. Margaret sprang to her feet and laid a detaining hand on his arm.

"Harold, forgive us both! You willingly gave up your chance of success for me. I would repay you with the love that you want if I could, but it is impossible. I promised to try but if I were to try for a century it would be a hollow mockery. Will you take my friendship, my highest esteem?"

Harold clasped the proffered hand.

"Your friendship will always be my most valuable possession, Margaret," he said, and again turned to go, without looking at Hamilton, who stood perfectly silent.

"But won't you forgive John?" pleaded Margaret, looking from one to the other in dismay. "You were such great friends, and—and I am to blame for something to say—I am sure he couldn't help it."

"That's just it, Fairfax, I couldn't help it. I know what you are thinking—that I ought to have told you before; that there was nothing to tell. I had resolved never to speak to her of my love, feeling that you had the greater claim. I scarcely know how it came about. I was trying honestly to show you to Margaret in your true character when I—I—I love her. Before I was aware of it, I had spoken what I had resolved never to utter. I came here to tell her of the sacrifice of labor and sleep, and thought and time and hope, which you had made for her, and—"

"My dear fellow, you couldn't have done otherwise. With all my heart I congratulate you and wish you happiness."

He went out, and Hamilton, watching him as he disappeared down the moonlit street, murmured to himself—

"He is a better man than I, but I would not change places with him"

A Punctual Judge.

Judge Maguire, one of the California pioneers, is a great story teller, and when the Judge sits down in one of the cloak rooms to enjoy his cigar half a dozen of his colleagues will always gather around in the hope of getting him started on some of his Western experiences. Most of these have to do with matters that have occurred in some court or other on the Pacific slope.

"A certain well known judge in California," said Mr. Maguire, in one of his reminiscent moods, "is a great stickler for punctuality. He was worse when he first went on the bench than he is now, however. In those days I have known him to fine an attorney $10 for being late as many minutes, and read him a long lecture besides. No excuse was accepted for being late, and punctuality became quite the rule in that court.

"One morning the Judge himself failed to put in an appearance on time. Of course, all the attorneys were there promptly, and there was great hilarity during the ten minutes' wait that ensued. When the Judge appeared he was greeted with numerous sarcastic inquiries about his health. He paid no attention to these remarks, however, but, soberly taking his seat on the bench, he leaned forward and said:

"'This court, gentlemen, is no respector of persons. Mr. Clerk, you will enter up a fine of $10 against the court.' Then he took $10 out of his pocket and handed it to the clerk, adding, 'and please mark it paid.'"—Washington Post.

Story from Arizona.

A good story is told at the expense of Nestor Massart, the tenor. When he started on the night train, with many a bump and jar, to a sudden stop on the Arizona desert the other night, many of the ladies thought that a serious accident had befallen them, and that they were on the verge of death, or at least of a awful catastrophe. Massart, however, who had for weeks been posting himself on the West by reading wild stories of Arizona life, believed that the train had been attacked by Apache Indians, whom he confidently roamed over the territory in all their aboriginal ferocity. He warned all his fair friends to keep behind the curtains while he reconnoitered. Just as he cautiously poked his head out from his berth the railroad conductor entered the car to allay the fears of the singers. In the dim light Massart mistook the dark visage of the porter, for that of an Apache chief. Wrapping himself in many bedclothes to form a shield against the assaults and arrows of the red men, he leaped from his berth to the center of the car, and hurled his boot at the porter.

"You sall kill me before you molest zese ladies. I git my heart blood for dem," he shouted, in tragic heroism in his best English, not knowing that Arizona Indians understood French.

Then Massart fell forward, half dead with fright, the bedclothes carefully pulled over his head. It required repeated assurances to convince the opera singer that he had not been scalped. A day later, at Banning, he saw a real Arizona Indian, by daylight. Since then it has not been safe to refer to the episode in Massart's presence.—San Francisco News Letter.

HOW KENNAN LEARNED.

By Perseverance He Lost the Fear that Had Governed Him.

"When I was 17 or 18 years of age," said Mr. Kennan, "I went as a telegraph operator to Cincinnati. I had become so morbid and miserable by that time that I said to myself one day: 'I am going to put an end to this state of affairs here and now. I am afraid of anything. I'll conquer my fear of it or die. If I'm a coward I might as well be dead, because I can never feel any self-respect or have any happiness in life; and I'd rather get killing or trying to something that I'm afraid to do than to live in this way.' I was at that time working at night, and had to go home from the office between midnight and 4 o'clock A. M. It was during the Civil War, and Cincinnati was a wide open city such as it ever has been since. Street robberies and murders were of daily occurrence, and all of the 'night men' in our office carred weapons as a matter of course. I bought a revolver, and constructed a cover for it that would hide it myself. When I finished my night work at the office, instead of going directly home through well-lighted and police-patrolled streets, I directed my steps to the slums, and explored the worst haunts of vice and crime in the city. If there was a dark, narrow, cut-throat alley down by the river that I felt afraid to go through at that hour of the night, I clenched my teeth, cocked my revolver and went through it—sometimes twice in succession. If I read in the morning papers that a man had been robbed or murdered in a certain street, I went to that street the next night. I explored the dark river banks, hung around low drinking dives and the resorts of thieves and other criminals, and made it an invariable rule to do at all hazards the thing that I thought I might be afraid to do. Of course I had all sorts of experiences and adventures. One night I saw a man attacked by highwaymen and knocked down with a slungshot just across the street. I ran to his assistance, frightened away the robbers and picked him up from the gutter in a state of unconsciousness. Another night, after 2 o'clock, I saw a man's dead cat, down by the river, and a ghastly sight it was, but although somewhat shaken I did not become faint nor sick. Every time that I went through a street that I believed to be dangerous, or had any startling experience, I felt an accession of self-respect.

"In less than three months I had satisfied myself that while I did fear, I was not so much daunted by any undertaking but I could do it, and then I began to feel that I was a man.

"Soon after this time I went on my first expedition to Siberia, and there in almost daily struggles with difficulties, dangers, and sufferings of all sorts, I finally lost the fear of being afraid which had poisoned the happiness of my boyhood.—From the Atlantic.

HER HANDS ARE MAGNETS.

Wonderful Power Demonstrated by a Georgia Girl.

A strange exhibition of a wonderful power was recently given in the presence of Governor W. G. Atkinson, of Georgia. The demonstration occurred in the Governor's reception room in the Capitol at Atlanta, and the possessor of the wonderful power is Miss Fannie Hester, of Greene County, Georgia.

The first experiment tried with the young lady before Governor Atkinson and his party was with a silver dollar. This was placed in the palm of her hand, and the muscles immediately began to twitch and jump. Several of those present felt her hands and noticed the strange pulsation. A large, round stick was then placed in her hand, and as soon as it touched the palm it kept continually in motion, whirling around with great rapidity. Several tried to push against her, but she could not be moved from her tracks. The Governor's private secretary was strong enough to make her expend all his strength to push the girl back, but could not move her.

Experiments were then tried with a chair, and although four men caught hold of it and attempted to keep it steady, it was moved in easily in all directions with one hand. She seemed to use no exertion whatever, yet the four men opposing her were powerless in resisting her. It was the greatest difficulty to lift her from the floor, and when she was lifted it was an impossibility to lift her feet more than an inch from the floor.

In this respect Miss Hester's abilities are very similar to the celebrated Lulu Hurst, but the magnetic palming is a distinctive feature.—New York Journal.

Test for Seasickness.

Many people have a genuine curiosity to know if they would be seasick in case they should take an ocean voyage.

An easy way to put the matter to a test is to stand before the ordinary swinging looking glass in a hotel, and set some one move it slowly and slightly at first, and gradually growing faster while you look fixedly at your own reflection.

If you feel no effect whatever from it, the chances are that you can start an ordinary sea voyage without any qualm.—Golden Days.

Toys of Ancient Egypt.

It seems very odd to have unearthed the playthings we left as the tables and carry lances, and give a good idea of the style of military equipment prevailing in the time of the Pharaohs.

STRENGTH.

Strength for to-day is all we need.
As there will be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day
With its measure of joy or sorrow.

Strength for to-day—in house and home,
To practise forbearance sweetly
To scatter kind words and living deeds,
Still trusting in God completely.

Strength for to-day! What a precious boon
For the nurse, and the mother,
For the willing hands that minister
To the loving friend or neighbor!

HE HAD HIS CHOICE.

BY W. PETT RIDGE.

It was an eccentric gallery, with pictures painted by men who were young enough to know better, of sprawling ladies in green, scarlet landscapes, and blue angels. The frames formed themselves a grim attraction to most of the visitors; the catalogue was usually preserved by suburban patrons for the purpose of frightening birds.

"It does one good," said Mr. James Marchant, "to come to a show like this. If I ever go out to the Cape again—"

"Which you won't," said the young lady.

"And I feel wistful—"

"Mal du pays," suggested the young lady.

"Exactly. Why, then, I shall think of this hideous collection of pictures, and I shall feel reconciled to my lot. The Cape is not all honey, but at any rate you do get nature there. And nature is always good."

"I suppose these artists think she can be improved by the introduction of a little novelty—"

"I mean it," said James Marchant, waving his stick round the gallery, "give twopence halfpenny for the lot of them."

"I don't suppose they would care to sell them for less."

Mr. James Marchant laughed good-temperedly, and touched her hand, which happened to be resting on her knee. It was a very pretty hand and neatly gloved, and there was good excuse for him.

"But there is something," he said, lowering his voice, "in the gallery, Ella, that I would give every penny I have in the world to possess."

"A picture?"

"Prettier than any picture?"

"Statue?"

"Better shaped than any statuary."

"Not disposed of already?"

"I hope not. There is only one difficulty—I am not sure, if I were to make an offer now, that it would be accepted."

"How shall you find out?"

He rose and adjusted his frock-coat with the manner of a man to whom for some years frock-coats had not been familiar wear. He was a tall, broad-faced man, with a good deal of earnestness in his eyes.

"I shall ask Mr. Beckett."

"Oh!" she said. She gasped a little before she went on. "And you—you think my step-mother will be—will be able to give in the matter?"

"I think she will."

"It seems to me," she said, rolling over her catalogue very tightly, "rather an old-fashioned mode of procedure."

"There is this excuse in my case, Mrs. Beckett knows. I am afraid that I have brought back from the Cape untold gold. I want to make her understand that, when I say I shall have to work for my living, I really mean it."

"I am glad," she said quietly.

"I know that you are, dear. But I suppose parents are different."

"My parent is."

"And if she objects, why," he looked down upon her affectionately, "I shall just ask you up, Ella, and run off with you."

"Now," she said delightedly, "that is more old-fashioned than ever."

"I shall see you to-night?"

"I am sure," she said, with her little hand pressed for a moment in his, "I think the invitation is for two only."

"I have a great mind," said James Marchant, looking down at her affectionately, "to kiss you."

"That is no evidence of a great mind," she said reprovingly. "Besides, you are in London now."

"I am afraid," said James Marchant, apologetically, "that I have much to learn before I become re-civilised. The Cape makes one forget a one's manners."

"It has not made you forget your friends," she said.

"There was one," he said, as he assisted her into the hansom, "she was only a small girl—"

"Not old enough to count?"

"Or whom I thought every day of my life out there."

There were tears in her eyes that challenged the lightness of her goodby. The small gloved hand was pressed for a big fist of freedom from the Cape for one moment, and then he gave the address to the driver.

It was with great dexterity that at dinner in Duke Street Mansions that night Mr. James Marchant contrived to get himself paired with the excellent Mrs. Beckett.

"I should have thought you would have insisted, sir—by insisted on taking down my dear Madeleine."

Mrs. Beckett fluttered her fan as she spoke in a manner that had in the early seventies been pronounced bewitching.

"I want particularly to speak to you, Mrs. Beckett. I want to offer my self—"

"Sh-sh!" said Mrs. Beckett mysteriously. "Not a word. I know exactly what you are going to say. Madeleine, my dear," she called to a tall, bony damsel just in front of them, "you haven't shaken hands with dear Mr. Marchant. How very remiss of you! The dear girl is so thoughtless, do you know, Mr. Marchant, that I declare to goodness I believe she's really in love."

Miss Madeleine received this raillery with a grim smile, and shook hands with Mr. Marchant. Miss Madeleine explained that her half-sister Ella had remained at home because she had some writing to do.

"Poor Ella'" said Mrs. Beckett, with effusive sympathy, "poor dear girl. I'm really dreadfully sorry for her. You must give me your advice, Mr. Marchant, concerning her at dinner. I feel already—forgive me for saying so—I feel already as though you were one of the family."

"I have noticed it all along, do you know, and I am so delighted. Quite enchanted, really. And my influence with the dear girl will make her like you. I dare say you may have thought her little—what shall I say, cold?—but, as a matter of fact, it has only been—oh, bless my soul, think soup, please—what is the expression? It has only been—it has only been—"

"Maidenly reserve," suggested James Marchant.

"Pre—cisely! Pre—cisely what I was trying to say. How clever of you, dear Mr. Marchant!

"I want to speak to you about that, Mrs. Beckett. I'm afraid you don't realize what I mean when I say that I haven't brought much home with me."

"Now, my dear Mr. Marchant—"

"You must allow me, please, to tell you exactly my position. Unless I work and earn money we shan't have—"

"Mr. Marchant, this elaborate ruse is one that I have heard of before. A woman like myself doesn't live in this world for—well, a certain number of years for nothing."

"No," said Mr. Marchant, "it costs money, I know."

"That is not at all what I mean. But when you came back from the Cape a few weeks ago, and hinted that you had only a few hundreds, I could see through it at once. It was—this is a dreadfully slangy expression—too thin. But the dear girl, of course, didn't see through it, and consequently you may feel quite sure that she will love you for yourself alone. That's all you wanted, isn't it?"

"That, most certainly, is all that I wanted, believe."

"And, fortunately enough to confirm my suspicions, I came across a letter addressed to a friend of mine; she didn't know that I saw it, but I managed to do it, all the same—from your partner, Burchison."

"Really?"

James Marchant was suddenly interested.

"And Mr. Burchison said that you and he had made a pile—such an odd expression—of two or three thousand pounds. And he said that he thought you would both stay on for a few years, but, as we know, you sensibly enough came home."

Mrs. Beckett looked triumphantly across at her angelic daughter opposite, who was bawling information about the weather to a deaf archdeacon, and then at Marchant. She shook her head waggishly at the man from the Cape.

"Can I see that letter?" he asked sharply.

"Luckily I have it in my pocket, but I really don't know whether I ought to show it to you. You see it is private."

"Is that why you took it, Mrs. Beckett?"

"Come, come, Mr. Marchant. Don't be too severe. One has to keep one's eyes open in this world."

She found the letter with some difficulty, for the pockets in ladies' dresses are remote and difficult to access, and, under ambush of his plate, Marchant read it.

"Mrs. Beckett," he said excitedly, "you have, without knowing it, done me a very great service. Burchison declared to me that he had invested our gains, and that all the money had been lost. It seems from this letter that he has behaved shamefully, and I shall make him disgorge every penny that belongs to me. I shall go back to the Cape by the next boat."

"This is very unsatisfactory," declared Mrs. Beckett, aggrievedly. "You can't very well get married before next Saturday."

"The dear girl will wait," he answered confidently.

"I am not so sure of that," said Mrs. Beckett sharply. "Dear Madeleine is not so young as she was."

"So I should judge. But what has she to do with the affair? Is she to be bridesmaid?"

"Madeleine has been bridesmaid quite often enough," said her mother. "This time, providing this money affair of yours comes out right, she will be the bride."

"Whose bride, Mrs. Beckett?"

"What does the man," cried Mrs. Beckett, "yours."

"I don't see how that can be managed with convenience. There's a law against bigamy, I believe. Besides, I only want to marry your stepdaughter."

"Ella?" exclaimed Mrs. Becket, in amazement.

"If you don't mind."

Mrs Becket laid down her knife and fork, and stared distractedly around the table at the other guests. Finally her eyes rested on Madeleine, and she frowned so much at that point that that Madeleine asked across the table in an audible tone if she were ill.

"Ill" echoed Mrs. Beckett, tartly; "I have uncommonly good cause to be. To think that I have taken all this trouble for the sake of Mr. Beckett's ridiculous little daughter by his first wife. Why, she isn't worth—"

"Excuse me,' interrupted Marchant, promptly; "you will remember, please, that you are speaking of a lady who is to be my wife."

"Rah!" said Mrs. Beckett.—Chamber's Journal.

THE HOT WEATHER.

These are the days when everything that has life lolls and lags under a broiling hot sun. And it is well that such is the case, else the doctors, and possibly the undertakers, would be overworked and thus be defying the promptings of brain and brawn in these torrid dog days. The less work done on a day when the mercury in the thermometer hovers above the ninety degree mark the better it is for all mankind. Those whose vocations fall due just at this period of oppressive heat can consider themselves fortunate individuals, indeed. The mortals whom necessity calls to duty must feel comfortable as best they can.

A GREAT SCHEME.

An enormous consolidation scheme is back of this whole Westfield avenue trolley business. There's a road in Plainfield, one in Somerville, two trying to get possession of a line between New Brunswick and Bound Brook, one in Rahway, one in Elizabeth; others here, there and all through the State. The local companies are merely conveniences for handling local conditions. By and by the big company, in whose interests they are all working, will gobble them up.—Elizabeth Journal.

ELIZABETH'S TAX RATE.

The Elizabeth Council sat up all one night and fixed the tax rate for the financial year of the city which has just begun. The rate is $2.88 per $100, the same as last year. It will be noticed that the tax rate in Elizabeth is considerably higher than that in Plainfield or New Brunswick.

Hurt His Arm.

Mr. Johnson, night watchman at the car house of the street railway company, met with a painful accident a few days ago while at work in the house. The injury was to his hand while he was moving some very heavy material from one place to another. At first he thought very little of the accident but it was not long before his arm began to swell. He has suffered intense pain and is now under the care of a doctor. It is thought that blood poisoning may set in.

Hurt Her Forehead.

Mary Wilson, five years old, daughter of W. W. Wilson, of West Third street, met with an accident Saturday afternoon while her father was assisting her from his grocery wagon near the stable. The little girl struck her head against a wheel on the wagon, inflicting a severe wound on the forehead. Dr. Boone was called and treated the injuries, and the girl is now doing nicely.

Martin Act Commissioners to Meet.

On Thursday afternoon and evening of this week the Commissioners appointed to serve under the Martin Act, will convene in the City Council rooms to meet those interested in the enforcement of the act. The Council will also meet in the evening of the same day.

A Runaway.

As George P. Mellick, of LaGrande avenue, was getting out of the carriage, Friday afternoon, his horse ran away. He ran to Crescent avenue, turned around, and was stopped in front of Neuman's grocery store. Fortunately, Mr. Mellick was not injured.

You may hunt the world over and you will not find another medicine equal to Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for bowel complaints. It is pleasant, safe and reliable. For sale by T. S. Armstrong.

CAME AWHEEL TO WED.

HAPPY YOUNG PEOPLE FOUND HYMEN'S ALTAR IN THIS CITY.

They Were Friends of Miss Host McVey Who Piloted Them Through the Nuptial Channel to Everlasting Joy in Life.

A marriage with a tinge of romance was celebrated in this city Sunday afternoon about 5 o'clock. Miss Caryl Alphretta Williams and Harold Alexander Frazee, both of Newark, rode their bicycles to this city and were united in marriage by Rev. J. W. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church. The two have been close friends for a long time and recently decided to be joined in wedlock in Plainfield on a cycle trip.

The young couple are intimate friends of J. H. McVey, of North avenue, and they knew of no better person to call on to assist in their nuptial union than that genial personage. When they arrived here they made known their mission to Mr. McVey and he accompanied them to the home of the officiating clergyman where the ceremony was performed.

After congratulations the party returned to Mr. McVey's place where a wedding supper was served. Early in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Frazee returned to Newark on their wheels. The bride is an estimable young woman, while her husband is a valued employe of one of the newspaper offices in Newark.

PATRIOTIC SERVICES.

Stars and Stripes Presented to a Sunday-School.

At the First Baptist church Sunday morning services appropriate to July 4th were held. During the Sunday-school hour Superintendent R. K. Case presented the school with a large American flag. The flag was the work of Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, and it was originally intended for the Boys' Brigade of the church. The latter organization disbanded, however, and the flag was given to the Sunday-school. At the regular church service music of an appropriate nature was rendered by the choir and the pastor, Rev. Dr. Yeakes, delivered a very able discourse full of American ideas and suggestions.

At the Y. M. C. A. building Sunday afternoon a service was held especially for the G. A. R. and S. of V., of this city. The large hall was filled with a good-sized delegation from each organization, and in addition there was a large number of interested people present. On the platform was arranged a campfire scene while overhead was a heart made of flowers in the centre of which was the word "Welcome." The address of the afternoon was delivered by Rev. L. E. Livermore, a member of the G. A. R.

Valuables in the Bottom of a Well.

Mrs. F. I. Smith, of Netherwood, dropped her pocketbook containing $50 and some valuable papers down a forty-foot well in fourteen feet of water Saturday afternoon. After unsuccessful attempts by others the McVoy brothers succeeded in lowering the water to three feet. Then by descending to the bottom in the icy cold water until chilled through, Percy McVoy found $40 of the money, but David Hand, a nearby resident, thought that $10 and the papers were too valuable to leave there he descended to the bottom and succeeded in finding the balance of the contents of the pocketbook.

Accused of Perjury.

Peter Boyd, who is employed as a butler in a Plainfield home, was arrested Saturday afternoon by Sergeant Kiely on a warrant issued by Justice Newcorn on complaint of Detective Burmingham of the Central office in New York. He was charged with being a fugitive from justice. He is accused of committing wilful perjury *in a case in New York. He was re*leased on $300 bail to appear before the Justice every day to report to allow the New York authorities to secure extradition papers.

Competed Against the Best.

George Proctor Smith, of the Plainfield High School, was one of the nine contestants for the all-round championship of the A. A. U at the grounds of the N. J. A. C., Monday afternoon. Smith was the youngest competitor and although he finished eighth, he made a good showing considering the circumstances and that he was competing against the best athletes in the county.

Couldn't Prove the Charge.

John Thomas, a colored man, was arraigned before Justice Mosher, Saturday afternoon, on a charge of assault and battery, preferred by Mrs. Mary Levine, of Cottage place. William G. DeMeza appeared as Thomas' counsel. After hearing the evidence, the Justice discharged Thomas.

A Girl Who Broke It To Her Sorrow.

She was a young woman, and she had broken the law; she did not know it, but that did not save her. Candy eating was her crime. Her stomach and bowels were deranged. Her blood almost water. The doctors said she must cease eating candy and begin taking iron, but she could not take the iron which they gave her. It upset her stomach and disagreed with her generally. She heard of Capsuloids and took one with each meal, and dropped all other medicine. They cured her. They cured her also lately. THE DAY AT DUNELLEN

FESTIVITIES ARRANGED BY WILLIAM G. HOLTON COUNCIL.

Bicycle and Running Races, With Other Features, Made the Day a Pleasureable One—Results of the Various Contests.

The borough of Dunellen presented a scene Monday such as has not been witnessed in many a day. It was a genuine old-fashioned Fourth of July, and it was held under the auspices of Wm. G. Holton Council, Jr. O. U. A. M. From the very start the members took hold of the affair with great zeal and energy, and at no time was failure thought of. The citizens of Dunellen were pleased with the prospects of seeing a big celebration and they were certainly satisfied with the results.

The festivities were held in the large field at the end of the trolley line, and a better spot could not have been selected. The committee in charge provided everything for the comfort of their guests and nothing was lacking to make the affair a complete success.

The races were held on North avenue, from the end of the trolley car tracks to Taylor's Hotel and back, and they were so arranged that the finish was near the grounds where the festivities were being held. The first race was for boys under fifteen years of age. The first prize was a gold watch, and this was won by Ernest Peters, while the second prize, a pocket cameera, was awarded to Fred Vail, both of Dunellen. The bicycle race for the championship of New Market and Dunellen was won by Bert Taylor, of Dunellen. He was awarded a gold badge. The second prize, a pair of gold cuff buttons, was won by Alfred Osmun, of New Market.

The one-mile bicycle race, open, was won by Peter Simmons, colored, of Plainfield, and William Dodd, of Plainfield, second. The first was presented with a gold badge and the latter received a gold penholder.

The last race, which was a 100 yards running contest, was won by Teddy Barron, of Dunellen, and he secured a diamond scarf pin. The second man was Dennis Kane, and a suitable prize was given him.

As an additional feature of the afternoon and evening there was dancing music, which was furnished by Guttman's orchestra. A large number availed themselves of this privilege. In the evening the very handsome display of fireworks attracted a very large crowd, and after the exhibition many remained to dance. This part of the programme was continued until an early hour this morning, and to accommodate the crowd the trolley cars were kept running until nearly 2 o'clock.

Light That Are Not of Service.

The committee on trees and lights of the Common Council made tours of the city on last Wednesday and Thursday nights to inspect the present system of street lightning. It was found that in many places the lights are obscured by the foliage of trees, so as to be of no service whatever. The committee is preparing its report to the Common Council upon the matter of substituting arc lights for incandescent lights upon the principal streets of the city.

Not Known Here.

Mayor Fi-k received a telegram from Coroner McDowell of Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday, saying that Harry Wolfshon, of Plainfield, had been killed there and asking the Mayor to notify the relatives and telegraph as to the disposition of the body. The Mayor and Seargent Kiely hunted over the town but could find no one who had ever heard of a man by that name. It is supposed that the man came from Plainfield in some other state.

Spent the Day in the Woods.

The members of the Independent Scheutzen Corps spent Monday in Hyde's woods where a good time was enjoyed. There was excellent shooting and the social feature of the occasion was delightful. The committee in charge provided plenty of good things to eat and the programme was all to be desired. The attendance of the members and their friends was large and not a thing happened to mar the pleasures of the day.

SOME NOISY CELEBRANTS

FOUR CAPTURED MANY FOURTH OF JULY OFFENDERS.

One Man's Defense of a Woman in the West End Cost a Number of Persons in the Toils—Other Offenders Lined Up.

Mayor Fisk shared the honors of the bench in the city court with Judge DeMeza, Tuesday morning. The Judge passed sentence on a number of offenders while the Mayor listened with interest to the proceedings.

George Feller was arraigned on the charge of being drunk and disorderly on East Front street. The complaint was made by Patrolman Saffron. He said that Feller tried to raise a disturbance in Caspar's Hotel and Caspar asked that he be ejected. The officer said that he twice tried to get the man to go home and behave himself, but that he would not and was consequently locked up. Feller's story was rather incoherent and the Judge decided he was guilty and fined him $5.

Charles Ward and Edward Mead, colored, admitted that they had been shooting craps, yesterday, when arrested by Sergeant Kiely and Roundsman Flynn, Monday afternoon. They were fined $3 each and warned not to celebrate in that manner again.

The trial of James Laing was adjourned until Monday. Patrolman Flanagan had an adventure with William Brown and now suffers from a dislocated thumb. A fight arose on West Third street, Monday afternoon, between Brown and William Goff. Goff claims that Brown was fighting with a woman while Brown says that he was only fussing with her. Goff told him to stop. Words followed and then came blows in which Goff was laid out. Brown fled and Flanagan pursued. Brown tried to run past him and the officer grabbed his coat. Brown twisted about so that the officer's thumb was dislocated but he held his man. Brown and Goff were locked up. Goff resisted Sergeant Kiely when the latter went to arrest him and Edward Eskerson assisted in the resistance. Eskerson was also arrested. Those three men and Edmund Brown, a brother of William, were arraigned Tuesday morning and pleaded guilty. Eskerson was fined $5, Goff was fined $8, and Brown was fined $10 and sent to jail for ten days. There was no direct evidence against Edmund Brown and his trial was laid over until Saturday to allow time for investigation.

ROISTERS BROKE A BELL.

Westfield Presbyterians Exercised Over Antics of Exuberant Youths.

The trustees of the Westfield Presbyterian church have offered a reward of $25 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of certain persons who on Saturday night broke into the church, broke the bell so that it could not be rung for church on Sunday morning, and wrought other damage in the building.

This year an effort was made to prevent the ringing of church and school bells at midnight, but on Saturday night entrance was forced into the Methodist and Presbyterian churches for the purpose of ringing the bells. The crowd was so large that the constables were unable to check it.

When it was seen what damage had been wrought, the church people were *indignant and the Presbyterians re*solved to discover and punish the guilty parties.

It is said that the young men implicated in the affair belong to well known families in the town.

A Case of Scarlet Fever.

Dr. Zeglio, of Somerset street, was called to the Manhattan Hotel Monday to treat a young woman named Miss Annie Fitzgerald, a domestic at the hotel who is ill. As soon as the doctor made an examination he learned that the woman was ill with scarlet fever, and she was in a peeling condition. The doctor reported that case to the health authorities and they immediately quarantined the place. The proprietor of the hotel was much surprised that there was a case of scarlet fever and did not want the authorities to think that he was trying to conceal the fact.

The Difference

"I see no difference between H-O and any other oatmeal!" We know it. The difference is not to be seen. You taste and smell, and feel the difference, though!

H-O

is different from all others, in that it is more sweet, smooth, delicate, digestible. Its preparation begins where the others leave off. It is twice cooked, once by steam, once by super-heated air. Thus half the work of digestion is done, and the system is never over-taxed or over-heated.

Be sure to get the package with the big H-O on the end.

POSTMISTRESS IN DANGER.

Miss Bornman, of Warrenville, Thought Rapidly and Extinguished the Flames.

Warrenville's postmistress had an exciting experience with fire, Thursday evening, that nearly resulted in the destruction of her home. Miss Maggie Bornman is the postmistress of that little town where she resides. Last Thursday evening she was striking a parlor match when the head of the match flew off and set fire to a rug at her feet. Fearing that her skirts might catch on fire from the blazing rug she hurried from the rug and returned with some blankets with which the flames were smothered.

The damage caused by the fire was slight, the rug and a portion of the carpet having been burned.

Gave Blows for Insults.

Wm. Parker, a colored waiter in the City Hotel, had some trouble with a party of boys on East Front street, early Monday morning. He claims that they used insulting language to him. One of the boys, Arthur Jennings, says that Parker struck him. Chas. Bogert is said to have come to Jennings' rescue and broken a board on Parker's head. A lad named Pope claims that Parker kicked him in the mouth and broke a tooth. The boys say Parker was drunk.

Fractured Several Small Bones.

While John Burke, of West End, was working in the sand pit near the Potter Press Works, last Saturday, he fractured several small bones in his leg. He was using a dirt scoop, when one of the chains broke allowing the heavy piece of iron to strike his leg with sufficient force to fracture a number of small bones. He was assisted to his home and medical aid was summoned. Mr. Burke will be confined to his house for some time as he is unable to use his leg.

"Last summer one of our grandchildren was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory, of Fredericktown, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, Park & North Aves.

A family picnic was held Monday at the home of Mrs. L. J. Denton, of Prospect Hill. There were about twenty-eight relatives present, and the day was thoroughly enjoyed in a social manner. The affair was given in RACED FAST ON CYCLES.

AMATEURS PEDALED TO WIN EVEN BY A TIRE'S WIDTH.

Crescent Wheelmen's Tenth Annual Meet Was a Success in Providing Exciting Contests, But the Crowd Was Not Large.

Numerous entries, fast racing and a pleasant day all combined to make the tenth annual race meet of the Crescent Wheelmen, held Monday afternoon on the Crescent Oval, a great success as far as that part of the meet was concerned, but as far as the audience went, it was not. Barely 700 people were standing about the grounds or sitting on the stands. There is evidently something the matter with bicycle racing in Plainfield. While the meet was not advertised outside of Plainfield until a day or two before the meet, yet the strangers outnumbered the townsfolk that went to the races.

The races were good. There were no professional events on the programme and many of the crack athletes of the amateur ranks were elsewhere, but the entries were numerous and the riders were in for all there was in it and rode well and fast. The track was not in the best of condition, especially at the short turn to the right of the grand stand. The loose gravel there made the turn dangerous and many falls resulted. Falls at other places were quite frequent, but nobody was hurt beyond sundry scrapes and cuts and bruises.

A little wind made the riding rather hard on the long turn, but it was not sufficient to affect the time in any degree. It was very warm, however, and the 700 spectators took turns in pulling at the racers and mopping the perspiration from their brows.

A word of commendation should be said for the management in the manner in which the events were run off. There were no tiresome delays between the different events and everything passed off quickly and smoothly and to the satisfaction of the audience.

The novices made a good showing. They were numerous and rode hard and fast, furnishing many exciting finishes. Phillip Cregier delighted his club mates of the Cleveland Cyclers of this city by riding second to H. Potter, of Rahway, in the first heat. In the final heat, six riders sprawled over the track at the short turn and Potter was among them. Darby, of Brooklyn, won with Cregier a wheel behind. The second and third heats of that race were won by colored men, one of whom was accused of being the cause of the tumble in the final. W. A. Leek, of Morristown, took the first of a series of four tumbles and had to be carried into the dressing room.

William M. McCutcheon did not appear for the one mile open and the Knickerbocker Athletic Club team, Owen and O'Connors, had everything their own way in the first heat and in the final. They made a pretty finish, Owen winning in each case by half a wheel. The second heat had to be run over, Harry Lister, of the Crescent Wheelmen, taking second.

They were four heats to the two-third mile handicap. R. R. Howard, of Yale University, team mate of McCutchen's, was the only scratch man to start. He had just caught the bunch on the first third when four riders went down ahead of him on the fatal turn and the Yale men rode over the prostrate form of one of them before he could stop. Tumbles occurred in every heat. The final was close.

The mile handicap was run in three fast heats. In the first, O'Connor was the virtual scratchman though starting from the thirty yard mark. He caught the bunch but was pocketed on the home stretch and had five spokes pulled out from his front wheel by the pedal of another rider. O'Conner was thrown but not injured.

Owen rode from scratch in the second heat but the effort was too much and he could not get better than the sixth. In the third heat, Lindley M. Hillman, of the Plainfield High School, had entered but the handicapper had forgotten to award a handicap. He was put at the thirty yard mark by Referee Gentle and fell out after catching the bunch on the last lap. Harry Lister won that heat. The final was not close and Lister finished third.

The two mile handicap was rather exciting for the men were well then the race wound up with an exciting finish, inches separating the first bunch of riders.

The two mile tandem was ridden twice. A time limit of 4:45 was put on the race by Referee Gentle and the riders would not ride fast enough. Doyle and his partner were compelled to pace the entire distance but then finished third. The Knickerbocker team won easily. One tandem spilled its riders in the last lap. The time was 4:51. It was declared no race. The runover ended the programme. The teams took turns pacing and a hot pace was set throughout. Two teams dropped out after the mile, leaving three remaining. The Knickerbocker riders won by a beautiful burst of speed with their plucky opponents half a dozen lengths behind.

The summaries of the events were as follows:

A TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

Hillside Club Members Enjoyed a Pleasant Day's Sport.

There was not a very large attendance at the grounds of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club Monday morning when the foursome were played. The game was an interesting one, however, and those who participated put up good scores. The match was run by Dr. Richards and C. F. Walz in 93 strokes. The other scores were as follows:—William Wadsworth and H. W. Beebe, 99; J. S. Anthony and J. P. Murray, 103; Lester Glenny and F. W. Walz, 111.

The afternoon was devoted to the tennis tournament, which was quite successful and attracted more people. The following scores were made:—Goddard beat Hunter, 6-3; Hunter beat Goddard, 6-4; 6-2; Ryder beat Abbott, 6-1, 6-4; Ryder beat Fish, 6-0, 6-4; Fish beat Richardson, 6-0, 7-5; Simmonds beat Hunter, 6-1, 4-6, 6-2.

The social feature of the affair, which was a tea in the pretty clubhouse, was well attended. Mrs. George Chapman presided and was assisted by several of the young women who frequently attend the teas. Those who attended the grounds passed a most profitable day and enjoyed themselves very much.

Picnicked at "Hilltop."

Miss Sarah Schuyler, of LaGrande avenue, gave a picnic at Mrs. F. O. Herring's cottage, "Hilltop," on the mountain, Saturday afternoon, in honor of her guests, Miss Marion Hartley and Miss Anna Mollick, of New York. About thirty were present. Supper was served on the piazza and all enjoyed the cooling breezes until dark when the party adjourned to the Mountain Park Inn for an informal dance. The return was made at about 11 o'clock.

Mr. C. L. Hasbrouck, a druggist at Mendon, Mich., says all of the good testimonials that have been published by the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy could be duplicated in that town. For

HAIL TO THE WOMEN!

HER FREEDOM FROM BALLOT RESTRAINT DECLARED AT LINCOLN.

Housewives and Maidens Invited to Participate in the First Election and Two of the Fair Sex Were Chosen as Solons.

Hail to the women!

Mark the day of their emancipation from the ban of participation in public duties—July 5th! And on a day when the celebration of the declaration of independence of the United States was being observed with patriotic pyrotechnics, the freedom of the women of Lincoln from ballot restraint was declared with great gusto.

Lincoln is the new town that was established a year ago and Monday for the first time, its citizens gathered in the town hall to organize a local government. As might be expected, the men took the initiative in arranging the preliminaries. A caucus was called and Silas D. Drake, the founder of the place, made its chairman.

The men who attended the caucus had gone so far as to nominate Chairman Drake for Mayor, and to determine that there should be four members of the Common Council. Two of the latter had been decided on in the persons of Rev. J. B. Cleaver and R. P. Bache, when Mr. Drake arose and said that he had a new idea which he believed would not only be popular, but just. He proposed that women have a voice in the government by having the Council divided as to sex, and to also permit them to vote at the election. The suggestion was received with varying phases of emotion by the other men, but the persuasive words of Drake finally prevailed.

"The meeting stands adjourned for a half hour," yelled Drake, "and I appoint you Sam Johnson, George Godfrey and Abe Gulick a committee to bring the women here, or as many as will come."

The committee departed and were seen hustling around many back doors, and in the course of a half hour twenty-seven mature housewives and comely maidens had joined the men at the town hall. Drake explained his idea and it was received with satisfaction on the part of the fair sex. A canvass among the women developed the candidacy of Miss Emma Egel and Mrs. Oliva Hazard for Councilmanic honors. They proved acceptable to the men and then, with a few other nominations, the ticket was completed. The polls were opened immediately afterward with L. S. Cook and George Ramsey as tellers. Forty-nine votes were cast, of which twenty-seven were by the women, and the nominees were declared to be the officials of Lincoln.

Many of the women had come direct from their housework and gave a domestic touch to the political affair. The announcement of the election was followed with a great chattering of voices until Mayor Drake found his voice and called for order. Then the Mayor delivered a speech full of nice words for the women. He said that he believed the two women who were chosen as town solons would act to the credit of the community and prove that their sex was equal to the performance of the public functions now exclusively monopolized by the men.

Miss Egel is just past twenty-one years of age, handsome of face and figure. Her associate in the Council is thirty years of age and the thrifty housewife of George Hazard, an employe of the Quaker Oats Company.

When Mayor Drake was seen last night by a Press reporter he said that the idea of having women possess equal privileges with the men in the matter of municipal government in Lincoln was prompted by the efforts of the Woman's Town Improvement Association, of Plainfield, who have suggested to many city officials a fuller conception of their duties, and who have also inaugurated several admirable reforms on their own account.

The purposes of the municipal organization are to exercise more of a moral influence than a legal authority. As a matter of fact the community is not yet in a position to organize under the State borough act, but it is intended that in every detail the town's officials shall act as though their determinations were binding. Lincoln people are adhering to the theory that the organization among themselves will yield such moral influence that when matters directly effecting them come before the Piscataway township committee, in whose bailiwick they live, the latter will bow to their demands or requests as mirrored in the actions of the officials named yesterday.

New Manufacturing Plant.

Charles R. Dey has sold a farm he owns near Plainsboro, Middlesex county, to a company which intends to establish a plant to make improved food for infants. The company will take possession of the farm, for which $11,000 was paid, on September 1. The site is considered desirable, as it will be about half way between the cities of New York and Philadelphia.

People often wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they start at every slight but sudden sound; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and nervous

Dyspepsia

The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood which is continually feeding the nerves upon refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. In such condition opiate and nerve compounds simply deaden and do not cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich, red blood; gives natural sleep, perfect digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

WILL NOT OWN HER CHILD

MRS. GEORGE SNYDER, HER NEIGHBORS ALLEGE, IS INSANE.

When Her Demented Spells Seize Her, She Declares That Her Husband and Children do Not Belong to Her.

A woman's piercing screams rang out once and again at midnight, last week, near the corner of West Fourth and Liberty streets. People who were in the vicinity saw Mrs. George Snyder, of 447 West Fourth street, rush frantically from the house and down Fourth toward New street.

Policeman Higgins, who does night duty in that section of the city, saw the woman, and gave chase and captured her.

Her talk to the policeman soon convinced him that the woman was insane. The man, who was in their apartments and pretended to be her husband, was not her husband at all, she explained to the officer, but was someone masquerading as such. She also refused to take her ten-weeks-old babe, saying that it was not her child.

After considerable persuasion on the part of the policeman and a number of the neighbors, Mrs. Snyder consented to go into the house. Ten minutes afterward she again ran into the street screaming, but was at once taken back into the house and remained quiet during the rest of the night. The policeman did not think it necessary to make an arrest, and she was left in charge of her husband and some neighbors.

The case of Mrs. Snyder, as revealed to a Daily Press reporter by the neighbors, is a peculiar one. She is the wife of George Snyder, who plays a cornet in Germania band of Mrs. Mrs. Snyder live in humble circumstances, in the basement of this house at 447 West Fourth street. They have three children, the youngest of which is only ten weeks old.

The woman is subject to sudden fits of insanity, which last sometimes for only an hour. When in this condition she denounces her husband as an impostor and declares that the children are not hers She has several times, when suffering from mania, declared herself to be the wife of a prominent Plainfield city official.

She is a pretty woman, about thirty years old, and when not under the influence of her strange malady, seems devoted to her husband and children. When her name is mentioned the neighbors shake their heads and remark solemnly,

"She's not right, poor thing."

A LONG SUIT.

It Has Just Been Decided in Favor of The Pangborn Estate.

Last Friday, the suit which was brought in the New Jersey Supreme Court a year ago by the heirs of the Isaac W. Pangborn estate against Oscar S. Teale, the architect, was brought to an end. The suit was brought to recover some $2,400 alleged to be still due on Teale's residence in Washington Park. The verdict gave the plaintiff $661 and costs.

Isaac W. Pangborn was a well known contractor in the borough. He had the contract for the building of Teale's residence in Washington Park and completed it in 1897. It was claimed that there was a balance on the account still due. A suit was brought a year ago by Senator Charles A. Reed, attorney for the Pangborn estate, to recover it. The case was referred to County Stenographer Herbert W. Knight as referee, and testimony was taken.

The defence claimed that they were really the creditors in the matter and that they had overpaid the plaintiff. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, of this city, was the lawyer for Mr. Teale.

Yesterday, a decision was given out by the court giving the plaintiff judgment to the amount of $661.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

DELIGHTFUL EVENT AT THE SUMMER HOME OF ROBERT CLARK JR.

The House and Grounds Were Charmingly Decorated For the Occasion—Guests Present From Newark and Plainfield.

On July 2nd, 1872, Robert Clark, Jr., and Miss Amanda Martin were married at Trinity church, Newark. Last Friday, surrounded by about fifty of their neighbors and friends from Newark and Plainfield, they celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of that event at their beautiful home in the Washington Valley. Mr. and Mrs. Clark's reputation as hospitable entertainers was more than sustained and the delightfully informal manner in which everything was conducted made this silver wedding something long to be remembered by all who were present.

A party of their most intimate Newark friends came out last Friday to attend the anniversary of their wedding, while one of Captain Hand's stages brought a party of fifteen friends from this city and the borough. A wonderful sight burst on the view of the visitors as they approached Mr. Clark's home. Chinese lanterns were hung all about the large lawn, and around the house itself, while two strings of lanterns were hung from a Liberty pole that stood seventy feet into the air.

The shower that visited Plainfield in the afternoon did not reach Mr. Clark's home and so the festivities were held on the lawn, which was dotted with chairs and benches. So charming was the prospect, with the many lanterns illuminating the scene, that the visitors could not help singing, "We Won't Go Home Until Morning" as they drew up to the house.

On the lawn stood a large table, handsomely decorated with an immense bouquet of flowers, and a collation was served later in the evening, of which Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Maynard were in charge. Another table was of equal interest. It bore the presents that the couple had received in honor of the anniversary. A handsome diamond ring was the gift of Mr. Clark to his wife. Then there were many other gifts of value. The crowning piece of all was a gift from the firm of Wharton & Co., the largest wholesale fur hat manufacturers in Newark, of which Mr. Clark is the junior partner. The other members of the firm could not be present, but they sent a handsome plush case which contained a complete set of solid silver knives, forks, tablespoons, dessert spoons and teaspoons.

After the guests had partaken of refreshments, two large rooms were thrown open to them and Guttman's orchestra struck up a familar strain. It was too much to resist, and soon nearly the entire party, young and old, were in the midst of a quadrille.

The celebration was to last from 7 to 11 o'clock, but it was after 12 o'clock when the guests who sang as they departed, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." It was a delightful evening for all and the memories of that evening will remain with the guests for many a day.

THE ICE POND CLEAN.

North Plainfield Board of Health Heard Important Reports.

An important meeting of the North Plainfield Board of Health was held last Friday at the home of the Rev. Mr. Honeyman, secretary of the board. The members considered first the report that the new ice pond at Washingtonville was not clean. Health Inspector William N. Pangborn was present and he made a report in which he stated that he had thoroughly inspected the pond and every stream running into it. He said that he found everything to be perfectly satisfactory and the water to be absolutely pure.

A communication from Mayor Fisk, of this city, was received which was sent to Mayor Wilson, of the borough. The substance of the letter was that the city asked the hearty co-operation of the borough particularly regarding the milk question. In response the borough members said that in all matters pertaining to public health they are willing to co-operate.

The fact was brought out at the meeting that a great amount of poor milk was being consumed by boroughites, and the members decided to take steps at once to put a stop to it. At present there are only eight cases of scarlet fever in the borough, and only one of these is a serious one. The others are all mild cases.

Executive Session.

The executive session of the Borough Council held last Friday after the regular meeting was for the purpose of discussing the report presented in relation to the delinquent taxes now due the borough. Considerable time was spent in discussion but nothing definite was decided. Regarding the vacancy made by the resignation of Marshal Graeder it was decided to use for awhile the newly-appointed specials, in this way a suitable man can be selected to do regular duty.

THEY PLAYED FOR CASH.

SUCH IS THE CHARGE AGAINST FOUR MEN IN THE CITY COURT.

They Were Held for Trial, Saturday—A Suspicious Character With a Razor Went Down the Road—Keely Discharged.

Four offenders, who gave the names of Gilbert Surphen, Adam Smith, James Smith and Arthur Jackson, were arraigned before Judge Dayton in the city court Saturday charged with poker playing. Night Roundsman Fredrickson was passing through East Second street at 3 o'clock that morning. He saw the four men enter the clubhouse there. The roundsman's suspicions were aroused and he directed Patrolmen Saffron and Vanderweg to make an investigation.

A light was seen at a second story window, and the officers secured a ladder, climbed up and took a look at what the men were doing. They claim that they saw the men gathered about a table, with playing cards and money circulating freely.

The players were surprised in the midst of their game, the officers say, and did not even have time to remove the "kitty" which was taken along as evidence by the policeman.

The prisoners were placed in the city jail until next morning.

Lawyer Walter L. Hetfield appeared for the men at their examination. They were placed under $100 bonds each to appear for trial on Saturday.

Michael Heffran, who was drunk and disorderly on Watchung avenue, near the brook, on Thursday night, was fined $8, with the alternative of 20 days in jail. He could not pay and so went to jail.

Wm. Trust was arraigned upon the charge of being drunk and disorderly, and received a sentence of $10 fine or 20 days. He paid the fine. Michael Doran, charged with non-support by his wife, was placed under $200 bonds to support Mrs. Doran and her child.

John Keeley, charged with violating the hack ordinance, made a good defence and was discharged.

Timothy Walters, a colored man, arrested as a suspicious character, attempted to give an account of himself to his honor. He said that he had come from New York city, but told conflicting stories. A keen razor was found in his possession, and the Judge gave him 40 days in jail.

AN OLD NEVADA TRAGEDY.

The Fight Between Bodlen and Chimay at the Bodie Saloon.

"I saw a great deal of killing in one form or another, and a heap of savage fights in Nevada's mountains," said Capt. William Mason, once of the Comstock Lode and a score of other lodes in the Silver State, "but for surprise and horror the fight between Bodlen and Chimay in the Bodie saloon lay over anything else by long odds. It was about midnight that the men fell to fighting—what it was about I forget now—but the saloon was running full blast, and there was a scattering to get out of the way of the shots. But the shooting was all on one side, for the cylinder on Chimay's pistol wouldn't revolve, and Bodlen sent shots into him until Chimay fell with enough holes in him to let out three lives. He was carried into a back room and laid out on the floor to wait for the Coroner, and then everybody went back into the front part of the saloon and the games and the drinking went on as lively as before.

"Bodlen, as the winner, was naturally popular and a good deal looked up to that night, and had a good many invitations to drink, and he set 'em up and took 'em off and on. He was standing at the bar with a group around him, the hero of the night. Of a sudden the door of the back room, where Chimay had been laid away, opened, and the first man that looked gave a yell like an Indian and nearly fell backward, and the rest of us felt like doing the same thing when we saw that it was Chimay standing there, pistol in hand, looking round. He saw the man he wanted, and by this time everybody between him and Bodlen had got out of the way. He raised his pistol and Bodlen pulled his, and the shots rang out again, but this time Chimay's pistol cylinder revolved, and at his second shot Bodlen dropped his pistol, staggered and went down on his face, shot through the heart. Chimay watched him fall, and then his pistol dropped from his hand and he fell backward into the room a corpse for good this time.

"For clear nerve and resolution, what Chimay had done beat anything I ever knew of. Left to himself he had revived, picked up his pistol, taken it apart, fixed the cylinder so that it would work, and then came out and shot his man. That was a specimen chip of Nevada in the old days."

Mr. Bigdough (severely)—James, don't you know if I was to slip on those banana skins I'd make a somersault?

James—"Indade, sir, and I don't doubt it; it's very clever yez always was.

"How fast you are growing, Tommie."

"Yes. Too fast, I think. They water me too much. Why, I have to take a bath every morning."

BACK TAXES IN BOROUGH

BOROUGH COUNCILMEN HEARD INTERESTING STATISTICS.

Most of the Business at the Council Meeting Was of a Routine Nature—More Fire Companies Planned for Over the Brook.

There was a great amount of routine business transacted at the regular meeting of the Borough Council held last Friday, and notwithstanding the excessive warm weather every member of the council was present. After the reading of the minutes the first business taken up was the reception of the clerk's financial report, which was as follows: Borough, balance, $3,013.73; fire department, $178.23; roads, deficit, $130.57; light, balance, $1,646.09; poor, deficit, $421.73; total balance, $4,286.05; total deficit, $552.30; balance, $4,285.75; paid county and State, $3,262.84; total balance, $1,023.-21. There was collected from fines, licenses, etc., $480.42.

Tax Collector Spencer reported the following collections for the years named: 1893—$43.85; 1893—$48.26; 1894—$23.09; 1895—$74.38; 1896—$274.23; total reported to date, $40,831.40.

The names of L. Bimble, C. W. Hummer, T. Gunning, H. Klinsman and G. Blimming, were reported as having been elected to membership in West End Hose Company, but there seemed to be some doubt on the part of the Council as to whether the above persons were the proper ones as to age to be members of the company, and the matter was laid over until next month.

A communication was received from J. B. Coward, in which it was stated that the street commissioner of the borough had notified certain property owners on the east side of Chatham street, from Thomas Rutledge's residence to the Elm street bridge, to lay stone walks and curb. Mr. Coward said that at present it would be a hardship for the owners to lay walks, and as there were several changes in the property expected before long, he asked the Council to be easy about enforcing the law. He also asked that the street commissioner be instructed to give the owners the proper grade lines so that the owners could go accordingly when they were able to lay walks and curbing. Mr. Coward communicated with the Council as attorney for the property owners, and the matter was referred to the proper committee.

Mr. Hotchkiss and others asked the Council to place two crosswalks on Rockview and Washington avenues, and Rockview and Sycamore avenues. The petition was referred but later in the evening it was decided that the people in that vicinity were well supplied with walks.

R. M. Fountain and others asked that the Council locate three electric lights on Johnston's drive in the limits of the borough. It was stated later that the North Plainfield Township Committee were willing to divide up the lighting providing the borough would do her share, and the proper committee was given the power to locate the lights, number of the pole to exceed three. It is probable that there will be only two lights erected as the entire distance is about two hundred feet.

At this time the resignation of Marshal Charles Greader was received and accepted. It seems that Mr. Graeder went on duty June 5th, and he wanted full pay for the entire month. Because he would not accept the amount due him, he decided to resign his position.

Mr. Woolston, chairman of the street committee, submitted his report for the month of June. It showed that the amount of $369.41 had been expended on the streets of the borough. Out of this amount the work of macadamizing Rahway street had been paid for. Mr. Woolston stated that Mayor Wilson's heart had been touched and he desired that the people living on the above street should have as good a thoroughfare as any in the borough. Mr. Spencer had raised $125 toward the work and the Mayor had said that if the Council would not approve of the work he would pay the balance himself. The total cost of the work amounted to about $215.68. Later in the evening the Council approved the report and the same was confired by them.

Mr. Schutt, of the auditing and finance committee, made a lengthy report concerning the amount of back taxes now due to the borough from all sources. The committee of which he is chairman had been requested sometime ago to make such a report to the Council. The report showed that from the year 1885 to 1894, inclusive, there is due to the borough $1,251.24, which 1 1 2 per cent of $85,-114.69 valuation. In 1895 there is $3,023.31, 9 per cent of $44,340.96 valuation. In 1896, the amount due is $3,104.48, which is 11 per cent of $45,-194.94 valuation. The total amount of personal tax is $822.72 and of this amount 40 per cent is believed to be collectable. The total poll tax due is $278 and the dog tax amounts to $236. The latter amount is not thought to be collectable. Property to the amount of $1,294.77 which was bought in and now owned by the borough was reported to be in process of redemption.

Following the above report an opinion concerning the collection of the above according to the laws of the State was given by Borough Counsel Reed. It was annexed to the report of the committee; Mr. Reed quoted the law on the subject and said that the tax must be collected within two years, when it becomes outlawed. Taxes are delinquent six months after December 20th, and the collector should take proper steps to collect the tax at that time through the usual course provided by law. Regarding personal property, Mr. Reed said that the sale of this property is absolute and the purchaser is the final owner. It does not revert back to the original owner after the expiration of a certain length of time as in the case of real estate. The report and opinion was received and filed with the thanks of the Council to the committee for their excellent work.

The Mayor appointed Raymond G. Schenck, James Stewart, Geo. Wesand F. B. Coddington as special policemen, and the same were confirmed by the Council.

The police ordinance and the ordinance regulating and creating the office of borough engineer were both passed on a third reading. An amendment was offered by Mr. Burtis to the ordinance regulating the fire department, which provides that an engine, hose and hook and ladder company be organized in the borough. The former shall not consist of more than forty members, and the hose company shall be limited to twenty-five members, while the membership of the latter company shall not be over twenty-five. All members shall respond to at least fifty per cent. of the alarms. This amendment was adopted and referred to the proper committee for examination.

Mr. MacLaughlin offered a resolution providing for the purchase of eight copies of the new borough laws. Another resolution by the same gentleman provided for the purchase of a record book for the fire department. The action of Collector Spencer in paying the monthly pay roll, amounting to $369.49, was confirmed by the Council.

Mr. Woolston offered a resolution that a warrant be drawn for $800 to pay the interest for six months due on the amount borrowed for the opening of Watchung avenue. Another resolution called for the borrowing of $1,-500 the same to be charged to the road account, and Mr. Woolston submitted a third resolution which provided for the transfer of $51.70 from the fire department account to that of the road account, which amount was expended in grading about the West End Hose house.

There was some discussion regarding the repair of Brook avenue and the macadamizing of Sycamore avenue. About the latter it was said that just as soon as the property owners collect the pledged amount of 50 per cent. toward the work, the borough stands willing to go ahead with the work.

The last business transacted was the reception of a resolution offered by Mr. Burtis which provides that hereafter all business relative to any committee shall be transacted in committee meeting before it is introduced into the Council. This resolution was unanimously adopted and received the commendation of the Mayor. The Council then went into executive session upon the suggestion of Mr. MacLaughlin, presumably for the purpose of appointing a regular marshal in place of Mr. Graeder, who resigned.

WHAT OTHER PEOPLE SAY.

Something of the Great Wallace Show That Come to Plainfield Soon.

The Great Wallace Shows arrived here yesterday morning from Punxsutawney and at once commenced the erection of their extensive tented exhibition on the west side. The work was rapidly done and in a short time the tents were up and everything was in readiness for the magnificent street parade advertised. There was a noticeable absence of profanity during the unloading process, everything being conducted in a quiet, orderly manner.

The street parade started from the show grounds at 10 o'clock and traversed the principal street of the town. It was by far the best street exhibition ever given by a show in our town. The wagons and cages are novelly painted and the horses are the finest seen here.

A large crowd turned out to the performance in the afternoon and were well repaid for their trouble. For two hours and a half the performers exhibited the features of which has fever been shown by any circus in this section of the country. Everything was first class from beginning to end, and no fault could be found with a single act.

The show was full of new features, and is a decided and pleasing innovation in circus line.

One of the best features of the show was the entire absence of "fake" and "fixed game" lines, the management not allowing a single description of gambling on the show grounds. Everything about the show is clean and new, and it is indeed a model circus.

SOMERSET COUNTY WILD MAN SEEN NEAR WARRENVILLE.

The children Saw Him and Were Frightened Away—He Was Down on His Knees Praying for the Judgment Day.

There now seems to be no doubt that somewhere in the vicinity of this city a maniac is roaming at large in the woods.

Morris Ballentine, a butcher of this city, while returning in a carriage from Basking Ridge on June 21st, in company with his wife and mother-in-law, had an exciting encounter with the madman who sprang from the underbrush at the side of the road and pursued the carriage a long distance, making violent gestures and threatening to kill the occupants. After being twice shot at by Ballentine, the maniac plunged again into the woods, uttering cries and yelps like those of a wild animal enraged at the loss of its prey.

The place where this encounter occurred is a lonely spot on what is known as the Valley road, where it intersects with the road from Stirling. An account of the strange occurrence was given in this paper at the time and called forth much interest.

News confirming the story of Mr. Ballentine now comes from Warrenville, a small hamlet about three miles distant from the spot where the madman was seen. Mrs. Wm. Newmiller, of 180 Somerset street, visited relatives in Warrenville, last week, and while there heard about a crazy man who had been seen in the woods.

Some school children while out picking berries and wild flowers in the woods saw a strange-looking creature, barefooted and bareheaded, and without coat or vest, kneeling in an open place and praying loudly for the day of judgment to arrive. He stopped praying after a time and fell upon the ground and rolled about as if in agony. The children were frightened at the man's antics and ran from the spot. Other inhabitants of Warrenville are said to have caught sight of the wild man.

If seen by daylight he flees into the woods. At night, he is bolder and does not hesitate to attack whoever he may encounter.

A GOOD WILL.

Will of the Late Kate Ettinger Offered For Probate.

The last will and testament of the late Kate Ettinger, who died recently in this city, was offered in the Union County Surrogate's office Thursday for probate. The husband of deceased, Michael Ettinger, and Michael J. Coyne, of this city, are named as executors of the will, and Assemblyman W. R. Codington, of this city, approved the will in the presence of the witnesses, J. P. D. Kirch, of North Plainfield, and Abram H. Cornish, of Plainfield, N. J. The will is a very good one and makes ample provision for those who survive, namely the husband and two children. The rents in some and profits of the property known as Nos. 407 and 409 Cottage place, is given to the husband during his natural life, or so longs as he remains a widower, and are to be used for the two children Sarah and Mary A.

The will provides that $400 of the insurance money to be received by the executors is to be applied to the payment of certain expenses and the balance is to be used for the education of the two children. The deceased requests that her children be allowed to attend the same school which they now attend. All of the household furniture except that required for the husband is bequeathed to the children.

The tuition and custody of the children during their minority is given to the husband and sister, Sarah Coyne, and Michael Ettinger and Michael Coyne are made executors without being required to give bonds.

The will was made December 12, 1896, and was drawn by Assemblymen W. R. Codington in the presence of the above witnesses.

Sociable on Wheels.

The second of the bicycle sociables of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church was held last evening. The run was arranged by Miss Madeline Day. James A. Stafford was in command with Harlan Snodgrass as aide, Ray T. Snodgrass was bugler. The attendance was good considering the rain of the afternoon. The party went to Westfield and returned by Locust Grove. After the ride, the party went to the home of J. R. Foy, of Orchard avenue, where refreshments were served.

Died at the Hospital.

William Cunningham, aged forty years, a resident of Grant avenue, died at the hospital this morning after a short illness. Death was caused by kidney trouble. The deceased had only been at the hospital a few days, and for the most part of the time he lived with Michael Watson. So far as can be learned he has no relatives in this city and Mr. Watson will arrange for the burial.

George North, of Notre Dame College, Montreal, Canada, is spending summer vacation with John Goff, Third street.

CHRISTIAN BICYCLISTS.

SECOND OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION RUNS HELD.

The Destination Was Marcounier—The Clouds Threatened the Party With Rain, But They Broke Away at Last.

The Christian Endeavor bicycle squad attempted to visit one of the outlying societies Thursday, whereupon the storm clouds came rolling up in the west and threatened rain every minute. Of course, the promised rain did not come, but the many Endeavorers were not anxious for a shower bath and most of them stayed home. The clouds broke away at last and some of the braver spirits started to be joined later by others until they numbered in all a few more than fifty. The run was a success after all, and all who did brave the clouds found the trip well worth taking.

The first run was nearly broken up by a threatened shower but it was held, despite the clouds, which broke away after a time and the first of the runs of the Endeavorers had a very successful conclusion. Thursday was the time set for the second of the runs and the clouds began to gather as if in anticipation of spoiling the evening for the visiting people.

The destination of the run was Marconnier chapel, the Christian Endeavor Society of which had changed the night of the meeting to suit the Plainfield Endeavorers who wanted to visit them. The party was to gather in front of the Seventh-Day Baptist church at 7 o'clock. Miss Ernestine Smith, who is chairman of the committee in charge of the runs and acts as captain of them, decided to delay in starting to see the prospects of fair weather. At last twenty-eight young people gathered, all of whom were willing and anxious to go, and Miss Smith ordered the ride to begin.

Miss Smith has decided that an informal organization will succeed far better in the management of the runs than the appointment of regular officers to hold office during the season. Miss Mary Lewis and Robert Randolph acted as pacemakers, while Miss Smith took general command of the party. Miss Elizabeth Allis, the regular color bearer of the bicycle squad, was out of town and therefore unable to go.

The evening was a delightful one and the roads were in excellent condition. New recruits joined the party at every turn until it assumed fair seized proportions by the time it reached the chapel.

The members of the Marconnier society gathered in front of their pretty little chapel to welcome their visitors on their arrival. Mrs. Schwenk, who has been a moving spirit in that society, came to the front and personally welcomed the officers. Then the wheels were checked in the basement of the chapel and the Endeavorers entered the building.

After a praise service, the meeting was opened and the visitors found that they had come to an energetic society indeed. Nobody waited for anybody else to speak, but prayer and testimony followed each other in rapid succession. After a very helpful meeting, a social time was held and then the visitors collected their wheels and started for home, reaching Plainfield at 10:30 o'clock.

Miss Smith has decided that the runs shall be continued, but the time and destination of the next one has not yet been made known. Much credit should be given to the energetic young women who have so successfully conducted these two runs.

A Trolley Car Collision.

Friday, while S. Elliott and W. C. Williams, of this city, were attempting to cross the street railway tracks in front of Zeller & White's place on Somerset street, a trolley car came along and struck the wagon with sufficient force to break several spokes in a wheel and dislocate Mr. Williams' knee cap. The latter happened to be on the side of the wagon which was struck, and in consequence received the blow. The damage to the wagon was slight, and with a few repairs it will be ready to use again.

A Distinguished Guest.

A stage load of young people from this city and the borough went to Boytnon Beach this morning to spend the day. The party was gotten up by Miss Grace E. Overton, of Rockview avenue, and Miss Eleanor Williams, of West Seventh street. They met at the home of Miss Overton. Miss Florence Williams acted as chaperone of the party. Raymond A. McGee, one of the freshman crew of Yale University, was of the party and was expected to do all the rowing.

A Wheelwoman's Fall.

While a lady cyclist was picking her way along West Front street this morning about 10 o'clock she approached a trifle too near a carriage. The spokes of the carriage wheel caught the handle bar of the bicycle and she was thrown from the saddle. Luckily neither the machine nor its rider was injured and the fair cyclist mounted and rode away before her name could be ascertained.

JUMPED FROM THE CAR.

MRS. LONG SUSTAINED SERIOUS INJURIES AS A RESULT.

She Was Carried Past Her Destination and, In Her Hurry to Return, Jumped From Fast-Moving Trolley Car.

Mrs. James Long, a young colored woman, stepped from a swiftly-moving trolley car on Woodland avenue, Netherwood, Thursday, and was thrown 20 feet from the track, sustaining injuries of a serious nature.

Mrs. Long is employed as a domestic by Mrs. Ellis, of Ravine road, Netherwood. Thursday she came to this city to shop, and about 10:30 o'clock boarded an open trolley car, in charge of Motorman Bowers and Conductor Williams, to return to Netherwood.

The woman asked to be let off at Ravine road, but the conductor forgot her and she was carried to the end of the line, which is a few blocks beyond Ravine road. When those in charge of the car discovered their mistake, they told Mrs. Long to remain in her seat and ride back to Ravine road.

The night was a dark one, and the woman, evidently became nervous over her delay in reaching home. She said nothing, but betrayed her excitement by her manner.

The car started on its return trip. The streets in the darkness had an unfamiliar look to Mrs. Long. The car reached Park lane, the street next to Ravine road, when, without warning, Mrs. Long arose, ran to the side, and with a cry of terror made a leap into the darkness. The car was going at full speed when the leap was made, and the woman struck the road a considerable distance away and then rolled many feet.

The car was stopped and the motorman and conductor, when they returned to search for the woman, found her at least 20 feet from the track. Her head, shoulders and arms were badly cut and bruised and her clothing was torn.

Patrolman Totten came along and took charge of the injured woman. She begged not to be taken to the hospital. The patrolman had her removed to the home of Mrs. Ellis, where it is said she will be well cared for.

COLEMAN ON THE CUT.

Former President of Cycle Board of Trade Expects No Further Reductions.

The announcement recently made that some bicycle manufacturers had decided to cut their list price from $100 to $75, created very little surprise in trade circles. As is generally known, the demand this year has been for reliable goods listing at prices within the reach of the public, and it has been an open secret that the higher priced makers have endeavored to meet this demand by putting out a combination of a '99 and '97 model, with a '96 name plate, or they have instructed their agents to meet competition by cutting prices.

R. Lindsay Coleman, ex-president of the National Cycle Board of Trade, and president of the Western Wheel Works, in speaking on this subject, says:

"In establishing our prices in 1892, we were fully cognizant of the trade conditions as then existing, and we determined to meet the popular demand for a high grade wheel at an honest and reasonable price.

"Our announcement that we had established our price at $75, was met by the statement of other manufacturers that a strictly high grade wheel could not be made and sold at so low a figure. We expressed the opinion at that time that within five years, other high grade makers would fully realize their error in endeavoring to maintain a fictitious value on their product, and that the prices that we had fixed would be within that time become the standard price for other high grade wheels.

"If a bicyle is worth its list price in January, it is worth that same price in July; per contra, if a so-called $100 wheel is worth but $75 in July, it was certainly worth no more in January. Fictitious values can no more be upheld for any length of time in the case of bicycles than stocks and bonds. The old adage that 'water must seek its level' is peculiarly true of bicycle prices.

"I do not anticipate that a still further reduction in the price of wheels will be made next year."

Trolley to Metuchen.

The Committee of Raritan township, Middlesex county, met at Metuchen Thursday and passed at its final reading an ordinance granting to the Brunswick Traction Company a franchise for an electric railway from New Brunswick to Metuchen via Bonhamtown. The company will also build from New Brunswick to Bound Brook.

Work on the Streets.

The councilmanic street committee has directed that the work of macadamizing be stopped on West Front street for the present, and that the work of macadamizing East Front street from Watchung avenue to Berckman street, be commenced. A little later in the season the work will be resumed on West Front street from Grant avenue to Compton avenue.

FOR SCHOOL SUFFRAGE.

NEW JERSEY'S WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION MET AT ORANGE.

Much Interest Was Shown in the Meeting—Addresses Were Made by Rev. Mr. Rudd and Mr. Van Reiper.

The New Jersey Woman's Suffrage Association held a meeting at Orange on Wednesday, June 30th, to alter its constitution in such a way as to admit local leagues to auxiliary membership, and to promote interest in the school suffrage amendment. Rev. Mr. Judd, of Orange, made an interesting address in which he said, among other things, that if a person could not see the advantage of giving women a vote in educational matters, such a person was like a man who could not see that a straight line was the shortest distance between two points, and not worth arguing with. Mr. VanReiper, of Nutley, also spoke, and Mrs. Church, of South Orange, read a report showing how the women of the township, after several unsuccessful attempts to procure a new school building had been made, came to the school meeting 500 strong and by their votes secured a new school house. The reports were given, showing much interest in the pending amendment, among people of all sorts, in different parts of the State, the General Federation of Women's (Literary) Clubs, the ladies of the Grand Army, (in the convention at Atlantic City,) and many others, having endorsed it. Much interest was shown in the meeting at Orange, and a substantial collection was taken up. Mrs. Florence Howe Hall presided, and Mrs. Stephen R. Krom, of Orange city, was also present. Among those who are heartily in favor of the amendment is Hon. Charles Baxter, State Superintendent of Public Instruction. He has spoken in its behalf at school commencements this summer, at Cape May, Glassbury, North Plainfield and other places, and found the people were with him in this matter, receiving his remarks on the subject with applause.

Y. M. C. A. BOARD MEET.

The General Affairs For the Month Discussed.

The monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Y. M. C. A. was held Thursda with Vice-President E. B. Bonney in the chair.

Reports were received from the rooms and membership committees, also from the general and assistant secretaries and physical director.

The average attendance at the four men's meetings held during the month was 87. The average attendance at the Sunday morning Bible class was 16, including the teacher.

The reports show that six committee and board meetings have been held during the month. The only educational class conducted during June was the boys' singing class under the direction of E. A. Embury.

One of the means by which the association work has been advertised is by visits to the machine shops of the city. During the month eleven have been made.

Two of the most important matters claiming attention during the month was the making up of committees and the advertising of the two Y. M. C. A. camps held at Northfield and Lake Champlain.

Reference was made to the employment, information and relief department of the work, as well as to the inquirers who were interested at the gospel meetings.

A crayon portrait of Hon. Alexander Gilbert, the first president of the association, was presented to the association by the artist, John Daniel. The board directed that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Daniel, and it was further ordered that the picture be formally received by the association at the next business meeting which will be held next fall.

The Trolley to Cross the Bridge.

At a conference of the officials of the Brunswick Traction Company and the bridge committee of the Middlesex County Board of Freeholders, held in New Brunswick last week, the proposed conditions for the franchise regulating the extension of the trolley line across the Albany street bridge were practically agreed upon. The matter will come up for final disposition at the July meeting of the Board of Freeholders. Edward Radel, Secretary of the Traction Company, said that if the desired permission is granted at once the new line to Bound Brook and Metuchen will be in operation by September 1st.

Summer Street Repairing.

During the summer months the steam roller will be used principally in doing repair work all about the city. In this way many bad spots in the streets will be fixed so that when the cooler weather arrives better work can be done in a systematic way. The work of one mile will be reduced and thus the expense to the city will be lighter during the warm weather.

Clifford M. Crane, of West Eighth street, is spending the summer with his friend, B. O. Bowers, Jr., of Franklin place.

POINTERS FOR HUNTERS AND FISHERMEN IN NEW JERSEY.

When the Open Seasons Begin and End—Various Unlawful Modes—General Points of Interest For Sportsmen in This State.

Of all the public documents ever printed by the State authorities of New Jersey, none have been more in demand than the synopsis of the game laws collated by order of the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners. To take or attempt to take any fish in any manner excepting with hook and line, excepting spearing for eels, suckers and carp; taking minnows for bait with a seine not more than twenty-five feet long, and taking eels with pots or baskets or weirs between the 15th of August and the 1st of November, and excepting also, but only as to the tributaries of the Delaware above Trenton Falls and the streams flowing into such tributaries, the taking of catfish and eels with eel weirs and baskets and set-lines between the 15th of August and the 1st of November. To catch or keep trout less than six inches in length, or black bass less than nine inches in length. Fine, $20.

To hunt on posted land. Fine not less than $10.

Dealers have thirty days after the close of the season in which to dispose of game.

To the above may be added the following prohibitions, which, while not the subject of legal enactment, are recognized as binding laws of behavior by all reputable lovers of the pursuit of game and fish:

Never violate the letter or spirit of the game laws.

Never take more fish or game than you have convenient use for.

Never be insolent or impolite to a land-owner who orders you off his premises; for, although he may not own the game or fish you are after, he has the right to exclusive possession of his property.

Never fail to destroy a net or trap when you find one set.

Never shoot at a game bird except on wing.

Never kill the last quail in a covey; leave some to breed next year.

Never forget that game laws are intended to improve and increase sport, and not to prevent or restrict it.

Struck By a Central Express Train.

Patrick Mitchell, for several years employed as a track walker for the Jersey Central, was run down by an express train at 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon at Chilton street, Elizabeth, and was instantly killed. Mitchell was trying to get out of the way of one train when struck by the other. He was about forty years old, unmarried, and boarded with Thomas Kelly, of 37 Crane street, Elizabeth. The body was taken to Mitchell's morgue.

The annual excursion of the Sunday school of the Crescent Avenue church to Asbury Park will be held on August 4th.

PRIDEVILLE WEDDING.

MISS LIZZIE WALDRON AND CHARLES E. DRAKE UNITED IN MARRIAGE.

The Ceremony Took Place at the Bride's Home in Prideville June 30, and Was a Very Pretty Affair Every Way.

A quiet but pretty wedding was celebrated June 30, on Harrison street, Prideville, when Miss Lizzie Waldron and Charles E. Drake were united in marriage by Rev. Mr. Cubberly, formerly pastor of the Baptist church, New Market. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Waldron, of Prideville, and the groom is a resident of this city.

The house was decorated prettily with wild flowers and the effect was charming. At the appointed hour the bridal party entered the parlor, where the ceremony was performed. The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with blue silk, and she carried a large shower bouquet of white roses. The bridemaid, Miss Mary Wilson, of Plainfield, wore a gown of white silk, trimmed with lace and ribbons. The best man was William Kennedy, of Prideville. After the ceremony the happy couple received the congratulations of their relatives and friends. This was followed by a pleasing wedding supper, at the conclusion of which the guests enjoyed dancing until an early hour next morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Drake left early in the evening for Mt. Vernon, N. Y., where they will spend their honeymoon. On their return they will reside for the present at the home of the bride's mother, and in the fall they will go to housekeeping in this city, where the groom is employed by Bateman Thatcher, the contractor.

The collection of presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Drake were both costly and useful.

There were guests present from Somerville, Bound Brook, Cranford, Springdale, and Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

AN UP-TO-DATE SHOW.

The Great Wallace Shows Are to Be Here Soon.

Everything about the Great Wallace Show is brand-new this season, and when the acres of canvas are spread in Plainfield on Wednesday, July 7th, the fresh beauty of the elaborately decorated wagons, chariots, animal dens, tableaux cars, harnesses, costumes, etc., will appeal with irresistible force to every spectator. Cleanliness is the watchword with Col. B. E. Wallace, sole owner of this popular tented aggregation, and the term applies with the same force to the moral side of show life as to the material. Frequently a circus is used simply as a blind for all sorts of disreputable gambling schemes to fleece the unwary, but the newspapers everywhere teem with the statements that absolutely nothing of this nature is tolerated about the Wallace Shows. Through courtesy on the part of every employe is also strictly demanded by the management so that ladies and children without escorts can visit the circus, secure in the knowledge that they will be given every attention that will serve to make the stay pleasant in all respects. Uniformed attendants are always ready to politely answer all questions regarding the rare collection of animals in the extensive menagerie and to direct visitors to the comfortable seats in the immense amphitheatre. Any infraction of the rules means instant dismissal, and patrons are especially requested to report any occurrences of this nature that may come under their observation.

Miss Gertrude Helen Dubois and Miss Anna Gould Johnson, two charming young women from Hudson, have been visiting Miss Alice Rushmore, of Park avenue, for several days.

A RIP ROARING TIME.

OLD FASHIONED CELEBRATION ENJOYED AT WESTFIELD.

Games of Excitement and Diversions of a Humorous Character Gave the Crowd Enough to Keep Their Attention All Day.

A large crowd of visitors was in Westfield Monday to witness the old-fashioned Independence Day celebration, under the auspices of Bucket and Engine Company No. 3, which began at sunrise with the ringing of bells and the firing of the national salute from the old cannon, "Star of the East." The gun squad was in command of George W. Peek, Jr.

At 7:30 a. m., the bicycle parade, under the direction of Dr. Fred A. Kinch, started from the railway station park and took its line of march about the town. About 400 wheelmen participated in the parade, which consisted of a family division, under the command of E. J. Whitehead, C. E. Pearsall and J. D. Bitchie, a costume division in charge of C. H. Denman, M. H. Dewey and A. A. Smith, and an I. O. S. division led by L. S. Thompson, F. A. Taggart and R. H. Harden. R. L. Townley and J. A. Brunner acted as pace makers and L. Pearsall and B. A. Chamberlain were the buglers. Many unique costumes appeared in the parade.

At 9 a. m. the races and games were held, under the direction of J. M. C. Marsh and Isaac Seeley. In the 100 yard dash John Crooks won the first prize and Charles Michel the second. In the 220 yard dash Charles Michel was first and Smith, of Rahway, came in second. A sack race was next held, and in this the first prize went to A. L. Wragg and the second to Edward Bolden. In the potato race, James Macmahon took first prize and Joseph Denero second.

The crowds flocked to Clark's Lake at 10 o'clock to witness the tub race. Charles Embleton won first prize and John Pfeiffer second.

The baseball game between the Westfield club team and the Ben Hur A. A. team, of Brooklyn, was the next event on the programme. The game was a close one until the fifth and sixth innings, but some heavy batting by the visitors and the home team's weak fielding gave the Ben Hurs the game by the score of 21 to 16.

Immediately after the ball game clam chowder was served by the clambake committee in Henry's park, on Elm street.

The bicycle races, under the management of John F. Dorvall, began at 3 o'clock with the half mile scratch. Fred Slater, of Rahway, won the first prize, a silver medal, and C. K. Pennington came in second. In the next race, a one mile handicap, the first prize, a silver medal, was won by Howard Manning, Jr., and the second prize, a cyclometer, went to Arthur Hurst. The one mile fat men's handicap race was won by John Ustinger, whose prize was a silver medal; and the second prize, a bottle of bay rum, was captured by Charles Burtis. In the two-mile handicap N. Goltra finished first and H. Manning, second. The prizes were a silver medal and a year's subscription to a local newspaper. The one mile boys' handicap race was won by W. J. Bogert, Jr., and N. Goltra, second. The prizes were a Brown saddle and a 20th Century lamp. The 5-mile handicap was the last race. The first prize, a silver and gold medal, was won by C. K. Pennington, and the second prize, a pair of Chase tires, went to J. Brown. The award of the second prize was contested on the ground that Brown was coached.

A Rhode Island temperance clambake was held at Henry's Park, on Elm street, at 3 o'clock, under the direction of C. P. Wilcox and Chief Wil liam Dockerman, of Elizabeth. Rev. Henry Ketcham delivered a patriotic oration, and music and other attractions were incidental to the bake.

A grand display of fireworks took place at night on the North Broad street baseball grounds. Preceding the fireworks there was an exhibition of fancy bicycle riding, which was ended abruptly by an accident to one of the performers. The display was witnessed by about 2,500 people.

During the day a tennis tournament was played on the courts of the Westfield Club. Edward Payne won the tournament, with R. I. Townley second. During the afternoon a tennis tea was served and in the evening a dance took place in the club house.

The Union County band furnished music throughout the day and evening.

The committee in charge of the celebration consisted of Cyrus P. Wilcox, Elmer E. Love, Geo. B. Millmer, Charles H. Denman, C. F. W. Wittke, Charles Cox and Mat Miller.

Look for the facts demonstrated by experience. Thousands and thousands of people suffering from the effects of impure blood have been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Central's Dividend.

The directors of the New Jersey Central Railroad Tuesday declared a quarterly dividend of per cent.

OVER AT THE PARK CLUB

HOW THE FOURTH WAS CELEBRATED AT THAT POPULAR RESORT.

Baseball, Tennis, a Tea and Reception and Finally Fireworks and a Dance Gave the Members a Very Busy Day.

Even before the first rays of the sun rested on the Park clubhouse, Monday, the junior members were out celebrating with firecracker and cannon the arrival of Independence Day. For some time the Fourth of July committee had been planning a club celebration for the Fourth, or rather the Fifth, and yesterday was the culmination of their efforts. There was baseball, tennis, a tea and reception, and finally fireworks and a dance.

While the junior members began the celebration at an early hour, it was on their own account, and the programme of the club did not begin until 10 o'clock, when a game of baseball was played between the nines of the Park Club and the Union County Country Club. The game was played on the Washington avenue grounds, near the Park Club.

The batting order of the teams at the start was as follows:

Park Club.	Union County C. C.
Dupee, p.,	Townley, c.,
Hallock, rf.,	Bolsterli, p.,
Freeman, 2b.,	Runyon, 3b.,
McGee, 1b.,	Place, 2b.,
Sandford, ss.,	Murray, W. F., cf.,
Laing, cf.,	Cooley, ss.,
Taylor, lf.,	Holmes, lf
Thiers, c.,	Erickson, 1b.,
Ball, 3b.,	Murray, R. F., rf.,

The Country Club was unable to find a battery among its members, and so Bolsterli and Townley were imported for the occasion. Several other players were lacking and the young men of the city were used to fill them. The Parks had their team, battery and all.

The score by innings was as follows:

Park Club	0	3	1	1	1—6

The tennis tournament began in the morning and continued through the afternoon. The junior matches were played and the preliminaries of the senior singles. In the junior singles, class A, Donald McGee won from Vaughn McGee and Howard Roome, and was awarded the prize, a gold pencil. In the junior doubles, same class, Edward Overton and Donald McGee defeated Vaughn McGee and Howard Roome for the prize, pearl cuff buttons. There were several matches in the junior singles, class B, William Townsend defeated Arthur Peck, Clarence Roome defeated Fred Overton, Clarence Roome defeated William Towsend, and William J. Roome, Jr., defeated Clarence Roome. He received the prize, a gold and aluminum watch chain. In the doubles, same class, William J. Roome, Jr., and Clarence S. Roome defeated William Townsend and Arthur Townsend. The prizes were compass watch charms.

In the senior singles, Carl Stedman Brown defeated Arthur Murphy, Perey Sandford defeated Allan Laing, Charles Dupee defeated William J. B. Thiers. F. O. Ball drew a bye. The semi-finals and finals will be played at a later date. The prize is a silver cup. The entries for the senior doubles are Charles Dupee and Carl Stedman Brown, and Perey Sandford and F. O. Ball. Silver mounted pipes will be awarded. Later the prizes have been won, the other members will have the right to challenge for them.

An afternoon tea was held during the afternoon and was largely attended. The guests were received by Mrs. W. J. Roome and Mrs. James T. Scott, assisted by the Misses VanDeventer, Barlowe, Ball and Murphy. At 5 o'clock an exhibition of day fireworks was held.

In the evening came the regular exhibit of fireworks which was witnessed by several hundred members and guests and many others outside the grounds. The fireworks were good and all went off smoothly without accident to mar the occasion. Then the young people adjourned to the clubhouse and danced the remainder of the evening. The patronesses for the dance were Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mrs. Benj. Day, Mrs. E. T. Douglas, Mrs. Samuel Townsend, Mrs. James T. Scott, Mrs. George D. Hallock, Mrs. W. J. Roome, Mrs. Walter M. McGee, Mrs. George P. Dupee and Mrs. F. H. Ball.

The committee, in whose charge the arrangements for the Fourth were left and who succeeded so admirably, consisted of Walter M. McGee, E. T. Douglas, George D. Hallock, William J. Roome, E. T. Wilson and F. H. Ball.

All the People

Should keep themselves healthy and especial care should be given to this matter at this time. Health depends upon pure, rich blood, for when the blood is impure and impoverished diseases of various kinds are almost certain to result. The one true blood purifier is Hood's Sarsaparilla. By its power to purify and vitalize the blood it has proved itself to be the safeguard of health, and the record of remarkable cures effected proves that it has wonderful power over disease. It actually and permanently cures when all other preparations fail to do any good whatever.

NOISY PATRIOTS HURT.

MANY ACCIDENTS, THOUGH NONE SERIOUS, ARE RECORDED

One Man Had His Nose Clipped by a Flying Bullet—John Kenney's Hands Burned—Asleep and Fell Into the Brook.

The Fourth of July and its succeeding days are always busy ones for the M. D.'s. The observance of the Declaration of Independence Monday in noisy mood by patriots of 1897, young and otherwise, was accompanied by the expected number of accidents, but none proved serious in this section. Those reported are as follows:

Joseph Ingersoll, an employe of N. B. Smalley, of the borough, was thrown from a horse Monday afternoon while racing on the track at the Gentlemen's Driving Park. When he fell he struck on the back of his head causing a severe bruise. He was picked up by friends and taken to the hospital where he was properly treated. His injuries are not serious and he will be able to leave the hospital in a few days.

Among the peculiar accidents which happened Monday afternoon was the one on West Front street, opposite Scheuer's grocery store. Three men were passing at that point when one of them discharged a pistol with a ball cartridge. The ball struck an iron trolley pole and rebounded to an upper story window which was occupied by Mr. Harkins, the owner of the fancy goods store on the first floor. The piece of lead struck Mr. Harkins on the nose, but fortunately with not sufficient force to do any serious damage. The men disapperred suddenly and their names were not secured.

A peculiar accident occurred Sunday night at the Rice barn on Duer street when a horse owned by Nathan Blackford, of Piscataway, became so frightened over the celebration of Fourth of July that he jumped from his stall and landed astride the manger. The noise made by the animal awoke the near-by neighbors who went to the rescue of the animal. Mr. Blackford, who is staying with his brother-in-law, John A. Thiekstun, of Duer street, and J. Newton Honeyman succeed in getting the horse out of his perilous position through the use of a saw. The manger was removed and thus the horse was allowed to resume his normal position.

Rex, a pet setter dog, belonging to Milton C. Barkalew, of No. 65 Duer street, died during Monday night, from the effects of the heat and fright at exploding cannons, fire crackers, etc.

Monday night while some boys were shooting sky-rockets on Front street, opposite Somerset street, the ball of fire from a rocket made its way through the window in the Stone Square Lodge rooms and completely smashed the glass. After entering the room it made a rapid dash across the hall and thoroughly frightened the members present. The damage was slight.

While Sheridan Jones, of this city, was sleeping on the bank of Green brook Monday afternoon, he accidentally rolled off into the water. The sudden ducking brought Jones to his senses, but if it had not been for Matthew Coon, of Watchung avenue, Jones would probably have drowned. Mr. Coon saw the affair and rescued Jones quickly. The accident happened back of French's mill.

J. J. Kenney had his right hand badly burned last Monday. He was holding a Roman candle in front of his residence on East Second street, when the candle burst in his hand, badly burning it.

Jennie Kramer, two trick bicycle riders, gave an exhibition of fancy riding on the baseball grounds in Westfield last Monday, preceding the fireworks display. They were on an old-fashioned high wheel; the man was pedaling and the woman attempted to climb to his shoulders when she slipped and fell, striking upon her back. The woman lay upon the ground screaming with pain and unable to rise. She was taken in a wagon to her home on Second A. Kinch attended the woman. It is thought that her spine was seriously injured.

GOSSIP OF THE CYCLERS.

ITEMS INTERESTING TO DEVOTEES OF THE STEEL STEEDS.

The Popular Exercise Provides Incidents and Expressions That are of Especial Moment When Wheeling is the Rage.

Edward White, of Myrtle avenue, has purchased a Cleveland tandem.

Mrs. H. B. Brooks, of Rockview avenue, has received a new transparent blue enamel Wolff American wheel.

Will Jeffres, of Grandview avenue, has decided to ride a Wolff American road racer, and has ordered his mount from A. M. Griffin.

The price of the Wolff American wheel will not be changed this season. So says A. M. Griffin, the agent for that wheel in Plainfield.

There is a movement among the cyclists of the city to join the L. A. W. A great majority of the riders in this city are not members, although they ought to be. Application blanks may be obtained at this office.

Cyclists going to Boynton Beach will find a good macadam road all the way except a half mile just outside of Rahway. The best route is by the way of Westfield, Rahway, and thence through St. George's avenue to Woodbridge and Boynton Beach.

Notwithstanding the hot weather, the bicycle run of the Y. M. C. A. on Independence Day was one of the most enjoyable ever held by the association. The number of riders was 21. After visiting Staten Island, the company dined in New York, and took a moderate pace homeward, reaching this city at 6 p. m.

Wheelmen will find it considerably to their advantage to have a little care where they leave their wheel these warm days. Repair men say that half of the supposed punctures that occur so inopportunely these warm days are really cases where the tire has exploded. The heat has caused the air in the tire to expand and finally burst the covering that holds it. Remember to always leave your wheel in the shade, and then you will not find it necessary to walk home when your journey is but half done.

AROUND THE BASES.

While lack of space did not permit the publication of the detailed scores of the Crescents' games on Saturday and Monday, the complete score of the remainder of the games will be published.

A neat little card containing the schedule of games of the Crescent Baseball Club has been printed by the Daily Press and copies of it can be obtained by calling at this office or on application to Manager Benjamin Mumford.

The Crescents will play their next game on Saturday afternoon in this city, on their grounds at the corner of Richmond street and LaGrande avenue. Their opponents will be the Stelton Athletic Club. The Stelton team is composed mainly of college boys who are home on their summer vacation and includes several members of the 'varsity nine at Rutgers. They play well and have a battery that is said to be all right. They were defeated by the Westfields but those who witnessed the game say that the umpire was a very important factor in the result.

Louis Drake, manager of the baseball team of the Bound Brook Athletic Club, is one of the nicest men in Bound Brook but, judging from Monday morning's game in this city, the same cannot be said of all the team. A trick was played by one of the Bound Brook men that deserved severe censure. He was running to first and, seeing that the ball was likely to beat him there, he deliberately threw his hat in the face of Corbin, the Crescents first baseman, as he attempted to catch the ball. Such actions should not be seen on any ball field and do much to injure the National game.

Young Brampton, the star pitcher for the Bound Brooks, is a good man, but the Crescent batters found him an easy thing Monday morning. He was badly handicapped in that his regular catcher, Newhouse, the man who has always caught him, could not be there. Field, who was put in his place, was not a success, and then he injured his finger in the first part of the game and had to withdraw. Moran, the catcher for the P. A. C. nine, filled the position and put up a good game. Bound Brook also lacked a first baseman and Winn, substitute for the Crescents, filled the place. The Bound Brooks could not complain of his playing, however.

John V. Beekman, Jr., will act as assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in the place of Frank O. Bristol, who is absent upon a three weeks' vacation.

Poison Ivy.

Look out for poison ivy at this time of the year; it is now the most dangerous. Many cases of severe poisoning have been reported. The best remedy which has come to our notice is a new preparation called Hirax, made by the Hirax Co., 351 West 26th St., New York City and sold for 25 cents a bottle by all druggists. It is made from the prescription of a Brooklyn physician who used it in his practice for over thirty years. Hirax is an excellent lotion to have in the house, as it immediately relieves the intolerable itching and allays all irritation from the bites or stings of mosquitoes, black flies, bees, wasps or any poisonous insects. It is an absolutely non-poisonous compound and can be used on the delicate skin of a baby with the utmost safety.

A NEW TROLLEY SCHEME.

PROPOSITION THAT UNION COUNTY GO INTO RAILROADING.

Lawyer Frank Bergen Advances an Idea That is Rather Startling and Novel—He Makes a Strong Argument For the Idea.

Frank Bergen, Esq., presented the following plan to the Elizabeth council at the hearing on July 7, as a complete solution of the question of a trolley line between that city and Plainfield:

"There is probably no territory in the vicinity of Greater New York, now unoccupied by a street railroad, that offers a more desirable opportunity for a street railroad company than the territory between Elizabeth and Plainfield. There are six villages along the proposed line, viz.: Lorraine, Roselle, Cranford, Garwood, Westfield and Fanwood, not to speak of the intermediate localities, where more or less building is going on.

"I think a double track street rail road should be built from here to Plainfield in the middle of the county road; but it should be built by the county and leased for a short period—say, five or ten years—to the person or corporation that will furnish the rolling stock and agree to terms most favorable to the public, so that by increasing the rent from time to time the public will get the benefit of the increase in the value of the railroad that is certain to accure. Besides fixing the amount of rent, the lease should contain other provisions that will secure satisfactory public service.

"I think the county road should be widened to at least 80 feet, and, better still, to a hundred feet, all the way to Plainfield. Sensible men could do it at a moderate expense, except possibly through the villages of Cranford and Westfield for a distance of about 2,500 feet; but this difficulty could be overcome by building the westbound track on one street and the eastbound track on another through the villages, so as not to crowd or interfere with other vehicles.

"There has been more or less talk about building a street railroad from here to Westfield on the south side of the Central Railroad, and on the north side from Westfield to Plainfield, or on an independent right of way. I do not think the public would get such benefit from a road so constructed, and the company that should build it would soon be in the hands of a receiver. The place for a street railroad is through a thickly settled locality, that is, on streets where people live and move and have their business. They cannot elsewhere render the service for which they were designed. I would as soon think of building a street railroad 50 feet up the air, or in a tunnel 50 feet under the ground, as to build it through the backwoods or through a swamp.

"I am convinced that a study of this subject will satisfy any one that sound public policy requires the construction of a street railroad from here to Plainfield by the county. Some one may ask: Is the county able to construct the road? This question can be answered easily. By the assessment made last year we had in Union county taxable property to the amount of $37,672,468, and the debt of the county is less than half a million, nearly all bearing interest at 4 per cent. The county could build a double-track street railroad from here to Plainfield for less than one and one-half per cent. of the assessed value of the property within its limits; that is, for less than 1 per cent. of the real value of the property. Indeed, the county can build the road on better terms than any street railroad corporation. The county can borrow the money at 4 per cent., and sell its bonds at a premium. A corporation could not borrow the money at a less rate than 5 per cent., and the bond-buyers would probably expect a liberal bonus in the form of stock.

"It is true there is no law in force at present that would permit the county to widen the county road and build a street railroad upon it; but I have already drawn a bill, and I have it here—a supplement to the county road act—which gives to the county ample power, under all necessary safeguards, to make this great improvement.

"No doubt the telford road extending from here to Plainfield is a good thing. It has already been of great benefit to the county; but a trolley road over the same route would be a better thing, and much more beneficial. The freeholders built the telford road, and did it admirably. There is no reason to think they cannot successfully improve the county road from here to Plainfield by making it wider and laying rails in the middle. If the present opportunity is neglected it will be perpetual misfortune."

—The members of the chorus choir of the Grace P. E. church will end their duties on the last Sunday in July to resume them in September.

CALLED HIM A HAYSEED.

A SARCASTIC WORD ADDS TO SOMERSET TROLLEY TROUBLE.

Cross-State Line Loses Some of Its Supporters in Bridgewater Because of an Uncalled-for Remark to Chairman Gulick.

The Brunswick Traction Company has filed an application before the Bridgewater Township Committee for a franchise to build its line to Somerville on the public highway now occupied by the tracks of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company. It was believed the Bridgewater township committee would patch up differences with the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company and allow it to continue its line to Bound Brook. Instead the committee refused to take action and will give the matter no further consideration until the franchise for the Brunswick Traction Company receives attention, two weeks hence.

It is said that the manager of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company called Chairman Gulick, of the committee, a hayseed. The committee, it is said, is inclined to resent this.

If the motion of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company to have a writ to set aside be granted by Judge Magee it will practically bring the trolley war to an end, as such a decision would declare valid the franchises that give the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company the right of way from Raritan to New Brunswick, it is claimed. The case was heard Tuesday in Elizabeth.

A BATTLE ROYAL.

Mothers Take the Part of Quarreling Children and Get Into a Fight.

A battle royal took place between Mrs. Mary Gleason and Mrs. Salema Vintilla, on West Fourth street near Plainfield avenue, about 9 o'clock Wednesday. The Gleasons and the Vintillas are next door neighbors, and the children of the two families play together.

This morning the youngsters quarrelled and came to blows. Mrs Vintilla and Mrs. Gleason both rushed in to protect their offspring, and Mrs. Vintilla received an ugly blow upon the eye. The wound bled freely and the skin was badly discolored.

Mrs. Vintilla claims that her neighbor struck her with a broomstick. She went before Justice Mosher and swore out a warrant for Mrs. Gleason's arrest, the charge being assault and battery.

The hearing was held at 2 o'clock and the justice dismissed the charge.

FLAG RAISING AND CLAMBAKE.

A Great Feast at "Bill" Emery's Hotel Thursday Afternoon.

The flag-raising and clam-bake at Wm. Emery's hotel at Scotch Plains this afternoon, promises to be a grand affair, and a large number of friends from this city expect to attend.

George Thatcher, the minstrel, and "Ed" Marble, the famous author, will act as masters of ceremonies, and the gentlemen will make things pleasant for the guests, while a genuine clambaker from Providence, R. I., will prepare the tempting feast.

The bake will be served at 6 o'clock this afternoon.

Lecture to be Repeated.

A trip by time light views through Europe, Italy, Greece, Egypt and the Holy Land, was the subject of the lecture which was to have been given at the Y. M. C. A. Tuesday by Rev. Ira McConaughy, who made the trip on a wheel. The severe storm kept a great many people away. The speaker exhibited a number of excellent views and gave a short talk regarding his trip. Mr McConaughy is a highly interesting speaker and those who were present thoroughly enjoyed his short sketch. The lecture will be given in its entirety on Friday evening at the same place.

Damage to Catch Basins.

The heavy rainfall Monday evening made considerable trouble for the city at the two new catch basins that are being put in on East Second street, between Richmond and Washington streets. One of the catch basins was just completed. The water caused the earth around it to settle quite rapidly and the stones that were laid at the top sank far below the surface of the road and an ugly hole was left. The other basin was not ready for use, but the water ran in and filled it up so that it had to be pumped out next morning. The other basin was also repaired.

Velvet Manufactory Coming from Germany

THE SHERIDAN'S PASSING

ELIZABETH'S FAMOUS HOSTLERY DOOMED TO SPEEDY DEMOLITION.

Varied Career of the Old House—Politicians Cooked Up Many Schemes in the Rooms Now Empty and About Deserted.

The Sheridan House, Elizabeth's most famous hostelry, is soon to be demolished. The county of Union has purchased the hotel site for $25,000 to erect a new court-house. The old hotel building will be sold at public auction.

There was an old fort, it is said, during the Revolution on the spot where the hotel now stands. Here many men who afterwards became prominent in Union County received part of their education.

The first proprietor of the Sheridan House was A. L. Snowhill, who was succeeded by Capt. William Gill, of the United States Army, and who was afterwards commandant at the Arsenal in Philadelphia. He ran the hotel several years until Col. George Miller bought it from him.

The next proprietor was George Mills, then came John A. Staats, Mr. Saunders, Charles Smalley, Mrs. Ramsay and Mrs. Haines, and John A. Staats, again.

The old Sheridan House has had an eventful career. In the little sitting-rooms off the bar many political and business schemes have been arranged.

The hotel was the favorite haunt for years of such men as the late Gov. Green, Gen. J. Augustus Fay, Contractor Michael Doyle, ex-Speaker John Eagan, Postmaster Sheridan, County Clerk Gerber, Reuben J. Ryan, president of the Board of Education; James Fisher, Col. Calhoun, Capt. Tubbs, Capt. John H. Whelan and Deputy-Surrogate Smith, all of whom have passed away.

Col. Miller, one of its proprietors, who for years conducted Laing's Hotel and the City Hotel in this city, always wore a high silk hat and drank nothing but "ponies" of brandy.

The noted court house ring had their headquarters in the hotel. Such well-known, old-time political lights as Chief of Police Johnson Yates, George Potter, Dick Feore, Senator Wiley, George Bopes, Alderman Schenck, who was the right-hand man of Anthony Dimock, then the young Napoleon of Wall street, frequented the hotel during the years from 1869 to 1873.

Among the memorable scenes at the hotel was the reconciliation between Congressman John T. Dunn and President Jacob Smith, of the City Council, who for years had been bitter political enemies.

The County Collector always gave his annual dinner to the county and city officials at the Sheridan House.

Several suicides have occurred at the hotel and thrilling stories have been written about alleged attempted murders there.

A great night at the hotel was when the New Jersey Jockey Club closed the last meeting at the Elizabeth track. Champagne flowed like water and nearly $300 worth of wine was consumed, but Proprietor Staats is still waiting for this money and expects to keep on doing so.

Ex-Marshal Kilner's Statement.

Former Marshal Jacob Kilner called at the Daily Press office Wednesday and stated that he wished to deny the statement that he tried hard to get the appointment of marshal in North Plainfield. He says that he only talked with T. J. Carey, chairman of the License and Marshal Committee, regarding the appointment. He also says that he defies anyone to say that he did not perform his duty satisfactorily. He says that he thinks the new rules adopted by the council are too severe and strict.

A Veteran Suddenly Taken Ill.

Last Tuesday previous to the meeting of the G. A. R. Post, Commander I. L. McVoy was taken seriously ill with cramps. He had to be taken to his home, on East Front street, where medical aid was summoned. His condition throughout the night was serious, but this morning he is reported as being slightly improved.

To be a Costly House.

Pearson & Gayle, contractors, commenced the remodelling of Mrs. George H. Burgess' house on Central avenue, which when completed, will compare favorably with any in Plainfield. About $13,000 is being expended in the completion. Charles H. Smith, of Grove street, is the architect.

Yellow Sign of Contagion.

A contagious disease card has been placed on the house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Thorn, of West Front street. A gentleman who is stopping there has been ill for some time and it was only recently that it was determined that he had scarlet fever. The patient is now almost well.

SMALL BOY'S TIME OF JOY

HE WAS UP BEFORE DAWN TO SEE THE CIRCUS ARRIVE.

Watched With Pleasure and Curiosity the Work of Putting Up the Tented City, Wherein are Many Wonders.

Fourth of July and the day that the circus comes to town are rival candidates for the all-important episodes in the eyes of the American small boy. In the mind of the Plainfield small boy, today, the circus day has probably assumed the supreme place for the present.

Yesterday twenty-seven passenger, freight and flat cars arrived at the freight house yards, bringing the horses, equipment and personel of the great Wallace shows, which were to make a one-day stand in this city and exhibit both afternoon and evening in their tents at the corner of Berckman street and North avenue.

Tuesday was a rather trying day for the mother of the small boy. The rain came down with pitiless force, with never a sign of clear weather for circus day. If the small boy asked her once, he asked her fifty times if it was going to rain tomorrow. He also plagued the life out of his older sister with the same question, and finally upset the new vase her young man had brought her, in his efforts to look out of the window and find a rift in the clouds.

When he woke up at 3 o'clock, it was still cludy but there was no rain falling and so, with two hundred and ninety-nine other small boys, he waded through the mud and mire to the freight station.

Three hundred little hearts gave a decided sigh of relief when they saw that the circus had not come yet. Then they lined up along the bank and waited. They watched the sun rise, or rather watched the light increase for the sun was hidden behind the clouds. An hour passed. Neither sun nor circus appeared. Another hour passed and the clouds began to break and soon the glorious sun burst forth through a rift in the clouds and circus day promised to be fine after all. The little army of watchers stood patiently at their post while hunger gnawed within them in vain.

After three hours and thirty minutes of waiting, the small boys were rewarded. At 7:30 o'clock the first section of the train bearing the circus paraphernalia arrived and the small boy was happy. What though his feet were wet and muddy, what though he had stood all through the weary wait without any breakfast, his heart's desire was satisfied, he had seen the circus train arrive and the horses unloaded.

There were twenty-seven cars in all and the work of unloading them began at once. The circus men said that the facilities for unloading in Plainfield were the best that they had met with on their travels.

Lincoln's Council women Are Pursuing the Even Tenor of Their Way.

Miss Emma Egel and Mrs. Olive Hazard, who have suddenly become famous by being elected as members of the new Common Council of Lincoln, are attending to their domestic duties as faithfully and regulary as before they acquired the honor of becoming municipal solons. Though Miss Egel is a little more distinguished of the two fair members of the Council, on account of her youth and selection to the honorable position of president of the Common Council, she is still a great helpmeet to her mother in caring for the large farmhouse that is her home. In her spare moments she studies parliamentary rules and meditates on the important functions of her position.

Mrs. Hazard also lives on a farm a short distance from the township where she will be called to officiate the second Saturday of each month. In her husband she has a companion to whom she can confide her Council manic troubles and receive the advice that comes from a more extensive experience with worldly affairs.

Mayor Drake feels highly elated over the apparent success of inducing Lincoln's men to allow women an equal voice in the affairs of the municipality.

HEAVY DAMAGE ACTION.

METROPOLITAN TRACTION COMPANY ASKED TO PAY $10,000.

Mrs. Northup Sustained Serious Injuries by Being Thrown From a Car, Owing, it is Alleged, to Conductor's Negligence.

A delay of perhaps a few seconds by one of the conductors of the Metropolitan Traction Company, of New York, may have saved that corporation considerable money. The conductor was in a hurry and pulled the bell rope, Mrs. Northup claims, before she had a chance to board the car, and she was thrown to the hard pavement of the street and received injuries that have proved very serious. Now comes a suit far $10,000. The preliminary papers have been filed in the Supreme Court of the State of New York and the suit has begun.

It was on Monday, June 21st, that the accident happened. Mrs. Northrup was coming to this city to remain with her daughter, Mrs. Albert Demarest, of West Front street. She had been visiting with friends in Providence, R. I. Her home is in Plainfield.

Mrs. Northrup came on a train on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad and was landed at the Grand Central station. She went out from the station to Forty second street and started to board a car going down town. The carstopped and Mrs. Northrup attempted to step on board. Her claim is that the conductor started up before she had a chance to gain the platform and that she was thrown violently backwards by the sudden starting of the car. She was thrown to the ground and struck the hard block pavement on her left side and back.

She arrived in this city about 8 o'clock that evening and was conveyed from the North avenue station to the home of her daughter in the ambulence.

Mrs. Northrup was attended by Dr. Probasco who also looked after her removal from the train to the home of her daughter. Her injuries were quite serious and she has been confined with them ever since the accident.

Her legal advisor is City Judge Lee Meza who in conjunction with Campbell, Ford and Hance, the well-known New York lawyers, has brought the suit.

REPUBLICANS RESPONSIBLE

But the G. O. P. Came Up to Time and Settled in Full.

One night last November the excitement in the Republican headquarters on East Front street reach such a pitch that someone turned on the faucet to the city water and forgot to turn it off. As the night passed, the water trickled down from the above of the politicians of the G. O. P. and on the goods of Miss L. B. Adams, the East Front street milliner. The goods were damaged to a considerable extent.

A lawsuit promised to result and Miss Adams retained Francis J. Bleiz as her attorney. Now the Republican Association has settled in full to the demands.

BIG FLOOD DISASTER.

Newburgh, N. Y., July 14—Meixigah reservoir in the Fishkill Mountains, near Matteawan, burst at a little before 3 o'clock this morning, owing to the heavy rains. The water ran into the creek, and two miles below, near Dutchess Junction, washed away some brickyard buildings, including a boarding house occupied by the laborers. It is reported here that nine of them were drowned and that a number of others are missing.

Threw the Driver Out.

One of P. M. Demarest's horses attached to a delivery wagon ran away Tuesday afternoon. The boy in charge was just getting into the wagon on LaGrande avenue when the horse became frightened and ran away, throwing the boy out. He ran after the horse and finally managed to climb in the back of the wagon when the tail-board gave way and he was again thrown out. The horse ran to Park avenue and down that thoroughfare to Front street. The horse was finally stopped by a collision with a hitching post. One wheel was wrecked.

Looking After Street Work.

The Councilmanic street committee met Tuesday and made further arrangements for looking after the streets of the city. It was decided that after the work of macadamizing West Front street is completed to take the steam roller off of the streets until cooler weather. Four gangs will be employed after next month to do general repair work all over the city, both on macadam and dirt roads.

A JOKE ON SOUBRETTES.

TWO FAIR DAMSELS DROVE FARMER BAKER'S HORSE TOO FAST.

Took the Heart of the Farmer's Son and Borrowed the Pet Horse—Chased by the Irate Farmer Who Took It From Them.

Miss Sarah Peck and Miss Lucy Alsock, two charming young New York soubrettes, who are summering with a family on the outskirts of the city, were led into an amusing situation on Monday afternoon by indulging in what they thought would be a delightful piece of frolic at the expense of one of their friends, Alexander Baker, the son of Farmer Judson Baker, of Piscataway. Young Baker's father is an admirer of fine horse flesh, and possesses a handsome and valuable road horse in which he takes great pride. The son drove to this city with the pet horse on Monday and met the two young ladies.

"Oh, go on, Alec," pleaded the young girls as they cast admiring glances at the horse, "let us take him for a little while and drive around town while you're doing your errands. We won't harm him."

The fact that the horse was comparatively gentle in disposition and the persuasive manner of the fair acquaintances influenced young Baker to let the girls take the horse for a drive.

The girls determined to have a little fun all by themselves, and as soon as they got of out of sight of Baker they started out West Front street at a lively gait. Out through Dunellen they drove like jockeys, while the townspeople gazed with wondering eyes at the reckless manner of their driving. It happens that Baker lived on one of the main roads to Bound Brook, and unfortunately for the young ladies they took that direction. They drove by the farmer's place at a killing pace and attracted the attention of Baker. He immediately recognized his horse and rig and ran out in the road yelling at the top of his voice:

"Hey, there, gals wait a minute."

The girls only waved a defiant adieu and disappeared down the road, and in a few minutes drove up in front of a hotel just this side of Bound Brook. Following them soon after came Farmer Baker. He asked the girls where they got the rig and they frankly told him—unconscious of his identity—where they got it and what a joke they were having on his son. Baker acted promptly.

"Well, now that's a howdedo, I must say," angrily replied the farmer, "now you girls just get out of that wagon. You've been abusing that horse."

The girls realized that they had been too rash. Discomfited, they complied with Baker's order. Baker drove back home leading one horse from behind the rig he occupied. The girls were puzzled as to how they were going to get back to Plainfield, but they finally prevailed on a sympathetic neighbor to bring them back home for $1.

Farmer Baker's son no longer has the use of the pet road horse.

HIS FOOT WAS CRUSHED.

Thomas McGrath's Expensive Leap From a Coal Train.

Thomas McGrath, of Dunsmith, was stealing a ride from Easton to Jersey City on a Central coal train, Tuesday. As the train was passing through this city, McGrath caught sight of C. W. Barras, a friend whom he had not seen for over a year. He leaped from the train, but slipped, and his right foot was caught beneath a wheel. The toes were badly crushed. Barrows wished to call an ambulance and send McGrath to the Muhlenberg Hospital, but the injured man would not consent to this. The injured foot was bound up and McGrath started for Somerville, where he has friends.

Almost Lost One of His Feet.

George Service, of East Third street, had a narrow escape from losing his foot a few days ago. He was in his yard cutting wood with an axe when he missed his aim and instead of striking the wood the axe came in contact with his foot. As a result his foot was almost cut in half. The fact that he had on a new pair of shoes no doubt protected his foot a great deal. He succeeded in reaching his house when medical aid was summoned and the injured foot was attended to. Mr. Service is able to get about a little but it will be a long time before he will again have the use of his foot.

To Fix the County Tax Rate.

AT THE MERCY OF ALMS

PITIABLE CASE OF WANT AND DESTITUTION IN WESTFIELD.

The Horrigans Live in a Barn, With the Husband Too Sick to Work, and Must Subsist on $3 a Week as Paupers

The people of Westfield are wealthy enough to support numerous charitable schemes, including a fresh air camp and a children's country home, but they seem unable to discover that John Horrigan and his wife Mary are living in a barn in the township, with no furniture worth telling as such, and in circumstances of poverty and misery. Horrigan is a stone mason by trade. He came with his wife from Brooklyn about four years ago. Work became scarce, and he secured a position as coachman with Adolph Gansel, of Oakland. Sickness now came to the man, and he was forced to stop work altogether. He and his wife were now unable to pay rent promptly and were evicted from the little house which they were occupying on Spring street. What household goods the Horrigans had were placed in the street, and there the unfortunate couple camped, with an improvised tent made of bed clothing as their sole protection from the sun and rain. Horrigan was sick at this time but his faithful wife stayed by and did what she could to relieve his sufferings. At length their destitution became so marked that the township authorities were appealed to by charitable people and permission was secured to remove them to a barn on the Lagueer place, which was purchased by the town for delinquent taxes some time ago. The house on the property is burned down. In this barn the Horrigans are still living. It is a small, roughly-built structure, with chinks in the walls and roof. In summer the place is unbearably hot and when it rains the water pours through the roof upon the miserable inmates. The overseer of the poor allowed the Horrigans $2 a week to live on. The nearest house was about a quarter of a mile away, and to this Mrs. Horrigan had to go for water. There was a good well upon the place, and Overseer D. Decker had a pump placed there at a cost of $6. When this bill was presented to the Township Committee the members protested against the expenditure and instructed Overseer Decker to cut down the Horrigans' allowance to one dollar a week.

In their more properous days the Horrigans owned a cow and a pig and these they have managed to keep through their misfortunes. Often times the milk from the cow is the only food they have. The township authorities point to these animals as an evidence of opulence, and have ordered them sold and the money placed in the township treasury.

Mrs. Horrigan refuses to part with either of the animals. She is a skilled housekeeper and could go out to work if she did not have to care for her husband. She declares that she will not leave him in his present weak condition, as he needs constant care.

People who know the circumstances of this remarkable case are commenting upon the failure of the authorities to give some substantial relief to the sufferers.

STRICKEN IN THE PULPIT.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck Suffered an Acute Attack of Pain.

The congregation that assembled in Trinity Reformed church Sunday to attend the service conducted by the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., were subjected to the startling sight of seeing their Scriptural mentor suddenly stricken ill in the pulpit just as he was about to commence his evening's discourse. The ailment was serious enough to prevent the pastor from officiating any further at the service and it was necessary to dismiss the congregation.

The heat was very oppressive in the auditorium of the edifice, but Rev. Mr. Schenck did not seem to be affected particularly by the condition of the atmosphere. His ailment was an excruciating pain in his right side, from which he nearly fainted. Several of the attendants at the service hurried to the pulpit platform and aided their afflicted pastor as best they could. He was removed to his home and Dr. Long, his faithful wife and several friends and neighbors worked over him till 3 o'clock this morning before relief came.

This morning he was free from pain, but quite weak. His family physician, Dr. Probasco, pronounces the trouble as an acute attack of neuralgia of the kidneys, probably induced while sitting in a draught of air Sunday afternoon.

—A load of hay upset at the Clinton avenue switch of the Plainfield Street Railway Friday evening, and delayed car No. 16 for some time.

—"Roof parties" is the latest fad these beautiful moonlight nights. One took place Saturday night not far from the Crescent Avenue church.

—The Congregational church will be closed during the month of August. The necessary repairs to the church will be made during that time.

A GLEW TO THE MANIAC

HE MAY HAVE ESCAPED FROM THE MORRIS PLAINS ASYLUM:

An Inmate Escaped From the Institution Three Weeks Ago and He May Be the Somerset County Wild Man.

The wild man of Somerset county still continues to haunt the woods near Warrenville and Coontown to the general consternation of the people living in that vicinity. While it is not known that he has visited the homes of any one in the past day or two he has been seen and heard in the woods. The children are in a state bordering on panic and flee for their homes at the first sight or sound out of the ordinary.

There is no doubt but that the man is insane and all facts known about him would point to the supposition that he is the maniac that escaped from the New Jersey State Hospital at Morris Plains about three weeks ago. The man was quite violent when brought there but gradually calmed down until the doctors thought he was recovering from his violent spell. At last he was allowed to walk about the grounds under the charge of two keepers. He was walking along quietly enough when he suddenly stooped, and, picking up a stone, struck one of the keepers full in the face with it. A blow from the maniac's fist staggered the other keeper who had not been expecting any assault and the man ran at full speed and disappeared in the woods. He lost his hat in his flight but was otherwise well equipped with clothing.

It is supposed, however, that the life in the woods soon made him the strange looking creature that he is and the tramp over the rocks cut his shoes to pieces. As described by those who have seen him lately, the wild man is bareheaded and bare-footed, while his hair is matted about his eyes, giving him a ferocious appearance. He is said to be of middle height and of powerful build, with broad shoulders. His clothing is in rags.

There has been much talk regarding the way in which he lives, but it is declared that he suffers no danger of starving, as there are edible roots and herbs in the woods that he can find or else he can visit the farmers' fields or even their hen roosts. Numerous springs in the woods furnish him with water.

ASSAULTED ON A WHEEL

WM. J. KIELY ATTACKED BY A HIGHWAYMAN NEAR ELIZABETH.

He Was Riding Homeward on the County Road When a Stranger Stepped In His Path—Robbery Attempted—He Escaped.

A shadowy form, a stunning blow, a terrible fall on the hard macadam surface of the county road, a vicious pull at his watch chain and then the sound of foot steps fast retreating are all that William J. Kiely, of Steiner place, remembers of the cruel assault that was made near Elizabeth, last Friday.

It was nearly midnight when Kiely was riding along the county road on his wheel, bound for home. He was just on the boundry line of the city of Elizabeth when a young man stepped directly in his path. By the dim night, Kiely saw the face of a tough character. The assailant swung something over his shoulder and brought it down on Kiely's head as he sped past. There was a crash and Kiely and wheel were rolling in the dust. The blow was powerful enough to partially stun the rider but not render him unconscious. Kiely thinks the blow was struck with a wooden club. He struck on his face when he fell from the wheel and his face was badly cut and scraped. He bled freely from his wounds.

The highwayman grabbed at Kiely's watch fob as he lay there on the ground and wrenched it away. The ring gave way and left the watch in his pocket. Then he fled. Kiely crawled to a patrol box near by and found a policeman who gave chase to the stranger, who was not caught.

Kiely's wheel was not hurt and he managed to reach Jersey Central station in Elizabeth, where he dressed his wounds as well as possible and spent the night, returning to Plainfield by train.

Sprained His Wrist.

Saturday afternoon while M. D. Brown, of East Fourth street, was crossing Park avenue in front of J. Hervey Doane's jewelry store, he tripped and fell on the sidewalk, spraining his wrist severely. He was assisted to his feet by a policeman after which he was able to walk home. It will be some time before he will have the use of his only hand.

MAY HAVE TWO ROADS.

AN INTERESTING AND NEW PHASE OF THE TROLLEY MATTER.

It is Proposed That if the Railway Capitalists Use Westfield Avenue They Macadamize Third or South Avenue.

There is unquestionably a strong sentiment in favor of a trolley line between Elizabeth and Westfield, says the Elizabeth Journal. No one is opposed to such an improvement. The Journal has made a household expression of the words "Don't give up Westfield avenue," but the Journal is now and has ever been in favor of a line of electric cars between this city and Plainfield.

It has never, however, been in favor of giving up Westfield avenue to any company or corporation, unless a fair equivalent was given to the taxpayers who bonded themselves in the sum of $120,000 to build the magnificent stone road that now stretches from this city almost to the extreme boundary of the county.

We have held that such a course would be unjust to the taxpayers and an unwarranted bonus to a wealthy corporation. More than that, we have contended, and we believe our contention will yet be completely vindicated, that a trolley line will inevitably be built between this city and Westfield, and the taxpayers need not yield a foot of Westfield avenue for that purpose. We contend, and believe our contention right, that the Consolidated Traction Company will of necessity build on some other avenue to connect their present and prospective lines, if Westfield avenue is refused them.

But the people are manifestly so desirous of having a trolley line that a new and extremely interesting phase of the trolley question has arisen. It is this: The traction company to be given the right of way over Westfield avenue, in consideration of paving Third avenue (or South avenue) with telford pavement, on the south side of the Central Railroad tracks, from Jersey avenue in this city to connect with the Rahway road in Westfield.

This would be a distance of a little less than seven miles. The work would, of necessity, have to be done under the supervision and direction of the board of chosen freeholders, and the road made a county road. It would then fill the break in the county road system made by taking away Westfield avenue.

This would be in some measure an equivalent for Westfield avenue. It would not cost anything like as much money to build the county road as it cost to build the Westfield avenue road, but if the roadbed were made as wide and as permanent and as good in every respect, it would do a great extent accommodate the travel that now utilizes Westfield avenue.

There is reason to believe that the trolley people could be made to look with much favor upon such a demand on the part of the people, if the demand were made the ultimate condition of a franchise on Westfield avenue, and then we would have both trolley and county road instead of having only the one.

The Journal still insists that the trolley company must connect Elizabeth and Westfield, and must go on some other avenue if the people refuse to give up Westfield avenue; but if there is any danger that this fine avenue is to be yielded at last to the trolleys, then, in justice to the taxpayers, get South avenue paved as a partial compensation and convenience.

SILVER WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr and Mrs. William Mowinkel Married for Twenty-Five Years.

Mr. and Mrs. William Mowinkel celebrated their silver wedding anniversary at their home 312 East Third street, last Friday. About forty guests were present. At 9 o'clock the Rev. George Hauser performed the ceremony, and the wedding ring was placed upon Mrs. Mowinke'a finger. Mr. Hauser then baptised Clarence, William and Ethel May, children of Mr. and Mrs. George Cheschir, and grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Mowinkle. After this ceremony the party adjourned to the lawn where refreshments were served.

A Mischievous and Dangerous Deed.

Friday afternoon while Morris Brokaw, of West Front street, was returning along that street on his wheel, a colored boy named Harris appeared on the street with a large fence rail. He threw the piece of timber in front of Brokaw's wheel, with the result of pitching him over the handle bars of the wheel. When he recovered from his fright he found that he was slightly bruised and scratched. Before he could think what to do the Harris boy had made his escape and has not been seen since. The wheel was not damaged, but young Brokaw might have been seriously injured. No cause is given for the mischievous deed.

—Mundy & Moffett, agents of the Travelers' Insurance Company, paid today the following three claims for injuries received: D. L. Darby, $150; G R. Rockafellow, $25, and H. N. Spencer, $22.

DEFEAT FOR CRESCENTS.

EXPENSIVE ERRORS AT THE START LOST THE GAME FOR PLAINFIELD.

An Imported Scotch Plains Player Muffed too Many Balls and the Rest of the Team Seemed to Lose All Their Courage.

The boys who played base ball Saturday afternoon earned their money, for the day was a record breaker as far as the heat was concerned. Some very expensive errors at the start, aided by the rather wild pitching of McLarty, gave the visitors from the Stelton Athletic Club a lead that the Plainfield Crescents could not overcome, and although a good up-hill game was played the visitors won by a score of 11 to 7. The game was played on the grounds of the Crescents, at the corner of Richmond street and LaGrande avenue.

Aside from the first two innings, it was one of the best games that has been seen in Plainfield this season. The trouble began at first base. Corbin, the regular first baseman, was away for the day, and Frentz, of Scotch Plains, had been secured to take his place. Now, Frentz came with a big reputation, but either he can't play ball up to the standard or else he was out of practice, for he dropped balls with the greatest ease and allowed them to slide through his hands and into the crowd while the Stelton base runners danced and other around the diamond and run after run was scored. Now Frentz was not to blame for all the runs by any means, but his poor playing disheartened his team mates and they began dropping the ball also. McLarty was wild at the start, and when he did get the balls over the plate they were batted out. Symons came in from right field and occupied his old place at first, while the Scotch Plains man went into the field where he afterwards redeemed himself by making a pretty catch.

When McLarty got his usual control of the ball and the rest of the team calmed down, the score stood 9 to 0 in favor of the visitors. The Steltons played a great fielding game and their infield was particularly good. They stopped the balls and threw well while their first baseman was a tower of strength.

It was clear, good batting that enabled the Crescents to score in the last of the fourth inning. Two singles, two doubles, and a three bagger by Vroom, Symons, dropped by Simmons, enabled five men to across the plate amid the howls of the spectators. More good batting added a single run in the sixth and seventh innings and then the Crescents stopped their run getting. They made several attempts and would have probably scored several had not Umpire Brown called a beautiful two-base hit by Cooney a foul. The ball passed a foot inside of the third bag but the umpire did not see it and Cooney had to come back.

In the last inning a pretty double play by Vroom and Symons prevented the Steltons from scoring several more than they did. The visitors were a nice set of fellows. They coached well, ran bases well, and had several rattling batters among their number. Most of them were Rutgers' boys or from Metuchen.

The detailed score was as follows:

A Bicycle for Best Menu.

The offer of a lady's Columbia, '97 model, free, made through Edward White, the enterprising West Front merchant, for the American Queen, the monthly magazine which is circulated in Plainfield in his interests, brought out a lively competition. The offer of a wheel was for the best menu for a family of five for a week at a cost of $10. A number of Plainfield women took part in it and sent in a copy of the menu suggested. The decision was rendered by Miss L. Brisland, editor of the American Queen. The prize of the new Columbia wheel was awarded to Mrs. Jos. A. Haynes, wife of Station Agent Haynes, of the Jersey Central Railroad, whose menu was considered the best.

Charles Davis, of Park avenue, has left Plainfield for Wilmington, Del., where he will remain for a time.

A SOCIETY'S NEW LIFE.

THE CATHOLIC CLUB HOLDS AN ENTHUSIASTIC REORGANIZATION.

After Six Months of Inaction the Members Decide That They Need the Club's Advantages—Over One Hundred Members.

The Catholic Club of this city held a reorganization meeting in its hall corner of Liberty and West Sixth streets, at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. About six months ago the club practically disbanded on account of a lack interest among its members. Of late, however, the interest has revived and the former members have begun to feel the need of such advantages as the club offers. The meeting last night was the result of this feeling.

The attendance was large. George J. Tobin, the former president of the club, occupied the chair. After the preliminaries were gone through, the club elected the following officers: President, George J. Tobin; vice-president, Patrick Traynor; treasurer, Rev. Father Smyth; financial secretary, James M. Hillman; recording secretary, Morris Owens; board of governors, Andrew McCardle, B. Brady, Dr. William C. Boone, John J. Kenney for two years; John Traynor, M. J. Mack, Daniel Carthy and Patrick Kiely for one year.

After the election speeches were made by Rev. Father Murphy, M. Hillman, George J. Tobin, Andrew McCardle and others. Over 100 members paid their initiation fees and dues. The fine clubhouse will at once be put in thorough repair and many conveniences will be added for the comfort of members.

At the close of the business the club adjourned to meet again on the 19th.

HIS BIG TOE CRUSHED.

Wheel of Watering Cart Passed Over a Pedal Extremity.

John Keiderling, of East Fifth street, had his big toe crushed by the heavy wheel of a watering cart, Friday afternoon. Keiderling is employed as the driver of one of Pope's watering carts. He had just filled the cart from the hydrant at the corner of East Ninth street and Third place and stepped on the wheel to reach his seat. The horses started and Keiderling slipped to the ground. His foot landed in the path of the wheel, which passed over his big toe, crushing it.

Keiderling went to Dr. B. Van D. Hedges, who found it necessary to amputate the injured member at the first joint. He returned to his work Saturday, but had to have an assistant to look after the filling of the tank.

Off for His Vacation.

Rev. J. W. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, preached his farewell sermon last Sunday, before going on his summer vacation. It was a helpful discourse and drew forth many thoughts for the congregation to remember while they went on their summer outings. He went to Stamford, Conn., where he will spend the rest of this month and August.

A LACK OF WELL WATER

EFFECT OF THE DEMANDS MADE AT THE PUMPING STATION.

Scotch Plains People Again Conscious That Their Natural Supply is Limited—Chain on the Town Pump.

The people of Scotch Plains and Fanwood are growing anxious over the water famine that is staring them in the face. During the past two weeks water in the wells has been lowering at an alarming rate, and a number of wells are already reported dry. The old township well at Emery's hotel, which is said to have furnished water for the horses upon King George's mail coaches, has heretofore been considered an inexhaustible supply, but this, too, is showing signs of giving out, so that the hotel proprietor has ordered the handle to be chained at night to save the supply.

Until recent years such a thing as a water famine was undreamed of in the town, and its position near the mountain and the formation of geological strata beneath the soil are favorable to an unlimited water supply under ordinary conditions. Within the scope of a few years, however, some mysterious failing of in the supply has taken place.

Many wells were sunk lower in the hope of catching more water, but this device was only partially successful. There appeared to be some mysterious trapping of the underground streams by which the wells are fed. For a long time no explanation of the cause was offered by anyone, but the belief is now general that the injury to the water supply is caused by the building of the Plainfield Water Supply Company's pumping station at Netherwood. The pumps at this station take from the earth an average of 3,000,000 gallons of water per day. It supplies this city and towns along the Central railroad to Elizabeth. The general opinion is that the constant drain at the pumping station has caused a lowering of the water stratum underneath the surrounding section. A resident of Scotch Plains claims that he can tell when the pumps are started working at the Netherwood station by watching the water in his well, which, he says, will lower as much as three feet in half an hour after the pumping begins.

NEWSPAPER MAN DEAD.

Nathan J. Laing Succumbed to the Ravages of Consumption.

Nathan J. Laing, one of the best-known newspaper men in this city, died Friday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at his home, 417 Central avenue, after an illness of two months with consumption.

Mr. Laing was born in this city on December 14, 1858, and was therefore thirty-seven years old. He was unmarried and was a reporter and compositor on various newspapers for the last fifteen years. At the time of his last sickness he was a member of The Daily Press staff.

During his illness he showed an interest in his soul's welfare, and friends who visited and talked with about Spiritual matters were convinced that he passed out of this life a Christian.

He had extremely large circle of friends, and was liked everywhere for his kind ways and willingness to help others in any way possible.

The funeral services of Nathan J. Laing were held Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock from his late home on Central avenue. Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church, officiated. He read a number of comforting Scripture selections after which he spoke briefly concerning the uncertainty of life. His words to the bereaved were full of inspiration and help. During the service several vocal selections were rendered by Miss Nancy Rancolph, alto, and Miss Swain, soprano.

The floral offerings were beautiful, and consisted of several set pieces, among them being one from the employes of The Daily Press and another from the Courier-News.

The attendance of relatives and friends at the service was large, including many who had known the departed for years. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery.

TALES OF TAXPAYERS

MARTIN ACT COMMISSIONERS HELD A PUBLIC MEETING.

Twenty-eight Persons Appeared and Protested Against Being Compelled to Pay Certain Taxes Against Their Land.

Frank Bergen and Comptroller Carleton, of Elizabeth, and J. F. Hubbard, of this city, the commissioners appointed by the court to serve under the Martin Act for the collection of back taxes for 1881 and prior, met in the City Council rooms, Thursday afternoon and evening, for the purpose of meeting persons who are affected by the act.

The Commissioners were in session in the afternoon from 1 o'clock until 4 o'clock, and during that time a number of persons appeared before them and had their say. Everything connected with the meeting was harmonious and no great difference of opinion was evidenced. The Commissioners treated everyone with the fairness and attentively listened to their side of the case. Among those who appeared were William M. Stillman for Otto Arens; Henry V. Dunham, E. H. Holmes, Wm. R. Codington, F. C. Lounsbury, J. Fred Mac Donald, Charles H. Hand, Asa F. Randolph, Mrs. T. J. Gillies, Thomas Minford, John N. Moore, J. B. Coward, Mrs. M. E. VanArsdale, Mrs. Jacob Brand, Aaron M. Powell, Clarence L. Murphy, S. F. Dunn, Charles McGinley, Nelson Runyon, A. J. Bronson, P. J. Flanagan, Charles VanWinckle, Wm. P. Smith, and S. A. Ginna communicated with the Commissioners by letter.

Mrs. T. J. Gillies, Mrs. M. E. Van Arsdale stated that they held receipts showing that their taxes were paid, while A. J. Bronson said that he held a warranty deed for his property. P. J. Flanagan stated that he held a claim against the city and did not feel disposed to pay, but when he learned that his tax bill had been reduced he was now willing to settle. Mr. Arens was willing to pay his proportionate share with the other owners of the property for which he is taxed. W. R. Coddington presented a petition signed by several hundred names of people who are innocent holders of property. He made a strong plea in behalf of those whose names were attached to the petition. F. C. Lounsbury also made a few remarks regarding the same petition.

In the case of E. H. Holmes he said that the property for which he was taxed was sold in 1878 by the sheriff and the same year the tax was levied. Mr. MacDonald, who appeared for Mrs. S. A. MacDonald, stated that he held a sheriff's deed showing that the city is made a party to the suit for taxes. Mr. Hand said that the property, corner of Second street and Watchung avenue, for which he was taxed, was reported to be a building free and clear when he purchased it over a year ago. J. N. Moore claimed that he offered to settle with the city for $500 for taxes which amounted to about $950, but was informed that the matter had been turned over to the Commissioners and living in New York he had been unable to get to Plainfield any sooner.

Mrs. Brand said that her husband previous to his death always paid his taxes and she was sure that she owed no taxes. Aaron M. Powell said that he is an innocent holder of property. He had made a search some time ago and was informed that there was no tax on his property. He was willing, however, to pay any fair amount to settle, as was also S. F. Dunn, of Park avenue. The rest of those present all stated that they were innocent holders and were willing to settle for any reasonable amount.

The Commissioners informed everyone that they would treat each case with fairness and look carefully into every detail.

The Commissioners met last evening from 8 until 9:30 o'clock, but there were not many before them. They adjourned until July 15th, when they will meet from 4 until 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Frank Bergen was made chairman of the commission and Frank J. Hubbard was made clerk. George Winn was the stenographer.

Gash in One of His Feet.

A party of boys from Dunellen and New Market went swimming in New Market pond, near the railroad bridge, Friday afternoon. One of the boys was standing in shallow water when he stepped on the jagged edge of a broken glass bottle that lay on the bottom and cut a deep gash in his foot. He became very frightened at the accident but finally reached the shore where his comrades assisted him to bandage it up with handkerchiefs until he could reach home.

Must Extend Their Wire.

The Plainfield Electric Light Company will now be obliged to extend their wires to the city line on West Front street, to provide the electric lights ordered by the City Council last Thursday evening. It is also the intention of the council to have the City Industrial Home lighted by electricity.

Samuel Huntington and family, of Franklin place, are at the Sullivan County Club, Wurtsboro, N. Y.

REPAIRING THE SCHOOLS

BOARD OF EDUCATION PLANNED AND AUTHORIZED REPAIRS.

Some Changes Were Made to the Plans for the Stillman School Extension—Contracts for Other Work.

The necessary repairs to the school buildings of the city and the awarding of the contracts for the same were the principal items to be considered at the meeting of the Plainfield Board of Education last Thursday. The connection with the sewers of the sanitary systems of several of the schools also necessitated extensions to two of the buildings and other changes.

All the members except Dr. Probasco, president of the board, were present at the opening of the meeting. Mr. Lovell acted as temporary chairman until the arrival of the president before the preliminary business of the meeting was over.

After the usual list of bills was ordered paid, notice was received from Superintendent Maxson that he had collected tuition for June amounting to $402, which had been deposited to the credit of the board.

The report of Collector Bird showed that taxes to the amount of $1,807.58 and interest amounting to $221.30, had been collected during June, making a total of $2,028.88 which had been deposited in the City National Bank to the credit of the board.

The report of the building committee was received. It contained a number of recommendations and suggestions that were acted upon separately. The committee reported that in the digging of the cellar for the extension on the Stillman building, the box that carried the steam pipes from the Franklin School to the Stillman School was unearthed and found to be in a very bad condition, the wood having rotted away. This should be replaced. The committee suggested that it would not now be necessary to have separate heating apparatus for the extension, but that connection could be made to the steam heating system for the rest of the buildings. As long as the pipes had to be relaid it would be very easy to lay a separate pipe from the extension to carry away the condensed steam. This plan would do away with the erection of a chimney on the extension. For the additional work necessary to take this change, the committee reported that D. W. Littell, who had the contract, agreed to do it for $83 extra, while C. W. Lines, the mason, would deduct $70 from his bill if it was not necessary to build a chimney and dig the cellar deeper, as was first planned. The board thought well of the proposition and authorized the committee to go ahead.

The next point in the report was regarding the proposed extension at the Washington school to contain the toilet rooms and regarding the placing of new furnaces in the building. The bids for the plumbing, heating and ventilating were read. They were D. W. Littell, $817; A. M. Griffin, $1038; and Galbrath & Walsh, $98 5. The bids for the carpenter and mason work were G. and C. W. Hummer, $718; John P. Emmons, $6.85; Mundy Brothers, $6.74; Jessup, $8.57. The contracts were awarded to Galbrath & Walsh and Mundy Brothers as the lowest bidders.

Regarding the painting of the first ward school, the Board said that it was necessary and the building committee was given charge of the matter with power.

The introduction of the city water into the Irving School was considered necessary even if the Board had to guarantee $50 if nobody between the present ending of the water mains and the school should take it. It was decided to connect with the present tank system and leave the placing of drinking fountains until another year. Galbrath & Walsh agreed to connect the present system with the city water for $78 80, and to put in four hygenic drinking fountains for $275 extra.

An estimate from Smalley Brothers for the macadamizing of the yard of the Lincoln school. The estimate price of the work was $3.0, two inches of crushed stone to be laid and covered with yellow sand. The proposal was referred back to the building committee with instructions to get other bids.

Extra large furnaces are to be put in the old Seventh Day church edifice so as to heat the second floor when necessary. To prevent the overheating of the furnaces, the building committee recommended that two extra pipes be put in to connect with the second floor to allow the extra heat to escape. A. M. Griffin agreed to put in the necessary pipes for $59.62. The Board approved of the plan and it was adopted.

A communication was received from Jesse M. Scull, the present janitor of the Wadsworth school, asking to be appointed janitor of the old church as well. The Board received his request with favor and he was appointed to begin his duties on September 1st, with a salary of $50 a month for the two buildings.

Memorandums of the repairs needed at the Irving and Franklin schools as suggested by the principals of each were received and turned over to the building committee with power.

ROW OVER THE OLD FLAG

STARS AND STRIPES TO SCARE OFF CROWS IN A CORNFIELD.

Boyle's Neighbors Up in Arms—Such Use of the Stars and Stripes an Offense to Their Ideas of Patriotism and Loyalty.

The farmers who live near New Market are in a state of patriotic heat over the conduct of Thomas Boyle, whom they claim is using the Stars and Stripes for a scandalous purpose.

From the top of a long pole planted in the centre of Boyd's cornfield, in plain sight of the hundreds of people who traverse the macadamized county road, waves an American flag whenever a breeze blows over Piscataway Township, through the valley that winds around from the Watchung Mountains, two miles away.

Some of the people who live in that neighborhood say the fact that Boyle having a flag in such a position, surrounded by straw men who are expected to scare off crows that now and then have designs on Farmer Boyle's cornfield, is a rank insult to the country which protects his life and helps to provide him a living.

The flag floating in such a manner to frighten off the crows has rankled in the neighbors' minds to such a degree that Michael Boyle, who lives near by—but is not a relative—was selected to appear before Mayor Brakeley, in Dunellen, and asked him to take some action that would compel the offender to lower the flag.

Accordingly, Boyle had an audience with the Mayor and related his tale of offended patriotism. He asked the Mayor to request his namesake to remove the flag, and if he did not comply, to prosecute him.

The Mayor could not see that he had any jurisdiction in an official way, but as a good and loyal citizen he advised the complainant to attempt moral suasion and see if that would not have the desired effect. The neighbors say that Boyle is not a fit subject for moral suasion. In the mean time he remains deaf to the appeals that have reached his ears.

Boyle says he is just as patriotic as any of his neighbors, and that he put the flag there last flag day so the people could see it flying on the most prominent point of his farm.

DOG KILLING CHICKENS.

Twenty Fowls of Wm. Smith Slain By a Canine.

It is quite likely that when the North Plainfield Township Committee holds its next meeting they will receive a bill from Wm. Smith, of Washington ville, for the loss of twenty-two chickens that were killed last Thursday by dogs. Mr. Smith has neighbors who saw the visitation of the dogs and know his chickens were killed in that way. The bens were valuable ones, of imported stock, and the loss will aggregate quite an amount. When Mr. Smith went to his barn this morning he found dead chickens scattered all about the place. Mr. Smith has an idea who owns the dogs but he is not able to prove it.

This is the second time that dogs have visited the locality and killed a number of chickens. The first time was at the home of Wm. Demler, where twenty chickens were killed. Soon after the act was committed Mr. Demler prepared himself for the return of the dogs. When the canine came back Mr. Demler had his gun ready and he killed the dog on the spot. Since then he has not been troubled.

CONCUSSION OF THE BRAIN.

Little Archie Bailey Fell Twenty-five Feet Out of a Tree.

What may prove to be a fatal accident occurred Thursday afternoon on Race street about 4 o'clock, when Archie Bailey, aged ten years, fell from the top of a cherry tree, a distance of about twenty-five feet, and sustained serious injuries. The lad fell on his head and he has been in an unconscious condition almost constantly since. In falling the boy struck his head on a wagon wheel near by, causing concussion of the brain.

Louis Wyckoff was passing and he carried the boy to his home on Manning avenue, after which Dr. Simpson was called. At times he can be aroused but soon passes again into unconsciousness. At present the doctor is unable to tell just how seriously the lad is injured.

ARC LIGHTS REFUSED.

COUNCIL DO NOT GRANT BUSINESS MEN'S PETITION.

Considerable Difference of Opinion and Caustic Criticism Expressed by the Solons Over the Petitioners' Proposition.

The city fathers evidenced a considerable amount of action at their meeting last Thursday over the fact that some of the members desired to furnish the business portion of the city with several arc lights. It was expected that there would be a minority report of the committee in the affirmative, but Mr. Westphal of the same committee changed his mind and voted for the petition with Mr. Tolles, the chairman, who made a strong fight for the business men. Mr. Baker, the third member of the committee, was the only one of the committee who opposed the request and he voted against it. Mr. Tolles introduced the petition which had been referred to the committee and stated that more lights were needed in the business portion of the city, and as nearly all of the business men had asked for the arc lights he felt as though it was no more than right that they should have them. He therefore moved that they be granted. He stated further that eleven lights were asked for and this would displace thirty-seven incandescent lights. The increase in expense would be about $500. A letter was read from the Plainfield Electric Light Company in which it was stated that they would operate eleven arc lights at a cost of $100 each.

Mr. Baker said that he differed with the committee on the question. He, together with other members, had made a tour of the city on two different evenings, and he was convinced that the business portion was sufficiently lighted. After the stores close he did not think it made any difference about electric lights.

Mr. Frost agreed with Mr. Baker, and said that he thought his argument was good. In his opinion there was no great call for the arc lights. Mr. Tolles thought that it was a small matter the extra expense of $50 when nearly all of the business men were asking for the lights.

Mr. Barrows was of the opinion that the city generally should be lighted more than any one section, and being a bicyclist he was able to see where lights are needed. He said that the very men who had signed the petition for the arc lights were just the ones who complained of the way in which the Council conducted the city affairs. They were finding fault because there had been increased expense in the fire and police departments. He thought the complaining ones should come to the support of the Council. Plainfield, he considered, was a city of homes, and the homes should be lighted first. Mr. Serrell thought that more incandescent lights should be erected and this would remedy the difficulty. Mr. Dumont said he doubted whether the Council had the right to exceed the appropriation made for lights under the present condition of affairs, and the extra amount would have to come out of the general fund if the change was made. This he thought would be out of order.

Mr. Westphal spoke in favor of the arc lights, and said the more progressive and enterprising the Council was, the more it would help the city. Homes, he said, do not entirely make a city.

Mr. Runyon said he would vote for the arc lights, for he considered the property in the business portion of the city more valuable than anywhere else. He thought that after the stores were closed at night the city assumed a woe-begone appearance. The arc lights would not only help the police, but would also be a great step in advance.

At this time a vote was taken on the question. Messrs. Dumont, Barrows, Frost, Baker, Serrell and Stebbins voted in the negative, while Messrs. Runyon, Newman, Leivers, Tolles and Westphal voted in the affirmative.

The motion to erect the arc lights being lost, Mr. Tolles immediately moved that two lights be placed on Netherwood avenue, between North avenue and George street; one on Liberty street, between Third and Fourth streets; one on Liberty street, between Seventh and Eighth streets; five on West Front street, beyond Grant avenue; one on Eighth street, west of Plainfield avenue. The Council granted all of the above lights.

At the opening of the meeting the rules were suspended to allow any person an opportunity to speak for or against the widening of Westervelt avenue. There being no one present to speak the regular order of business was taken up. Mr. Frost stated that it was necessary that an arrangement should be made to flush the sewer on West Eighth street, and on the motion of Mr. Barrows the Fire and Building Committee was authorized to have the main extended and a hydrant located on that street for the above purpose.

The petition of I. N. Field for an electric light at the corner of Randolph road and Field avenue was granted. The petition for three crosswalks at Grant avenue and Eighth street was granted and another petition from residents of Central avenue, between Randolph road and Elizabeth street, who asked the city to give them the proper grade so that they could continue to do making improvements, was referred. A communication was received from the Plainfield Electric Light Company in which it was stated that three lights had been erected as directed by the council at a recent meeting.

At the request of the managers of the Crescent Baseball Club Aaron Mattox was appointed special policeman to do duty at the grounds when a game is being played there. The appointment was confirmed as were also those of John Wilson and Florence McCarthy from the special list to the regular. The Mayor stated that the last of two named men had been doing duty as specials but were now entitled to be placed on the regular list owing to their efficiency. The reports of the Building Inspector and Street Commissioner were received and filed. City Judge DeMeza reported that during the past month 18 prisoners had appeared before him, 8 of whom had been fined, 27 committed, 8 discharged and on 59 sentence was suspended. He reported having turned over to the city treasurer $480.

The $2,166.78 received by Collector Bird from taxes for 1881 and prior thereto was turned over to the city treasurer to be held in special account.

Mr. Stebbins, for the fire and building committee, made a report concerning the complaint made by John L. Blackford against L. M. Dunavan of the Fire Department, and the committee moved that the complaint be dismissed. They held that if Mr. Dunavan did strike Mr. Blackford, it was, in their judgment, for the reason that the latter interferred with the former in the performance of his duty.

Mr. Stebbins moved that an amount not to exceed $200 be appropriated for the purpose of putting necessary improvements in the West Second street firehouse.

Mr. Barrows stated that a great many petitions would probably be received from property owners asking for crosswalks. This, he said, would be due to the fact that the city had promised to grant the walks as soon as a sidewalk was laid in front of the property. The committee has been holding back money to do the work and as fast as possible the crosswalks would be laid.

The ordinance providing for the extension of the sewer system was placed on its first reading and was ordered engrossed and advertised and August 2d was set as the time for giving all a hearing. Messrs. Runyon and Westphal voted in the negative on the above ordinance. An other ordinance regarding the new methods of paying bills as introduced by the city was adopted on its third reading, as was also the Westervelt avenue ordinance.

At this time the question of arc lights came up again. Mr. Barrows made a motion that the trees and light committee be authorized to locate one arc light at the corner of Park avenue and Front street. He said that he was too progressive to stop an improvement and desired to assist all that was possible. Mr. Tolles was not sure that the Electric Light Company would be willing to erect one light, as it was very expensive. Mr. Westphal and Mr. Newman were of the same opinion. The motion prevailed, however, and the committee will locate an arc light at the point stated should the appropriation allow it. Following this action the Councilmen all enjoyed a good laugh.

Mr. Baker offered two resolutions. One was that the city purchase two new city directories at an expense of $4, and the other was that the sum of $2,000 be borrowed for the general fund and $1,000 for the fire fund in anticipation of taxes.

Mr. Dumont stated that it would be necessary for the Council to meet on the third Tuesday in August to approve the tax levy, and after instructing the clerk to that effect the Council adjourned.

HOW CUPID HAS TO TALK

QUESTIONS ASKED UNDER THE MARRIAGE LICENSE LAW.

A Catechism That Will Make Loving Runaway Couples Embarrassed When Asking to Be Joined in Wedlock.

The State Board of Health has compiled a catechism to be furnished county clerks throughout the state in connection with the new marriage license law.

The catechism calls the attention of the county clerk to the fact that it is unlawful to issue a marriage license unless all the questions to the identifying witness are answered.

First of all, he is asked if he knows either or both of the applicants for the license, and how long he has known him or her, and if his knowledge has been intimate or that of a casual acquaintance. He is asked if he can tell what his or her occupation is or has been for the past five years. He is requested to tell the names of his or her parents or guardians and how long he has contemplated marriage with her or she with him. He is required to tell the names of his or her parents or guardians of the applicants have been aware of the fact that they wanted and intended to get married. Six questions have now been asked.

Coming down to the seventh question, the witness is asked if he has ever heard of any objection being made by any person or persons to the marriage of the applicants for license, and if he has he is asked to tell who made the objection and the nature of the grounds of the objection.

The eighth question requires the witness to tell whether or not he knows of any impediment to the marriage, and if he does, to state its character. After he has done this he is requested to tell whether either or both have been married, and, if so, when, where, to whom and by whom.

"If either of them was previously married," asks question No. 10, "how was the marriage state terminated, if at all; by death or by divorce?"

The list of interrogations to the identifying witnesses winds up with question No. 11, which requires, if the marriage state terminated by death, when and where did the deceased spouse die? If it was terminated by divorce, when and where was the divorce granted? Was it an absolute divorce from the bond of matrimony, a divorce from bed and board, or a mere separation? And then the witness is asked to produce a copy of the decree of divorce.

After being sworn to all this the identifying witness heaves a sigh of relief and is released.

The identifying witness having had his say, the applicants for the license now step forward and enter separately or in concert answer to the questions:

What is your name; when and where were you born?

What is the full name of your father?

What is the full name of your mother, and what was her maiden name?

What is your occupation, and how long have you been pursuing your present occupation?

Where do you reside and how long a time have you been there residing?

Have you been married before? If so, how often, when, by whom and to whom?

Are you married; if so, to whom, and when were you married?

Is your present husband or wife alive or dead; and, if dead, when and where did he or she die?

If you have been divorced or separated from your present husband or wife, when, where and how were you so divorced or separated? Produce the decree.

The applicants then swear to the truth of their answers, pay a dollar, receive a license and go out to hunt up a man who has the hope to make them one.

Bust of Dr. Coles Unveiled.

The unveiling of the colossal bronze statue of Dr. Abraham Coles, whose professional work was done in Newark and whose home was at Scotch Plains, took place July 5th at Washington Park, Newark, with appropriate ceremonies. The presentation to the city was made by his son, Dr. J. Anderson Coles, of Scotch Plains. Mayor Seymour, in accepting the gift for the city, paid a high tribute to Dr. Coles, who was one of America's greatest scholars. He referred to his life of usefulness as a physician and surgeon, the penning of the beautiful hymn, "The Rock of Ages," his skill in the translation of dead languages and his rare literary works. The selection of music was from the works of Dr. Coles. The bust is the work of J. Q. A. Ward. The pedestal is of selected stones from Palestine and the base is a bowlder weighing seven tons from Plymouth, Mass. In it is inserted part of a stone from the pyramid of Cheops in Egypt.

Edward Perrine, of Orange, has been the guest of Plainfield relatives.

H. W. Beebe, of Central avenue, is stopping at Seabright for a few days.

E. E. Anthony, of West Front street, has returned from a western business trip.

NOT A GOOD POLICY.

It was rather a strange and incredible doctrine of public policy in a presumably progressive and uptodate city like Plainfield for Councilman Barrows to give expression to the utterance that "Plainfield is a city of homes and the homes should be lighted first," referring to the granting of a petition which solely concerned the business men. Viewed in the concrete, that sentiment was an antagonistic thrust at the growth of Plainfield in a real commercial way. It has long been suspected and intimated, sometimes openly charged that too many of the city officials have an inclination to make the city nothing but a simon-pure residential city—a sleeping reservation for New York business men. That utterance of Councilman Barrows gives credence to the idea. Perhaps to those whose business affairs are centered in the great metropolis the theory may not be unpopular, but to the great mass of all the-time Plainfielders, whose energies are the real backbone of the town, it is decidedly the reverse. The Councilmen who voted for the arc lights in the business center of the city, as the merchants almost to a man urgently asked for, acted in a commendable spirit.

VOTES ARE VOTES.

The New York Evening Sun had the following to say yesterday concerning the participation of women in the recent Washingtonville school meeting:

When it comes to the point, votes are votes, no matter whether they be dropped into the ballot box by men or by women. Out in Jersey the other day they held a school election. According to the laws of that State this is the one sort of election in which women, provided they are property holders, may participate. As a rule, however, the women have not been very tenacious of the privilege, while on the part of the male citizens there has been much prejudice against it. But at this election the latter had not been a difference of opinion. Numerically the sides were pretty well matched, too, and it looked as if it were going to be a close struggle. Suddenly one side bethought of the vast number of votes hitherto unused, to which it was entitled—those of the women. All former scruples and objections faded away. But one thing was thought of, and that was to get more women's votes than the other side. The effort was successful; thanks to a careful scouring of every nook, the ballots of the women voted on that side, and the day was theirs. All minor considerations, such as the ballot destroying the bloom of the fair sex and so forth, were lost sight of. You didn't hear a word about brawn instead of brain being the dominant thing in politics. Nobody so much as hinted that voting was, after all merely a matter of muscle. The women voted and they voted all right, and the men were only too glad to have them do so. Strange, isn't it, how a little thing like wanting to win will change the point of view.

MOSQUITO BITE AN ACCIDENT.

Jerseymen and accident insurance companies will be interested in the recent decision of a Kentucky court which has an especial pertinency at this season of the year. The Court of Appeals held that death resulting from the sting of an insect was accomplished by "external, violent and accidental" means, in the sense that those words are understood in an accident insurance policy. The court held, moreover, that the sting of the insect is the proximate cause of death, which results from blood poisoning caused by the sting, and that death from such a cause is not the result of "poison in any form or manner" or "contact with poisonous substances," as those terms are regarded in accident insurance.

WOMAN'S DAWNING DAY.

In the parlance of the day, the women of this particularly-favored section of New Jersey are strictly "in it" when it comes to hovering around the ballot-box as influential factors. Following close upon the decision of Lincoln's citizens that the fair sex shall possess equal rights with the men in the municipal government comes the story from over the Watchung mountain, at Washingtonville, that the wives of several of the progressive men of the school district won the day for them in a hotly-contested proposition to build a new and modern schoolhouse. Woman's day is certainly dawning.

ONE EXPLANATION.

Inability of Plainfield to have her trolley company sprinkle the streets may be attributed to a pronounced leaning which the principal trolley owners have for the Baptist creed.—New York Press.

HARMONY IN THE AIR.

Harmony seems to be in the air in the Democratic camps of New Jersey. Now Somerset county members of the party are talking of smoking the pipe of peace in a public way, and a "A Tilden Democrat," a frequent and pungent contributor of things political to the Bound Brook Democrat, has this to suggest in that line:

There's an ideal spot near Watchung lake, at Sebring's mills, where the foliage from large ancient elms hide away the sun's hot rays, that can be had for the proposed clambake and jollification of the Democrats of this county. With each township represented there would be at least two hundred present and the affair could be pulled off for about $2 per head.

DEMOCRATIC CONFERENCE.

Col. Price and the Democratic State Committee will meet at Asbury Park during the present month and map out a plan of campaign for the coming election. A strong effort is to be made to elect a majority of the members of the lower branch of the Legislature. Should they be successful in this, and also elect three or four Senators, the outlook for the Gubernatorial election in the following November would be rather encouraging.

A DELICATE QUESTION.

Under New Jersey's new marriage license law, a non-resident applicant for matrimonial honors is required to swear that he knows his prospective partner. Some folks are married for years before they can answer that question truthfully in the affirmative. —Tribune.

SHOCKING.

We have received the following anonymous letter from Plainfield, N. J.:

To the Editor of The Evening Sun—Sir: The young men in this part of the country have taken to leaving the padding out of their golf stockings during the hot weather.

Can this be true?—Evening Sun.

TRACTION COMPANY TROUBLES.

Work of Construction Stopped Near Bound Brook.

The New York and Philadelphia Traction Company excavated over a mile of roadbed between Finderne and Bound Brook last week. A large force of men began work early in the week and were stopped by Deputy Sheriff Theodore Barealow, who commanded the Traction Company to stop all work and to remove from the public highway all tracks, etc., that had been laid prior to July 3, 1897. The Supervisor has since learned that the order does not necessarily mean all that it says.

The Township Committee, by the advice of its counsel, is under the impression that the Traction Company has forfeited its franchise, and is now constructing its road without legal right.

The franchise was granted over two years ago, under condition that the trolley road should be built within a year.

The validity of the old franchise is still a mooted question, with the law somewhat in favor of the Traction Company.

It is stated that the Township Committee and representatives of the Traction Company will meet and adjust matters so that work will be resumed on the line by the first of next week.

It is the intention of the Traction Company to put the road between Somerville and Bound Brook in operation as soon as it is completed.

Passengers will be carried from East Somerville to the Bound Brook borough line until the company succeeds in getting its tracks through the towns.

MARRIED AT HIGH NOON.

A Pretty Home Wedding Celebrated at Washingtonville.

Monday was the occasion of a pretty home wedding, celebrated at high noon in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Koch, of Washingtonville, when Miss Freda A. Vierda was united in marriage to Gustav Eymer, of Long Island. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Herman Eymer, pastor of the German Lutheran church, a brother of the groom. The bride was gowned in white silk.

Following the reception a wedding breakfast was served. The decorations consisted of stately palms and choice cut flowers, arranged in an attractive manner.

Some of the guests were Mr. and Mrs. John Koch, Mrs. Eymer, mother of the groom, Rev. Herman Eymer, Mr. and Mrs. Leithauser and Miss Volkman, of Plainfield. There were also guests from New York, Brooklyn and Long Island. The bride and groom will reside on Long Island, where the latter is in business.

Pastor Installed.

Rev. Edward F. Moldunke, D. D., of New York, was present at the German Lutheran church Monday morning and installed Rev. Herman Eyme as pastor of the church. In the evening Miss Freda Volkman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Volkman, and Miss Martha Hopping were confirmed by the newly installed pastor. The congregation took communion at the confirmation. There was a large attendance at both the morning and evening service.

Oxygen and Iron.

Two Great Essentials of Life. The Latest Discovery of Science.

Doctors of all schools agree that oxygen and iron are essentials of life. It is well known that it is the oxygen in the air which gives life and vigor. It is the oxygen in the air also which has the greatest power in destroying germ diseases and restoring health. Almost all chronic ailments are quickly killed when concentrated oxygen from the air is brought in contact with them. Nature has arranged that we shall breathe oxygen into our lungs, and that this oxygen shall then be taken up by the blood. It is the iron of Hemoglobin in the blood which attracts the oxygen from the air cavities in the lungs and carries it to every part of the body. Therefore you must have iron or Hemoglobin in your blood, for if you have not, your blood becomes thick, heavy, and impure. Pimples, blotches, eruptions and other skin affections result. The tongue grows furred. There is languidness, biliousness, lack of appetite, constipation, either constant drowsiness or inability to sleep. Ordinary preparations of iron fail to effect a cure because they are not in the form demanded by nature; they cannot be taken up by the blood, but irritate the stomach and bowels. Dr. Campbell, an eminent practitioner of London, England, has succeeded in separating from the blood of healthy bullocks, iron as it exists in the human blood. This is redissolved and enclosed in a soft gelatine capsule called Capsuloids. In this form it is being used by the leading English physicians. It has lately been introduced in this country and can be used by anyone, young or old, with the best results.

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids are sold by all leading druggists at 50 cents per large box, six boxes for $2.50, or sent direct on the same price from the office of The Capsuloid Company, Drewing Building, 108 Fulton Street, New York City.

MUST NOT WASTE WATER

SUPPLY COMPANY SAY THAT MANY PEOPLE ARE VERY WASTEFUL.

Lawn Sprinklers and Hand Hose Must Be Used Only in Certain Hours, Else the Supply Will Be Discontinued.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company are becoming aggressive in enforcing the rules governing the use of lawn sprinklers and hand hose, and as a result there is likelihood of many spats ensuing between the corporation and its patrons, who may consider their inclination to do as they please, supreme to the company's requests.

At this time of the year more than any other the company's capacity for furnishing water is tested, as nearly a million gallons more a day are used now than at any other period. This is caused by the sprinkling of lawns and various other uses to which water is put in the hot weather season.

Officials of the company say that many of their patrons use no judgment in making sprinklers do service, where a little discrimination on the part of each subscriber would relieve the company of much trouble and anxiety to provide a flow that will not be impaired. Consequently the company has issued the following circular to its patrons, and inspectors are to be detailed to see that the regulations are lived up to, or else the supply will be cut off without previous notice:

Lawn sprinklers and hand hose must be used only between the hours of 6 and 9 a. m. and 4 and 7 p. m., from the 1st of April to the 15th of October, and if found out of order or leaking, or if converted into jets, or if used for the flushing of sewers other than the one obtaining the permit, or suffered to run when not used, or if used at a time not stated above, the supply will be cut off without previous notice.

All persons using a hose, either in front or rear of premises, from a hydrant or faucet connection, must first obtain a permit for use only at hours permitted by the rules and regulations. Permit to use lawn sprinklers does not include the use of water for street sprinkling.

Several patrons of the company whose attention, probably, has not been called to the above regulations, are in the habit of using lawn sprinklers and hand hose at times not permitted.

Lost His Damage Suit.

A verdict for the Plainfield Street Railway was brought in the damage suit started against the Street Railway by E. C. Winter for alleged damages done to his wagon, which was said to have been run down by a trolley car on East Fifth street. The court held that he had backed his wagon on the track and gave a verdict in favor of the defendant in the case. The case was tried in the Union county court at Elizabeth.

DESECRATION OF GRAVES

A DISGRACEFUL STATE OF AFFAIRS AT EVERGREEN CEMETERY.

The Floral Tributes Left on the Last Resting Place of Departed Friends Are Stolen by the Young Children in That Vicinity.

A state of affairs exists at Evergreen cemetery, and has existed in fact for many years, that is a disgrace to the city. Circumstances are such that it is now impossible to leave flowers on a newly made grave or to plant others on any of the graves in the cemetery. Of course, the flowers may be left there, but the moment that the back of the one who leaves them is turned, a small army of children invade the cemetery from all the surrounding neighborhood, and the flowers fast disappear before their ready fingers. Whether the most beautiful floral tribute, or some simple little bouquet, they are all treated alike,

This grave desecration has gone on for years. Evergreen cemetery, which is located on Plainfield avenue, between West Seventh and West Front streets, is really two distinct cemeteries, located side by side. One is owned and cared for by the trustees of the First Baptist church and the other by the trustees of the First M. E. church. The cemetery is almost a century old.

It has long been the custom among the relatives and friends of the deceased to have the floral tributes left on the top of the grave. Such was the custom at the Evergreen cemetery as in the others. As that portion of the city in the vicinity of the cemetery began to get thickly settled, there was a crowd that gathered about there. They ranged in age from six to twelve. Some more venturesome youngster once climb the fence and picked a flower from one of the graves before the admiring eyes of his friends; others followed until the bush was left bare of blossoms. Then the children grew in the habit of gathering in the cemetery to watch the interment. When the sexton and mourners departed, leaving the floral offerings arranged upon the grave, there was a scramble among the youngsters to secure the prettiest blossoms. They did not realize that the desecration of graves was anything wrong and besides it gave them some excitement.

This wholesale robbery has at last caused most of the local undertakers to take steps to prevent it. The floral tributes are arranged on top of the coffin and then the earth is covered over them. Of course, many attempts are made to plant flowers on the tops of graves and in some cases they have remained for some time. More often, however, the blossoms are picked off as fast as they bloom and in many cases the plants themselves are dug up and removed from the cemetery.

Last year, some children removed a plant from the Tier plot, where it had been placed by members of the family. A complaint was made and the offenders were brought to justice. The desecrators were small children, who knew no better, and they were allowed to go with a severe reprimand. It in no way frightened the rest, however, and the children have continued to despoil the flowers in the cemetery with great regularity.

It is usually impossible to locate the offender and the local undertakers, who have charge of the interments there, find that the matter has gotten beyond their control and that they are simply powerless in the matter. In conversation with a Press reporter, yesterday afternoon, one of them said that the only method to stop this desecration of the graves would be to place a watchman there constantly day and night and, he asked, who is going to put the watchman there?

Hurt in a Runaway.

Sunday afternoon at about 5 o'clock, Asa Willis, of Johnston's Drive, in company with a young lady, stopped in front of the Manhattan Hotel on Somerset street to water a horse. The horse got away and threw the young lady out of the wagon, injuring her arm severely. Mr. Willis caught the horse after considerable trouble, and the two returned home about 6 o'clock.

WOMAN'S VOTE COUNTS

FAIR SEX HAVE A VOICE IN THE LINCOLN COMMON COUNCIL.

The Municipal Solons Formally Organized by the Appointment of Committees—Mayor's Complimentary Words.

The determination of the citizens of Lincoln to allow women an equal voice in the government of that municipality received a new impetus Saturday afternoon when the Common Council, in which two of the fair sex share the honors with men, was formally organized by the appointment of committees.

The most interesting portion of the meeting was to be the attendance of the Councilwomen, but Mrs. Oliva Hazard, the matronly member of the body, was unable to be present on account of a sudden attack of illness. She wrote a letter to Mayor Drake pledging her interest in the new movement for women's equality. Miss Emma Egel, the other member whose youth has attracted considerable attention, drove through a boiling-hot sun and a half mile of Jersey dust to be present in her official capacity. Miss Egel said that she felt somewhat out of place on account of the novelty of her position, and during the subsequent proceedings her countenance betokened that she was reasoning just why she was there. Still, Miss Egel performed the functions of her office in a becoming manner.

Mayor Drake called the meeting to order at 4 o'clock with the words that "the Common Council of Lincoln will come to order." The Mayor then proceeded to address the members and in the course of his remarks referred to the innovation of women members. He said that Lincoln, being a small place, could afford to test woman's capacity in an office-holding way where a large city could not. He was confident, however, that they would be a credit to themselves and all womankind by demonstrating their ability to successfully fill their positions.

The Mayor then proceeded to appoint the committees, in the fulfillment of which he gave his fair associates full sway on the license and marshals' committee. He remarked, as he announced this committee, that "here woman can come in 'and have all the say she wants to." Miss Egel smiled in a satisfied way at this remark.

After this work was finished the Mayor nominated H. C. Suydam, of this city and Bound Brook for corporation counsel. In the vote for confirmation Miss Egel's "aye" was audable. The Mayor seemed to consider her vote important and asked her a second time how she voted. Miss Egel responded in the affirmative and this seemed to be satisfactory, for he said, "All right, Mr. Suydam is counsel."

This completed the business of the Council and after the regular meeting day was set for the second Saturday of each month, adjournment was made.

The Mayor then "set up" ice cream and lemonade to the solons and the audience.

May Have Revival Meetings.

There will be a special meeting of the members of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Friday evening, after the regular Friday evening service, to discuss the advisability of holding a series of revival meetings in connection with the annual meeting of the Seventh-Day Baptist churches of New Jersey and New York city, which is to be held in this city in November. The plan, as proposed, is to have a special evangelist here for the time and conduct revival meetings while the annual meeting is in session and then continue them for some time afterwards. The meetings will be especially for those who are accustomed to attend that church, but all will be invited.

Jerusalem Lodge Conferred Degrees.

Notwithstanding the heavy rain, Jerusalem Lodge, F. and A. M., had a good attendance at its meeting last Monday. The Master Mason's degree was conferred upon three candidates, and the members then adjourned to the banquet hall, where a collation was served.

NO SPIES FOR KLINER.

A BOROUGH MARSHAL RESIGNED RATHER THAN BE WATCHED.

Gave His Badge and Club to Councilman Carey Tuesday Morning—The Matter to be Reported at the Next Meeting.

T. J. Carey, chairman of the license and marshal committee, of the Borough Council, was somewhat surprised Tuesday morning when Marshal Jacob Kliner called at his house at 6 o'clock and informed him that he desired to resign his position and turn over his effects to the borough authorities. It had been rumored that Mr. Kliner was going to resign his position, but the story was not believed by his most intimate friends. Mr. Carey informed the officer that he would accept his badge and club and report the matter to the Council. Mr. Kliner gave as a partial reason for his action that he did not like the idea of being watched to see whether he was doing his duty, and he felt as though he was being watched.

Mr. Kliner was one of the new men selected this year, and it was thought that he would make a good officer. However, he has, at times given his superior officers occasion to think that he was not satisfied with things in general. He tried very hard to get the position, and it was thought that he would make every effort to hold it. His son still holds a position on the force as a regular.

It is the intention of the above committee to try from time to time the specials and thus select suitable men to do regular duty, and they are determined that the borough shall have an efficient police department.

NEW JERSEY WOMEN SUFFRAGISTS BEGIN A STRONG CAMPAIGN

They Have Enlisted Strong Aid Right and Left and Will Keep Things Moving—A Letter Sent to Supporters.

The campaign of the New Jersey Woman Suffragist Association has been begun by a general appeal through circulars to every woman in the State to do her duty in securing a vote or two for the constitutional amendment now before the people giving the women of the State limited suffrage on the school question.

The Woman Suffragists understand that they must make an independent fight for their amendment, and not rely on the Citizens' League for support in connection with their fight for the anti-gambling amendment. It was stated that a few weeks ago that they expected to receive aid from the clubs in the State Federation of Clubs. They now intend to press into service all the women's secret societies, particularly those which claim patriotic motives, and the two women's organizations of the Grand Army of the Republic, as well as the Woman's Auxiliary of the Sons of Veterans. This will give them a chain of woman's organizations reaching through the State.

The women, of course, cannot vote, but they are expected to see that the men vote right.

HELD FOR AN ASSAULT.

Exciting Preliminary Examination in Justice Moffett's Court.

Edward Brown, colored, was examined in Justice Moffett's court Tuesday on a charge of assault and battery, preferred by William Goff, of West Third street.

The charge was a result of the big row that occurred on West Third street on July 5th, when Goff tried to separate William Brown and Cora Morris, while they were fighting. Edward Brown went to his brother's aid. The case has been in the courts a number of times already and William Brown is now serving a sentence of ten days in jail.

Goff was fined $8 for resisting arrest, and he then preferred a charge against both William and Edward Brown for assault and battery. A large number of witnesses were called on both sides. Christopher Columbus and Arthur Venable testified that they saw the defendant, Edward Brown, kick Goff.

Mrs. Brown, the mother of the accused man, grew excited while the colored woman, Frank Jackson, was testifying. She interrupted the hearing by calling out that Jackson had been paid 50 cents to testify against her son. William Goff's version was that he merely stepped in to protect the girl, Cora Morris, and that he had been struck upon the head and rendered senseless.

The father of Edward Brown testified that his wife and Edward had gone after William to bring him home because Cora Morris had said to them that she intended to "raise the devil" with William when she saw him.

After hearing the evidence, Justice Moffett held Brown in $200 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

GUNS FOR A TALL LOOTER

RESIDENTS IN AND ABOUT SOMERVILLE WAITING FOR A BURGLAR.

A Is a Tall Man, With a Short Pal, Who Has Terrorized the Community—The County Solons Offer a $100 Reward.

The citizens of Somerville are spending restless nights, apprehensive of a visit from a pair of burglars who have been breaking into houses thereabouts recently. The burglars are described as a six-footer, built in proportion, and a short, burly fellow. They succeeded in getting into several houses, and the residents became so scared finally that the Somerset county Board of Freeholders offered a reward of $100 for the capture of the marauders.

The Somerville Town Council equipped the police force with bicycles and dark lanterns to get around at night after the burglars. Despite these precautions the tall and short burglars have continued their work. At 1 o'clock, one morning Wesley Bacon, a produce dealer who lives on South Bridge street, was awakened by a noise made by somebody tinkering with his kitchen windows.

Mr. Bacon slipped quietly downstairs and waited for the intruder with an uplifted chair. When the visitor got the shutter open and started to climb in the window. Mr. Bacon saw it was the six-foot burglar. Mr. Bacon dropped the chair and grabbed the big burglar by the collar. Then he pulled him into the room head first. The thief shook the house when he fell, but he was as agile as a cat. He jumped to his feet and grappled with Mr. Bacon. He got a grip on his captor's throat and was rapidly choking him into insensibility when Mrs. Bacon's cries caused him to desist and jump out of the window. The short burglar was in the yard, and the pair got over the fence and disappeared in the darkness. Mr. Bacon was exhausted after his struggle with the big burglar. He has a shotgun ready in case of another visit from burglars. So has almost every other resident of the county.

MAARKEN WEDDING.

AN INTERESTING CEREMONY IN THAT QUEER LITTLE ISLAND.

An Engagement of Five Years is the Usual Custom and During that Time the Lovers See Very Little of Each Other and are Never Alone.

It was a bright Sunday in June that I chose for my visit to this little triangular island of Maarken, situated in the Zuyder Zee, whose inhabitants, according to Washington Irving, have settled conclusively, to their own minds at least, the long-disputed question concerning the situation of the Garden of Eden. Inclosed by a broad dyke, that keeps out the encroaching waters of the Zee, these fishermen, with their families, live their quiet lives. Many of the women, and even the men, have never ventured beyond its narrow limits. An air of unusual excitement prevailed over the whole island the day of my visit. Following the direction taken by the various groups, I found myself in front of the church, and listened a few minutes later, hand in hand, a couple, in holiday attire, gravely entered I knew instinctively that it was a wedding that had so moved the calm, stolid Dutch peasantry. The bridal couple approached the altar, entirely alone, and the burgomaster addressed a few remarks and questions to them. Then he extended his hands in blessing and solemnly shook hands with first the groom, then the bride, and the ceremony was ended. Quietly, without a word or look to or from each one, they turned, and, hand in hand, slowly left the church and walked in the middle of the street to their new home, which the groom, according to custom, entered first, the bride following about a minute later, both having removed their shoes and left them on the outside. Not a word or a glance was exchanged between them. The little bride was most picturesque. Her dark stuff skirt over a white petticoat was just short enough to show her feet, incased in blue knit stockings and leather shoes with silver buckles. A white spenser, over which was a bodice or corselet, green in front and red behind, heavily embroidered in gold and silver thread. These bodices are works of art; the pattern is most gorgeous, and it takes years to finish one. They are handed down from mother to daughter as heirlooms. Like all the women on the island, old and young, the little bride wore a white cap lowering all the light possible from her head; in front, and a long yellow curl on either side of the face. The groom's knickerbockers would have made a bicycle girl envious. He wore a striped waistcoat over red shirt, a long silver chain, and solid brass buttons on his coat. At a certain age, somewhere near sixteen, the girls assume the "shako" or cap worn by the women. After this they can "smuggle," as the term is, or in English they make their debut. In the evening, after the fishing boats come in, the young men and maidens assemble in the harbor and sit in the boats together. As soon as they become engaged, all this is changed. The girl stays at home and learns to be a good housewife, weaved and makes bed linen, etc. This engagement usually lasts five years. During this time the young couple seldom see each other, never alone. The man fishes, builds a home and makes ready for his bride.

CURRENT COMMENT.

France made the first appropriation for the Exposition in the Budget of 1896, so that our own Government is promptly responding, and by timely action will be worthily represented at an international display which promises to eclipse all former attempts of the kind. The French have a genius for the organization of great industrial exhibitions. France was the pioneer country in such enterprises and it has set the pace for them in all other countries. It held notable exhibitions in 1789 and 1801 and many befpre the first English Exposition was held under Royal patronage in 1828. The first industrial exhibition of the century was held in Paris, and it is eminently fitting that the last exposition of the century should be held in that city. Fifteen World's Fairs have been held in the French capital during the past hundred years.

Mr. Peary has secured another advance in his projected trip to discover the North Pole by securing from Secretary Long a leave of absence for five years. It is significant of the faith and interest which the Secretary of the Navy takes in the enterprise that the leave is said to have been granted in the face of considerable opposition. That Mr. Peary was given permission to make the journey will afford general satisfaction, because his achievements have established his standing as a distinguished explorer, and it may be confidently expected that, even though he may not discover the Pole in this venture, he will render a good account of himself and add materially to the world's scientific and geographical knowledge. The absence of Mr. Peary from his post as Engineer in the Navy, although perhaps causing some inconvenience to the authorities, may be looked upon, nevertheless, as a distinct advantage to the service, for although he carries on his explorations without any financial aid from the Government, the good results of his work reflect much credit thereto, through his official connection.

CONFEDERATE MONUMENT NORTH

Members of Various Camps of G. A. R Helped to Dedicate It.

There was no sound of discord at the dedication at Mount Hope Cemetery near New York, of the beautiful monument to the memory of the dead soldiers of the South, which was presented to the Confederate Veteran Camp by the Charles Broadway Rouss. Neither was there any sign of enmity at the reception at Lenox Lyceum. The Union and Confederate Veterans dwelt together in unity, and the friendship between the old soldiers of the South and the Grand Army men was wedded in speech and prayer.

The Confederate Veteran Camp had issued invitations to several Grand Army posts, which had invited its members to camp fires, to attend the dedication. Major-General H. S. Grant and Alexander Hamilton posts, the Farragut Association of Naval Veterans, the Elizabeth, N. J., Veteran Zouaves and the Judson Kilpatrick Post and the Old Guard were present at the ceremonies at the cemetery. The monument is on a beautiful site of the cemetery, and the dedication was witnessed by a large gathering, which included many members of Southern families.

The reception at the Lenox Lyceum was the main feature of the occasion. There was an elaborate display of American flags in the audience hall. Around the galleries were bunched the standards of the nation and the coat of arms of every state. Over the platform was spread the United States, suspended between American flags. There were roses, hydrangeas and palms on the platform.

Colonel A. G. Dickinson, commander of the Confederate Veteran Camp, welcomed the Union soldiers in a brief speech, and invited the commanders of the posts and associations to come upon the platform. The scene that followed brought tears to many eyes in the hall. There were references to the old battles and the recounting of brave deeds by veterans of both sides.—New York Herald.

SHE DISPLAYED TRUE TACT

And Gained the Respect of the Poor Wretch Who Demanded Her Money.

A touching little story full of realism is told of Miss Eleanor Calhoun, who, by the way, is a direct descendant of the great John Calhoun, is a most high-bred, cultivated young woman, and, like all thoroughly refined natures, instinctively appeals to the finer qualities in every one with whom she comes in contact.

At times of great political disturbances in Paris, when revolution is in the air, a mob of wretched, fiendish creatures, who scarcely seem human at all, rise to the surface. Some horrible scum, from nobody knows where, and after the agitation is over as suddenly disappear.

During one of these political upheavals Miss Calhoun was one day walking with an elderly lady near the Bois de Boulogne, when she was suddenly confronted by one of those wolfish demons, who demanded her money.

Miss Calhoun instantly grasped the situation, and realized that something altogether unusual must be done.

"Yes, I see that you have need of money," she said, quite gently, "but, as you see, my hands are filled with parcels. If you will just put your hand into my pocket you will find my purse."

"But, madame—madame—" replied the poor wretch, with a profound bow. "Oh, you can find it quite easily," said Miss Calhoun; "it is just at my side. I would be glad to help you were it not for these bundles. Please take my purse and help yourself."

With another deep bow and again a muttered "Madame" the desperado reluctantly edged toward her, put his hand in her pocket, withdrew the purse, opened it, and took from it the smallest coin that it contained; then replacing the purse in her pocket, with a gesture of the most profound respect and gratitude, he shuffled away.

A PRESIDENT'S LOVE

ANDREW JOHNSON'S COURTSHIP OF MISS SARAH WORD

She Rejected the Future Chief Magistrate for a Saddler.—He was not Illiterate when Young, but to the Contrary was Exceptionally Intelligent.

Three-quarters of a century ago, in the little village of Laurens, in the State of South Carolina, there lived and labored at the saddler's trade a young man who was destined to play an important part in the affairs of this Nation. Of humble origin and having had practically no educational advantages, he had in his character the elements of true manhood, and by force of brain power and ability attained the highest position of honor and trust in the Republic.

Andrew Johnson left his home in North Carolina by reason of some trouble with his employer, and went to the then ultra-exclusive and aristocratic village of Laurens. He had no influential family connections, and was as poor as the traditional church mouse, his worldly possessions consisting mainly of the clothes he wore. To one acquainted with the social conditions of the ante-bellum South, the difficulties incident to obtaining recognition by a man handicapped as Johnson was can be readily imagined. The sterling worth of the young tailor, however, soon made itself felt, and demanded the admiration and respect soon accorded him by those who were wont to consider one not to the manor born deserving of but condescending notice.

Johnson's stay at Laurens marked a very important epoch in his life. It was there that he met his first love, Miss Sarah Word, a charming young woman of education and refinement, who saw in the modest and retiring young tailor a man of true worth of character and strength and promise. Johnson's regard for Miss Word was reciprocated, and the young people entered into an engagement to marry. They were thrown constantly in each other's society, and the future President of the United States once assisted his fiancee in laying, stuffing and quilting a quilt.

The irresistible tendency that young men in love have to carve their sweethearts' names on everything movable and immovable in and adjacent to civility was not wanting in Johnson. On the bottom of an old split-bottomed chair he engraved the inscription "S. W.—1820." It is needless to say that it was the chair in which Miss Word was accustomed to sit on the porch of her home.

Having satisfactorily adjusted the trouble with his former employer in North Carolina, Johnson decided to return and resume his place. Before leaving Laurens, the seat of his affectionate regard, he gave to Miss Word his dearest possession, the goose with which he had worked at his trade. This act shows the tender simplicity of the young tailor. He had no gold to bestow, but the matter. He was leaving the woman he loved for an indefinite time, and not ashamed of his lowly calling, gave her something that would be a constant reminder of him and his work. After leaving Laurens differences arose between Miss Word and Johnson, and their engagement was terminated, but the tailor's goose was never returned. Miss Word rejected the tailor and married William Hance, a saddler. The tailor became President of the United States.

Johnson's biographers have all maintained that in early life he was uncouth, illiterate and ignorant, with no refinement nor grace of manner. It has been stated that he could neither read nor write, and that his wife taught him both after marriage. This error has become so firmly fixed that it is generally accepted as an historic fact, and school children are told the romantic story of how a man who afterward became President was taught to read and write by a wife who was ambitious for his advancement. This story may be a beautiful object lesson on the grand possibilities of American citizenship, but the fact of the matter is that he could both read and write, and was considered a young man of considerable intelligence. Miss Word, to whom he was engaged, is authority for this statement that she received many notes and letters from him, and that he wrote a good business hand. She has also frequently said that he was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, of elegant address and a brilliant conversationalist.—National Magazine.

MILLET'S STRUGGLE.

HE AND HIS FAMILY WERE OFTEN ON THE BRINK OF STARVATION.

Suffering Shortened His Life, but Never Weakened His Enthusiasm. He Was the Son of a Farmer and Worked at the Plow Until Eighteen Years Old.

Jean Francoise Millet has for the first time been put adequately before the reading public by Julia Cartwright, whose handsome octavo volume, "Jean Francoise Millet: His Life and Letters" (Macmillian), is a carefully written and appreciative review of his life and works.

For Millet's case, as Miss Cartwright points out, the man and the artist were bound closely together.

His first masterpieces were rejected by the jury of the Salon. The pictures which now fetch their thousands were sold for a few pounds to buy bread for children. And in all this story, it is none the less noble and inspiring. His sufferings saddened and shortened his life, but they did not crush his spirit or weaken the message which he had to give.

It is a touching story, that of the budding forth of the boy's genius. Always impressionable to the wonders of nature, the vague stirrings in him had found expression at last through the sight of some old engravings in an illustrated Bible. These he traced in hand at drawing the objects around the fields. While his father slumbered on a couch at his side, Francois would sketch the cows, the sheep, the trees. Often the father, waking from his sleep, would get up and take a peep at the drawings, which the boy was intently engaged, and return softly to his place without disturbing him, well pleased to see this new development of his son's powers.

But it not him to serious thinking. One Sunday when the lad was about fifteen years old he spoke to him and asked him whether he wished to be a painter. Francois answered in the affirmative. Then with a kindness that the youth never forgot, the elder Millet said:

"My poor Francois, I see that this idea has taken hold of you. I should like to have sent you long ago to learn this trade of a painter, which people say is such a fine thing, but it was impossible. You were the eldest of four boys, and I could not do without you. But now that your brothers are growing up I will no longer deprive you from learning what you are so anxious to know. We will go to Cherbourg and see if you have really enough talent to be able to earn a living."

At Cherbourg they called upon an artist named Bon Dumoucel. The latter saw at a glance the originality and merit of the country lad's productions.

"You are laughing at me," he said roughly; "you don't mean to tell me that this young man made those drawings by himself!"

"Yes, certainly," said the father gravely, "I saw him make them myself."

"I don't believe it," returned Dumoucel. "I see that the method is beyond him, and above his composition. I repeat, it is impossible."

When at last the incredulous artist was convinced, he turned to the father and exclaimed:

"Well, then, all I can say is you will be damned for having kept him so long at the plow, for your boy has the making of a great painter in him."

And he agreed on the spot to take Francois as his pupil. Later came the 12 years' stay in Paris, the painful apprenticeship to art, the still more painful effort to win recognition. Time after time his pictures were rejected by the Salon. He was now a husband and a father. In his dire need he accepted whatever orders he could get, and painted signs and portraits for the smallest sums. Even then he had great difficulty to get paid, and often met with harsh and cruel treatment.

His wife died. He married again under a temporary but illusionary impression of friendship. Then followed once more fell upon the little family. So late as 1848 a kind-hearted artist, learning of his plight, raised 100 francs for him from the minister of the interior, who was likewise the head of the administration of fine arts. At that time all Paris was talking of his pictures, but, alas! not buying them.

Some of his sketches now found a small sale. These were mostly of nude subjects. But one day he happened to purchase two pastels speaking of a pastel he had already sold, representing two women in a bath.

"A man named Millet painted it," said one. "He does nothing but paint naked women."

The words were a shock to the unwilling eavesdropper. His friends had often admired his nude figures and praised his skill in flesh color. But never until that moment had he realized that upon them depended his chief reputation as an artist. His soul rose up in horror.—New York Herald.

His Vast Experience.

A New York school boy, in an essay on his favorite authors, says: "Should I be asked to select a library of my favorite books, I should name Scott's' Dickens's, Cooper's, Irving's, Porter's Shakespeare's, Eliot's and Hawthorne's works." It is doubtful if that school boy is entirely frank in naming Shakespeare among his favorites, they look like a concession to the teacher's "prejudices." But the following is perfectly honest, and is a gem: "As a rule boys are fond of works of adventure, and I am no exception to the rule. It is only natural that young people seeing so much of domestic life, do not care to read about it."—Philadelphia Ledger.

CRANKS' COLUMN.

Suggestions that Emanate from Pens of Bicycle Riders.

A woman lecturing in Brooklyn avers that "bicycling develops only the legs, and the upper part of the body must have other exercise to equalize the effects." The ideal Bicycling develops a lot of things. It affects the muscles of nearly the entire physical system. It develops the arms because of their exercise in steering; it develops the lungs, because it causes deep breathing; it develops the vocal cords, because of their use in remonstrating with dogs, drivers and pedestrians who obstruct the cyclist's path; at the same time it develops the power of language through the situations it provides which require the faculty of high speech for adequate dealing with them. Cycling develops the stomach, by giving its devotees a hearty appetite; it develops the legs, by setting it bearing; it develops the hands, as they hold the handle bar; and, in the case of scorchers, cycling also produces the "bicycle face" and the "ostrich neck." Cycling is great in its all-round effects, morally and physically.

The bicycle meets with little sympathy from those who make by-laws in the city of Montreal. The City Council has already decreed that Park and Ferries Committee has declared that wheels are debarred from St. Helen's Island, one of the most frequented parks and summer resorts of the city. St. Helen's Island is in the St. Lawrence River, directly opposite the city, and the reason given for its being denied to bicyclists is that the latter would be a nuisance to the large number of women and children who frequent it on the hot days of summer.

The Toronto Street Railway also have given notice of application to the Provincial Legislature for power to levy a tax on all bicyclists using any of the country roads leading out from the city.

"Up against it again!" gloomily remarked the man who pronounces "athletic" in four syllables.

"How's that?" asked the woman who wears white gloves with black stitching.

"Thought I had a sure thing the other day, and was thrown as usual. Was in a bicycle store when a fellow came in to buy a cyclometer. Said his had give out after he had ridden 500 miles. Was hoping for a season's record, and hated to begin over again. Salesman said he could fix it. Took new cyclometer, fixed it on wheel, upended the thing in the store, and began to turn. Counted 5,000 miles in no time. Thought I saw my graft. Went to a guy I know, and bet him I could ride more miles in a week than he could. It was to be decided by cyclometers. Bought new cyclometer, went up to Erie and began to ride. Struck a hot box at the 287th mile and stuck fast. Never happened to a cyclometer before. Just my luck."—Buffalo Express.

Ain't you afraid to ride that bicycle suit?

Land no! When one can keep her perpendiculus over the center of gravaviop the laws of contraction is remeover, and it's easy—dald easy.

Had I wished to know the time at 8 o'clock this morning in Hyde Park I could have had it for the asking. Several gentlmen passed me, and with an eye which a wonderful took their watches out of their sockets to study the hour. It was pleasant to see the elegant manner in which they could perform the clever feat of steering with one hand. I really did not know it could be achieved so well. Last year cyclists a la mode used to wipe their sweating brows with perfumed handkerchiefs, and they would light their cigarettes while swinging their bodies to and fro, but these modern customs change tout cela. The correct thing is to look at your chronometer while indolently you hold the handle-bar in the center by means of the right hand. All ye new cyclists, take the hint.—London Wheeling.

Joe Grimes, the 500-pound representative of an American wheel, created a sensation in Hyde Park last week, especially when he cycled through the streets. When he wanted to ride on an Irish car for variety, there was always a competition. Many car men absolutely refused to allow the heavy merchandise aboard their machines. Those who took him appeared quite averse to the risk, and regarded the trip with such a load as a high trial. Needless to say, with Grimes up, the cars not lopsided to a dangerous extent.

Cycle stands similar to cab stands are to be started in Berlin. It is proposed to put 250 wheels on hire in various parts of the city, and the fee for using will be at the modest sum of 1 penny for twenty minutes during the day, and twice that sum at night.

FONTHILL CASTLE

BUILT BY EDWIN FORREST, WELL KNOWN TRAGEDIAN.

His Wife did not Look Forward to Leading the Quiet Life that Her Husband Desired. The Beautiful Home Brought no Happiness with Its Completion.

A half-hour's sail up the river from New York brings the tourist in view of the battlemented keep and tower of Fonthill, rising above the treetops on the summit of Mount St. Vincent. The castle is built of stone in imitation of the Norman-Gothic structures of the Middle Ages, and lacks but the moat and the drawbridge to present a perfect picture of an old feudal stronghold. In all other respects it is the most complete reproduction of a mediaeval castle that can be found in this country.

Fonthill was erected by Edwin Forrest, the great tragedian, when he was in the zenith of his fame, and was intended for the happy retreat of his declining years. It was destined, however, to be intimately associated with the domestic tragedy that broke up his home and embittered the last days of his life. The story of the famous divorce suits too well known to bear repetition, but it is not so well known that the incidents which led up to it were developed while he was engaged in laying out his extensive grounds and building his beautiful Norman castle at Fonthill. While absorbed in this work he occupied a handsome stone cottage that is still standing on the grounds, and was, to a certain extent, living apart from his wife.

It is said that she did not look with favor upon her husband's plans for the future. She was of a lively, social disposition, fond of entertaining the many friends she drew around her by her charms, while Mr. Forrest was quiet and reserved, caring little for home entertainments, and for the intimate friends and his own immediate household. The idea of spending her remaining days shut up within the stone walls of a feudal castle, with no other company than her husband, was altogether distasteful to Mrs. Forrest's imagination, so she passed the greater part of her time in New York, keeping open house, while Mr. Forrest staid at Fonthill, busy with landscape gardeners and architects.

When the castle was finished, and preparations were completed for moving into it, when the discovery came that led to the ruin of their happiness. Defeated in his divorce suit, Mr. Forrest was too much chagrined to contemplating a quiet life in such a home around which his fancy had weaved so many dreams of domestic bliss. He determined to part with his estate, and the Sisters of Charity of the Roman Catholic faith having offered him a fair price for it, he transferred the land, with all the buildings upon it, to their ownership. It is said that Mr. Forrest never passed a night in the house he had planned with so much solicitude and care. But the story does not end here; it has a tragic sequel.

George Jamieson, an actor, who was held by many to be responsible for the domestic infelicities of the Forrests, met with a horrible death many years afterward under the very walls of the castle that had been built by the man he is said to have wronged. He was walking down the tracks of the Hudson River Railroad one night to take a train at the Mt. St. Vincent station for New York, when he was struck by the engine of an express and instantly killed.

Fonthill Castle is at present occupied by an aged Prelate of the Roman Catholic Church, the Right Rev. Mgr. Bernard O'Reilly, Chamberlain Apostolic of the Papal Court, the author of the Lives of Popes Pius IX. and Leo XIII., and of other scholarly works, is spending the evening of his days in this quiet, beautiful retreat.—Leslie's Weekly.

Reasons for the Senator's Bills.

Senator Feeney, of the Kansas State Senate, has a young daughter who tells why her father introduced so many freak bills in the Senate. "Whenever pa ran up against anything he didn't like," she says, "he would come home and write a bill against it. There is one of his railroad bills, for instance. We drove to town in cheeky one night, and there was a freight train on the crossing, and it kept us there for twenty minutes. It annoyed pa dreadfully, and he went home and wrote that bill to prohibit trains from obstructing crossings more than five minutes. Then, one night, somebody stole all our chickens. The next day pa wrote his chicken bill. But you will notice that the bill doesn't protect ducks. I says 'except ducks.' Pa don't like ducks, and he actually wanted to steal them if was all right—the ducks was punishment enough. Whenever pa sat down to write a bill we always knew what something had happened to him."—New York Tribune.

Use of Burdock in Japan.

A Japanese correspondent of Garden and Forest says that the burdock, which the Japanese call "gobo," is a favorite dish in Japan. The tender shoots are boiled with beans, the roots are put in soup, and the young leaves are eaten as greens. The plant has been cultivated for centuries, and the annual value of the crop is about $4,000,000. It is a new surprising to American farmers, who look on the burdock as a "pesky weed."—New York Tribune.

UNIVERSITY IS POOR.

CHICAGO'S EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION NEEDS MORE MONEY.

John D. Rockefeller, the Founder, Will Have to Put Up Ten Millions or So More —Now Running Behind at the Rate of $250,000 a Year.

The University of Chicago, founded by John Rockefeller, needs money, and has been running behind at the rate of $250,000 a year in the matter of expenses.

This discouraged President William R. Harper, and he threatened to resign, for he found he could not fully establish the University on the lines laid down. This threatened resignation promises to have lasting effects on Western educational methods and scope, and, incidentally, to make the University of Chicago one of the richest institutions in the world. Millions will be poured into its coffers by the man who has already given $8,000,000 to the institution.

Dr. Harper has frequently asserted that he would not be satisfied with less than a $20,000,000 endowment, and with that idea in mind he proceeded to lay the foundations for the university. After a struggle of more than five years the President is ready to admit that he has failed in running an institution on $500,000 a year that was originally planned for a budget of $1,200,000.

He made most earnest appeals for a larger endowment at every convocation of the university, but the friends of the university took the matter slightly. Nobody took the Doctor seriously when he asserted that the institution was hampered for funds, and that its progress was being retarded. The President made frequent trips to the East, and rumor had it that he paid a visit to Mr. Rockefeller each time. He also paid visits to George M. Pullman, Marshall Field and Potter Palmer, in Chicago, but no increased endowment list of the university was noticed.

Then an order came for retrenchment at the university, and this part of the programme was carried out. Even this did not suffice. Times became harder, and students were unable to pay their tuition fees, and this alone made a deficit of $48,000 last year. Investment proved unprofitable, and the general hard times made matters worse. The budget called for nearly $700,000, and the income for the last year was a little more than $400,000. This disgusted Dr. Harper, and he gave notice that it would be futile for him to try to conduct the university on the lines originally laid down. The announcement came as a thunderbolt to his friends, and it was the first time in communicating the fact to Mr. Rockefeller. Then F. T. Gates, Mr. Rockefeller's private secretary appeared, and the visit brought sunshine to the institution. The message was simple and to the point, characteristic of the millionaire. In substance, it was that Dr. Harper would reconsider his determination the University of Chicago would not in the future be hampered for funds.

The institution that now starts out as a new era is already one of the largest endowed universities in the world. John D. Rockefeller has given it about $8,000,000, and other gifts make the total about $13,000,000. In spite of the large sums of money donated to the university, it has been unable to respond to the continued demands. The ambition of President Harper is boundless, and he has deemed nothing impossible for consummation.

Some of the endowments are nonproductive, owing to conditions imposed by the donors, and the university actually pays five per cent interest on the cost of a building that serves for one of the undergraduate dormitories. On the good faith promises of Mr. Rockefeller to carry out the ideas of President Harper, the millionaire of Pantytown virtually pledges himself to further contribute not less than $10,000,000.

Thought Himself to Death.

The peculiar case of a man thinking himself to death came under the notice of a Coroner's jury recently. A Dr. Richardson sustained injuries by a fall from his bicycle a short time ago, but none of a serious nature, so far as could be determined. Under the care of a brother physician he was progressing favorably, and seemed on the way to a speedy recovery. But a few days later he said to the doctor: "I know I am going to die of tetanus set in Sunday" (just a week after). As there was no indication of that disease there was no attempt to disabuse his mind of the idea, but he insisted on being treated with antitoxin. On the following Thursday trismus had developed, and on Sunday Dr. Richardson died from the effects of this terrible disease. Probably there never was a clearer instance of the disease-producing power of imagination than this.—Chicago Times-Herald.

READY-TO-WEAR CLOTHING.

A Young Industry which has Rapidly Increased—Fair Profits for Merchant.

The popularity and sale of ready-made, or "ready-to-wear," clothing, as the merchants now prefer to call it, has greatly increased in the last eight or ten years, according to good authorities. The cause is not hard to find. It is due to the better care exercised in the making up and the style of the goods. More pains are taken to make up the clothing in good style, and in such varieties of shapes and sizes, that it is rarely that a man cannot be fitted, and where alteration is necessary it is no more than a custom-made suit usually needs. A man may decide some morning that his cutaway is a little shabby, and, as he may be going out that evening, he requires something better. It is only necessary to visit some of the clothing houses in New York city to find just what he wants, at almost any price, try it on, and have it sent home during the day; any necessary alteration is made in the course of a few hours, and he can comfortably pass the evening, confident that his appearance is all that can be desired.

The cost and profits of the business make interesting reading. The fancy suit, everything except plain black, which retails for $15, is sold at wholesale for about $11. In small towns and out-of-the-way places, the retailer puts the price at whatever he thinks he can get, but in the larger places the profits are practically the same in the reliable stores. In addition there is a discount of from 7 to 8 per cent. allowed by the wholesale dealer, which the retailer seldom fails to take advantage of.

The manufacturer's profit is, as a rule, about 15 per cent. It requires three and a fourth yards of cloth for a suit, which, at $3.75 per yard, makes the cost of the cloth $4.87½. The cutters are paid on an average $20 a week, and it is estimated that the cutting of a sack suit costs the manufacturer 35 cents. For making up the suit they pay 40 cents the coat and 60 cents each for trousers and vest—$2 for the suit. The linings, buttons, canvas, padding, silk, stay-tape, &c., cost about $1.50 more. These items cannot be figured exactly, as they vary with different suits, being much cheaper for cheap suits. The manufacturers purchase black buttons, linings, &c., in large quantities, and get them proportionately cheaper, whereas, for brown, gray, or other fancy suits, the buttons and trimmings must match the cloth, and the great variety of shades necessarily limits the quantity purchased. This makes the suit that the manufacturer sells for $11 cost him about $8.72½, and leaves him a profit of $2.27½, not including the discounts allowed to the retail merchant.

POSITION OF FRENCH WIVES.

It is Dignified and that of a Comrade and Intimate.

French women have a loyal champion in Mrs. Crawford, the brilliant and well-known journalist, who, having lived amongst them for a period extending over thirty years, should know something about their characteristics. To quote her own words in speaking of French women: "They occupy a very dignified position, and the wife is more the comrade of her husband than in England. In the higher circles she takes the social place held by her grace and tact, and if she has special culture and aptitude she forms a salon, and becomes a great power. In business the wife is frequently the dominant partner; she studies the markets, secures customers and invests money. Mme. Thiers afford very poignantly remarks that "although the influence of women upon politics is more indirect than it is in England, since they do not come on to the political platform, yet, as the first Napoleon discovered, they direct men how to act.

Sight Said to be Restored by Prayer.

The story comes from Anderson, Ind.: The Rev. Charles Morton, the evangelist, who has been totally blind as the result of a fall, was divinely healed. Dr. G. N. Eldridge, pastor of the M. E. Church, and wife, and Mr. Morton spent the entire day in fasting and prayer. Late in the evening they were joined by Mines. Andrew and Finnegan and T. N. Sublwell, and all united in prayer. After reading the following passages in the Bible, James v., 14th, 15th, and 20th verses; Mark xi., 24. Dr. Eldridge anointed Mr. Morton with oil, and then, with silent prayer, the healing was claimed and the miracle wrought. Mr. Morton appeared in the M. E. Church Sunday and told the story of his healing. The event created intense emotion, and crowds lingered in the church until a late hour.

She Mistook Him.

It is not every great man who carries his honors as meekly as the Mayor of Inverness, who rebuked an admiring crowd in the words: "Fr'ens, I'm just a mortal man like yerself." Sir Wilfred Lawson tells the following story: "A woman was once pursuing her fugative cow down a lane, when she called out to some one in front: 'Man, turn my cow.' The man took no notice and allowed the cow to pass. When she came up she said: 'Man, why did you not turn my cow?' He replied: 'Woman, I am not a man; I am a magistrate.'"—Household Words.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Scarcely had the fever of excitement over Sir Julian Pauncefote's place in the Grant parade began to subside, and the pulse of the great capital to temporarily keep time, before polite society was thrown into violent hysterics over the McCook-Logan squabble. The fuss originated a little over a year ago at Moscow on the occasion of the Czar's coronations, and, like the Sir Julian episode, involves a question of diplomacy. It appears that at the coronation festivities there was a great multitude, which no man could number, from this side of the sea, and all of them were determined to witness the coronation of the Czar or die in the attempt.

Gen. Alexander McDowell McCook represented the United States army at the coronation, and Commodore Selfridge the navy. Col. John J. McCook was there also as his brother's aid, a kind of official alter ego, as it were. Mrs. John A. Logan was there chaperoning a string of American heiresses, and John A. Logan, Jr., who would have been a great deal more for these weak, piping times of peace, was there also. Young Logan inherits a warlike spirit from both sides of the house. It has frequently been said of Mrs. Logan, "She was born to command."

Now at Moscow Mrs. Logan had formed the high resolution that she and her son John should be received as the most distinguished Americans present at the coronation, and to win Mrs. Logan to resolve was to act. Her son, to be sure, had never seen active service, but her son's father had been a soldier, and her son would have been if he had had the chance.

The highest military rank to which John, Jr., was entitled on his own account was that of Captain on the staff of Gov. Bushnell of Ohio. He had done his state and country gallant service in that capacity, and then, too, when in his own achievements were added those of his father, which were his by inheritance, there were not many in the country that could outrank him.

Mrs. Logan, resplendently handsome and commanding figure was Mrs. Logan, as she swept into the ante-room, where the American guests had assembled in order to arrange the order of their entrance into the main hall of the Czar's palace. Mrs. Logan, Miss Logan, Miss Breckinridge, and Mrs. Breckinridge were to lead the procession, followed by Commodore Selfredge, Gen. and Mrs. Alexander McD. McCook, Col. John J. McCook and daughter, and Capt. Logan and the various staff attaches of the American Legation. Following them were to come the unofficial guests, but to the amazement of all the assembled Americans, before the line had been arranged, Mrs. Logan was announced by name, and taking the arm of her handsome son led the way into the reception room. They were followed by an imposing array of American heiresses in magnificent costumes, splendid jewels and gorgeous trains. Others, who did not know exactly what to do, but presumed it would be right to follow Mrs. Logan, filed in and found seats. As the Logans advanced they were greeted on all sides with great cordiality, and the gorgeous Capitain in uniform, with its multitudinous decorations, was the conspicuous feature of the distinguished assembly.

In the meantime poor Mr. Breckinridge, the American Minister, stood in his knickerbockers dumb with amusement and chagrin. Gen. McCook was bursting with indignation. Rumor hath it that Gen. McCook was so enraged at the proceedings of the Logans, that only the fact that he would have young John arrested and put into a strait-jacket. Mrs. Potter Palmer was there, along with the rest, and she told Mrs. Logan that the McCooks were saying dreadful things about her and her son, and Mrs. Logan declared that Gen. McCook was only mad because her son John was a better figure than his brother John. Finally there was a meeting between the two belligerent houses, and after a good deal of criminations and recriminations they agreed to drop the whole matter.

But the cat came back, and found its way into President McKinley's official chamber as he sat wrestling with the cabinet over a foreign portfolio, and mewed out the whole story. The cat says that you could have knocked the President down with a feather when he heard it, he was so taken aback, and that he said he would never appoint a second Minister to Austria.

Of course, I don't know whether the cat told the truth or not, but certain it is that John A. Logan, Jr., heard about it, and he forthwith put a chip on his shoulder and dared any of the McCooks to knock it off. Mrs. Logan also took up the cudgels for her son, got herself interviewed in all the papers, and, according to many people, said a number of things. And it is said here in Washington that there were certainly charges and counter-charges on file at the War Department.

NEW YORK LETTER.

The appearance of A Oakey Hall as counsel for Commander Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army, naturally recalls the time when Mr. Hall was a prominent figure in the New York courts. Before he became Mayor in 1869 he served for a number of years as District Attorney, and was consequently one of the best public prosecutors the city ever had. He appeared in many famous trials. Of his career as Mayor nothing need be said here.

Since ended Mr. Hall's public career, and since 1873 he has led a varied existence, sometimes practising law, at other times actively engaged in newspaper work, once attempting but failing in the theatrical profession, for a long time living in London, but now again in his old home and former business, although still engaged more or less in journalism and writing short stories for evening newspapers. His career, at one time, promised the greatest brilliancy. He is, I believe, without one exception, the oldest living ex-Mayor.

The Chicago Dude's Advent.

J. Waldere Kirk's descent on New York with an assortment of trunks filled with "pants" and "vests" and other Chicago-made clothes suggests the almost unnoticed death of the word "dude," which has been revived for Mr. Kirk's special benefit and as a mark of appreciation for his sartorial display. The word came into the English language at about the time that some of the disciples of aestheticism in England were carrying out their theories in their clothes, and in a few months every New York man who dressed well according to the fashions of the day was a "dude." These fashions were extreme. They dictated trousers that were uncomfortably tight and shoes that faded away to a sharp point. Even men who wanted to dress well and were known to be able to dress as they chose strove for eccentricities. Had Mr. Kirk arrived in New York eight or nine years ago he might not have been conspicuous. He came out of the West at that number of years too late if he is really honest in his expressed purpose of showing New Yorkers how they should dress. The "dude" now is a thing of the stage, the past or the West, so far as New York is concerned. The best dressed men in town are those whose clothes are the least conspicuous, and Mr. Kirk will find little sympathy with his eccentricities in "pants" and "vests." As an agitator of public interest, he was more successful. He crowned the man who invented milk baths for actresses, and it would be manifestly unfair to rank him with the balloonists of yellow journalism.

The Old Tombs.

The destruction of the old Tombs building, will remove a building that has been pronounced to be one of New York's examples of consistent architecture, so far as its exterior is concerned. The general effect of the building has been spoiled in recent years by the additions that were made necessary to provide more cells.

"You have just seen examples of architecture in this city that I admire immensely," said a well-known artist several years ago. "They are the City Hall, the Tombs prison, and the old reservoir at Forty-second Street and Fifth avenue. Each is perfect in its way."

There is no prison in the United States, not even excepting Sing Sing, that is better known than the old Tombs. It has figured for many years in New York history and in American fiction. The prison yard was the scene of many executions, and not a few sensational escapes were made made from the prison itself.

Politicians Caricatured.

If the politicians were so sensitive to the newspaper cartoons as to propose enacting a bill to prohibit them what must be their sensations when they are caricatured by actors on the stage? In "A Round of Pleasure" Walter Jones, in a clever make-up, appears as Senator Platt in the role of Iago, and it is ludicrous, indeed, to see this representation of the celebrated boss dancing a jig on the stage. Another comedian caricatures Mark Hanna. Still another intentionally or unconsciously takes out like Secretary Cornelius N. Bliss, and as in one of his scenes he appears in a state of mild intoxication, the incongruous, though humorous, effect may be easily imagined. The names of Grover Cleveland, Chauncey M. Depew and other prominent men are freely used in puns and jokes. This is the price these men have to pay for the fame they enjoy.

THE NIGHTINGALE.

The Bird is Not Shy, and Its Song is Not Chiefly Reserved for the Night.

The nightinggale does not sing everywhere, yet it is as great a mistake to consider the bird shy as to imagine its song is chiefly reserved for the night. He will sing continually from one of the oaks bordering the wayside while the village folks pass and repass. The village couples may rest upon the footstile or linger to listen beneath the very tree which the bird has stationed. Still the full burden of melody goes on unchecked, without pause or intermission. And what a glorious outburst is! What a perfect cascade of trills and shakes and semi-quavers. Suddenly it is pierced by a single note that shivers in the ear with the sharpness of a rifle. Immediately after comes the wondrous water bubble, to be followed by a delicious warble, long drawn out and soft as could be breathed from the richest flute. Another unexpected trill, and then a far-off sound that almost seems to come from another songster half a mile away, serves to throw into relief the passionate tremulo issuing from the nightingale's throat, and all the time the wings are quivering with excitement, and the whole coppice seems to vibrate. The song is, indeed, a whole orchestra of bird music. Expressive if every shade of ecstacy, with at times the plaintive expression of deep, plaintive tones that thrill like sobs. No wonder the nightingale's singing season is brief—six weeks only of the entire year. Nay, it is doubtful whether any individual bird sings for the long period named. The reviving, another fine singer, is a similar instance of the limited period of song. Its voice in this country is confined to two notes, and these by no means musical. Yet the redwing is the nightingale of Norway, to which the terms for breeding purposes each succeeding April. So with our nightingale. From the day the eggs are hatched he becomes gradually silent, until of the marvelous voice that stirred a mile of woodland, naught is heard save a dismal croak, hardly to be distinguished from the coarse cry of the bullfrog.—St. James Gazette.

LIKE THE SIAMESE TWINS.

Two Little Girls That are Bound by a Similar Tie.

A new pair of twins rivalling the Siamese twins which Barnum made famous a generation ago, has been discovered. They are known as the Orissa twins, and are joined to each other in a manner resembling the ties uniting Siamese twins.

As objects of popular interest they are infinitely more attractive than the Siamese twins ever were. Chang and Eng were males, ugly enough to stop clocks, rather sullen in temper, and about as lovable as lumpfish. Their looks against the created order of things. But these charming little girls seem to find existence all a summer day, full of delight. They were born in the most poverty-stricken, down-trodden and hopelessly miserable class of India—the pariahs. Orthodox Brahmins affect to prove out of the Vedas that neither women nor pariahs have souls, and that it is unlawful for this wretched caste—whose touch is contamination—even listen to the reading of the sacred law.

They were born on September 19, 1889, in the hamlet of No-ah-parra, in the province of Orissa, British India. Their father was an ignorant man, who knew nothing of the market value of the freaks, and so superstitious that he saw a manifestation of the evil one in everything out of the common run of his experiences, in which he was by no means unique, some very good people, entertain the same intellectual hallucination of that way of thinking. He began cutting the infants apart, as a scar upon their ligament still evidences, but was stayed by his neighbors, and the little ones became a source of revenue to the proprietor of the homestead temple of Jagernath, at Puree, who made an exhibition of them.—Chicago Times Herald.

A LIVING KITE.

Experiment to Determine the Effect of Wind Upon a Soaring Machine.

In France a living kite has been seen in which a man formed a part. It was in the course of a series of experiments to determine the effect of wind upon a soaring machine. A gigantic kite had been made, on the face of which a man stood, his feet wide apart, and resting upon braces for the purpose, while with his hands he clasped the straps of the framework two feet high and made of cloth. The first attempt to fly it was made on an exposed section of the coast, where the wind blew in over a lake. A large parachute was attached to the frame of the kite, so that the man would not be injured by falling in case of a fall. Everything being ready, the kite was braced against the wind the man took his place, and fifty men ran against the wind with the rope, many more holding the tail. The wind caught the enormous surface, and amid loud cheers from the spectators, the man rose ten feet from the surface and there remained, held by the men at the tail. Slowly the latter released the rope, and the kite rose higher and higher beyond question that a man could ascend in this fashion. It was such a hazardous and uncertain experiment that a very high flight was not attempted.—New York Sun.

YARNS OF ARMY LIFE.

FAITHFULNESS OF FORAGER BOSE TO HIS MASTER.

Queer Advent of a Baby In Camp—Its Place in the Hearts of the Men, and the Honors Paid It at the Departure of the Soldiers for the Kentucky Campaign.

Jack adopted the dog in our very first campaign, and before a month he was as important a member of the company as though he had been sworn into the service and carried a rifle. Jack was a great forager, and his dog Bose was the best catcher of chickens in Dixie. His experness in this particular made him a great favorite, and as he always brought the captured fowls and laid them at Jack's feet, he made his master the dispenser of patronage.

We lost him at times in the marches through Kentucky and Tennessee, but after a skirmish he would come into camp as good as new.

No one knew just what became of him when a battle opened. The firing sent him skulking to the rear, or to some place remote from the noise; but on one occasion there was a night attack, and the men were pretty well scattered. When the roll was called in the morning Jack and Bose were missing. Every one thought that the dog had run away as usual, and that Jack had probably been killed. An hour later Bose came limping on three legs to where the arms were stacked, and the boys began to talk to him about Jack. Very much to their surprise he nosed around the camp until he found Jack's haversack, and, taking it up, made a break into the woods.

Two or three of the men started after him, and after a wild chase they found Jack, severely wounded, confidently waiting for Bose to return. He was carried into camp, Bost trotting along with an air of one who had performed a sacred duty, and was taken to the hospital. Bose remained at his bedside through a long siege, and came out more attached to him than ever. After that Bose was at Jack's heels in battle and out of battle, and kept up his reputation until Jack was discharged on account of his wounds, and dog and man went home together.

"One day there came down the road something creeping, making a great dust and stopping at odd times to take observations. As it came nearer the men saw that it was a bare-footed, curly-headed baby. They all started toward it, and some of the men who had left little ones at home took it up, brushed the dust from the little bare feet and cuddled it in their arms, passing it from one to another. The baby was evidently greatly astonished, but was inclined to be sociable.

"The question was, where it came from. There was a little house in the cove, but it was deserted. The boys made the best of the situation; shook the dust from the children. The little hands and feet and face and head installed the baby at the head of their improvised dinner table, when a woman's scream down at the little house attracted attention. The baby showed its mouth full of screams, and the men, and finally it was discovered that the mother of the baby was looking for it. She was brought to where the little fellow was sitting on a cracker box, eating bread and molasses, and as fast as she could get to the two sticky little hands and shouted 'Mammie.' It appeared that all the family had taken to the mountains when they heard of the approach of the troops, and that the mother supposed that one of her daughters had taken the baby, and the daughter supposed the mother had taken it, when, as a matter of fact, it had been left sleeping in the corner of a room. Awaking and finding no one to comfort it, it had started out toward the nearest house and had literally crept into camp and among friends.

"After that the baby was in camp nearly every day, for it so happened that the regiment remained for months where it bivouacked that morning. When the time came to break camp and to go southward into Kentucky and Tennessee there was great grieving over leaving the pet of the regiment, and when the company, marching out, passed the little cove, the colors were lowered and hats went up, not to the General or to the Colonel, but to little Goo-Goo, who rested in his mother's arms."

A PARIS SUGGESTION.

THE ENDEAVOR RUNS OFF

BICYCLING CHRISTIANS TO TAKE A HOT WEATHER VACATION.

The Oppressive Heat, and Many of the Enthusiasts Out of Town, Has Caused Capt. Ernestine Smith to Postpone Their Run.

The success of the Christian Endeavor bicycle squad, which was inaugerated in this city last spring, has been apparent. Two runs have been held, and, although on both occasions, storms threatened, and kept many of the would-be wheeling Endeavorers at home, the attendance was very good considering the circumstances. Everybody was delighted with the success of the scheme of visiting the neighboring societies awheel.

The arrangement of the runs has been left in the hands of Miss Ernestine Smith, with the privilege of selecting such assistance as she may find necessary. Miss Smith has shown her talent in arranging and commanding the first two efforts of the cycle squad. While it was first thought advisable to hold the runs throughout the summer, Miss Smith has decided to postpone the next one until late in the fall. All the Endeavor societies are rather broken up at the present time by the departure of so many of the members on their summer vacations. Such will be the case through the summer months and Miss Smith has decided that it would not be advisable to attempt another run until the summer vacation time is over.

The destination of the next run is still a matter of doubt. A very earnest invitation has been extended by the society connected with the Seventh-Day Baptist church in New Market to have the cycle squad pay them a visit and it will be accepted for one of the fall runs. Another urgent invitation comes from the Endeavorers of the Wilson Memorial chapel at Washingtonville. Miss Smith and a party of friends visited the place the other day to learn the condition of the roads for wheeling and they found that the cycling Endeavorers will have no trouble in reaching the chapel in good weather.

While the Christian Endeavor Society at the Willow Grove chapel is not a member of the Local Union, the members are quite anxious that the Plainfield Endeavorers should come there awheel. Willow Grove is a small settlement back of Westfield, between that place and the Springfield road. There is a flourishing Endeavor Society there. Miss Smith hopes to be able to accept that invitation also and pay the Willow Groveites a visit this fall.

DECLINES TO BE A SUBORDINATE.

Former Deputy Marshal Yard Out of Office.

The office of United States Marshal for the District of New Jersey has been without a regularly-appointed office deputy for the past week because of the refusal of Emory N. Yard, who has held the position for the past eight years, to continue in the office with the title of clerk and surrendering the title of office deputy to Marshal Alcott's son. The Marshal resides in Mount Holly, where he is engaged in business, and, in order to keep in touch with the office without frequent visits to Trenton, he expressed to Mr. Yard his desire to make his son, Howard, office deputy, but said that he would pay his son out of his own pocket and devote the office deputy's salary to the payment of clerical assistance. He wanted Mr. Yard to remain and serve in a clerical capacity, and sought to arrange the terms.

Mr. Yard refused to make any terms, and at the close of the day's business on Thursday last left the office and has not since returned.

GOOD WOMEN CLEARED.

NO SUSPICION RESTS AGAINST MRS. WADSWORTH OR MISS WOODHOUSE.

The Course of the Daily Press in Refusing to Publish the Unfounded Accusations Against them is Applauded by Good Citizens

A sensational case, involving the good name of a prominent physician of this city and the good name of two women, has been before the Chancery Court at Newark for the last three weeks.

Sensational newspapers have gloated over the details and published indecent matter over offensive head lines. The Press has pursued a course which has received emphatic and universal approval of the moral classes of this community. The details were not printed, because they were not fit to print. Plainfielders knew Mrs. Wadsworth and Miss Woodhouse to be true women. Mrs. Wadsworth is a loving wife whose whole life has been noble, whether in refined society, of which she was an honored member, in the numerous charitable or literary associations with which she was connected, in the church or in the home.

Those who knew them have never doubted that they would in the end receive complete vindication from the court, That vindication was pronounced from the bench by the Vice Chancellor Monday night.

When Craig A. Marsh, counsel for Dr. Endicott, announced that he rested his case, Vice-Chancellor Stevens said that Mrs. Endicott had entirely failed to make out a case against Mrs. Wadsworth or Miss Woodhouse. He had felt that when she had rested her case, and now that the evidence for the defense was in, there did not rest a suspicion that either Mrs. Wadsworth or Miss Woodhouse were guilty of any of the charges made against them. He said he made this statement so that Mr. McCarter, the counsel of Mrs. Endicott, might, if he saw fit, after learning the mind of the court, shorten the case by confining the further evidence to the cases of the other persons charged. After conferring with his client, Mr. McCarter stated that in view of what the court had said, he would drop the charges against Mrs. Wadsworth and they would no longer figure in the case.

Every good man and woman in Plainfield will rejoice at this prompt and complete vindication of Mrs. Wadsworth by the court and the concurrence therein of even the lawyer who had been trying to find evidence against her.

A CORNER IN ONYX.

New Jersey's Congressman Has a Shrewd Eye to Business.

A special dispatch to a western paper, from Phœnix, Arizona, says: "The eastern company, headed by Congressman Charles N. Fowler, of New Jersey, that lately purchased the famous O'Neil onyx mine, eighty miles north of Phœnix, has had a large force of men at work rushing operations in anticipation of added demand through the operation of the new tariff law, which places a prohibitory duty on Mexican onyx. Within the week a discovery has been made of a depth never before attained of a broad stratum of onyx, of exceptional beauty, and of the highest value. The owners are conferring with the Sante Fe Railway for a branch road from Prescott."

There is no finer onyx in the world than that found in Arizona, but the Mexican article has been generally used because it is quarried with Mexican cheap labor, and consequently could be delivered even in the western cities at a less cost than the home product.

AROUND THE BASES.

The Stelton Athletic Club will play here again on Sept. 4th. They may run against a little surprise party when they come again.

Corbin will be back on first base for the Crescents Saturday. If he had been there last week the game with the Steltons might have had a different ending. It is too late to think about that now.

Tall Bill Sneeden made a great reputation for himself as a pitcher in Plainfield in the years gone by. Some of his old team mates are now in the National League, playing great ball, but Bill has given up the business, and is now the driver of an ice wagon on Staten Island.

There is one thing in which the Crescents are lacking and that is good coaching. Through injudicious coaching Vroom was twice put out on Saturday, while the glowing superlatives that floated forth from the Stelton men who were on the lines was in striking contrast to the almost silent coaching of the Crescents.

There used to be no more enthusiastic rooter on the field than Whit Frazee, the package expressman. Whit is out again this year and is rooting for the Crescents as in the days of old. He had an able assistant last week in "Corky" Goodwin, whose long drawn groans were enough to dishearten a more enthusiastic aggregation than the Steltons. It was too bad that they did not begin at the start of the game.

Do you remember the days of the famous West Ends of Somerville, when John Harkins used to smile at the old Crescent batters as they came before him, one after another? Harkins was perhaps the most popular and yet in a way the most disliked of all the out-of-town players that ever came to Plainfield. Moorehead, the wonderful shortstop, was another of the same kind. Every baseball crank in the city would walk five miles to see John play, and when they got there they would root and yell at him like a pack of wild Indians. Every game between the Crescents and the West Ends was almost sure to have a fight to end with. The excitement sometimes ran so high that the crowd wanted to have a hand in the game. Next Saturday a real representative team from Plainfield will make its first appearance in Somerville since those days when the West Ends was the leading club in the Somerset county seat. Next Saturday afternoon the Crescents from this city will meet the Somersets from Somerville on the grounds of the latter team. Somerville is now giving her support to the Somersets as her leading team, and her citizens turn out to the games in full force.

TENNIS.

The finals in the tennis tournament of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club were completed, last Saturday afternoon. When the tournament stopped on July 5th, Albert Price Simmonds was ahead in the finals, having won two sets and lost one. His opponent was Henry V. Ryder. The match was completed Saturday when Ryder won the first two sets, winning the tournament. The scores for the last two games were 9-7 and 6-3. The first prize was a pair of silver mounted hair brushes. The prize for the runner-up was a pair of gold cuff buttons.

PASSING COMMENT.

The Plainfield Sanitary company have on exhibition in the plumbing store of George H. Tobin, on North avenue, photographs of the ash carts that are to be used in the service of the company when their garbage crematory is put in operation. The carts have covered boxes so as to obviate the disagreeable condition of affairs that now exist with the rickety old ash wagons, whose boxes are veritable selves, in scattering refuse all along the streets that they traverse. They are mechanically arranged so as to be easy to dump, and their appearance on the streets will add another metropolitan phase to Plainfield life and activity.

William England, who was known in this city, and was the owner of the property at 229 233 West Front street, died in Brooklyn last Tuesday, since which time his widow, from whom he had been separated for twenty years, and his housekeeper, who has shared his big white house with him for over seventeen years, have been fighting fiercely over the disposition of his body. Already there have been one or two scenes between the women that have shocked the neighborhood. The housekeeper triumphed at last and had the body conveyed to the cemetery and interred while three constables stood guard to prevent an interference from the wife. Mrs. Edwards and her children now threaten to apply to the courts for permission to disinter the body. The dead man's fortune is estimated at about $60,000, and his will has not yet been filed.

The three men met by chance at a local soda fater fountain, one evening last week, and while they enjoyed the cooling beverages they chatted on current topics of interest.

"Where's the band concerts?" asked the poor but respectable machinist. "I thought they were to be held this summer as they were last."

"No," was the reply of the commuter, "Councilman Frost was behind the movement, last year, and raised the money himself. It was no easy job and no one cared to help him, although they liked the concerts. It's a chance for you fellows," he said, turning to the local business man, "To start a subscription and raise the money for the concerts this summer."

"That's just the way with you people," retorted the business man from Plainfield. "You expect us to start every movement and support it just because we are in Plainfield all day, and so you say we have more time. We got up the Fourth of July celebration several years ago. Last year, we got up the bicycle parade and raised most of the money for it. We are willing to bear our share of the burden but why don't you who go down in the club car every day, start the subscription and give the people of Plainfield something to do on these warm summer nights."

"I tell you, we miss those concerts," said the machinist, "for to many of us, it was the only thing of the kind we heard all summer. In these hard times there are but few of us who can afford to go to a concert every week or every month for that matter

SAY IT IS A NUISANCE.

DUNELLENITES TO PROCEED AGAINST OPERATION OF SEWER FARM.

Mrs. Milliken Claims That It Has Ruined Her Boarding House and Isaac Stites Also Claims Lower Land Valuations

Of late very little has been said by Dunellenites concerning the Plainfield sewer farm as regards it being a nuisance. The fact of an intended nuisance action against the city of Plainfield has been kept very quiet, but the news has leaked out and it now looks as though Plainfield will have a suit to defend before a great while.

The action has been started by Mrs. Milliken, who, until this year, kept a large family of summer boarders not far from where the farm is located. Last year the farm was not completed and was not put in use until late in the fall when cold weather set in, but with this year's warm weather the stench from the farm is said to be noticeable to people living close to the farm. Mrs. Milliken has been unable to get her boarders to return this year as usual, and she has in consequence suffered a great loss, financially.

It is said that she has engaged a lawyer and is now prepared to prove that the sewer farm is a nuisance. If such is the case she will have no trouble in getting a hearing before a Justice. It is understood that Mrs. Milliken, together with other nearby residents, will combine in united action against the city of Plainfield.

A Daily Press reporter saw Isaac Stites Tuesday afternoon regarding the matter. Mr. Stites owns a place about a half mile from the farm, and he was loud in his declarations against the latter. He said that not until this year had he ever experienced chills and fever, and at times he says that the smell from the farm is rank. He is now willing to sell his place for $800 less than he would have before the farm was located where it is. He considers that a great deal of the money he was obliged to work hard for over an atom is now at stake.

The Craig family live close to the farm and it is understood that they are decided about combining with the others in an united action. Nearly all of the people living within a reasonable distance of the farm claim to have been more or less affected by the odor from the beds, and they feel determined to have the beds abolished, if possible. They do not consider that the question of money figures large in the action, for they feel sure they can prove the beds are a nuisance and that the court will give them a fair show.

It was reported recently that several Dunellenites engaged an expert to make a thorough investigation of the beds, and that he gave as his opinion that they are unhealthy. However, the outcome of the action will be watched with interest by both Plainfield and Dunellen people

Brunswick Claims a Victory.

The officials of the Brunswick Traction Company have won another point in the trolley war for franchises from New Brunswick to Bound Brook. Chief Justice Magie has denied the motion of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company to set aside the writ of certiorari brought by William Schure, of Bound Brook, against that company, refusing to set aside the writ or to vacate the stay. This leaves the certiorari before the Supreme Court to be decided on its merits. This is practically a victory for the Brunswick Traction Company.

Elizabeth Potteries to Resume Work.

It was announced Tuesday that the potteries in Elizabeth would resume operations tomorrow, when the men will be put to work on full time. The potteries have been practically closed for two months and have not worked full time in over a year. At the Elizabeth Pottery Company's plant a new style of ware will be manufactured in competition with a foreign grade. This competition, it is said, will be made possible by the new tariff rates.

Dished a Wheel.

One of the cold storage ice-wagons dished a front wheel on Front street, opposite the Dime Savings Bank, Tuesday afternoon about 5 o'clock, and delayed travel on street railway for a little time, and an express wagon with children's wagons had a similar misfortune happen to one of the hind wheels of the vehicle, on Watchung avenue, opposite North avenue, at about the same hour. Both were the result of trying to get out of the car tracks.

CUPID ALMOST FOILED.

YOUNG MAN RELEASED IN CITY COURT TO GO TO HYMEN'S ALTAR.

The Groom to be Had been Looking for Work When He Fell Into the Hands of the Police on His Way Back to His Home.

Three boys went forth from New York several days ago to look for work. They traveled by coal trains toward Philadelphia, had an encounter with tramps who robbed one of the young men of his hat, and finally started for home to enable one of their number to celebrate his twenty-first birthday and his wedding. Then the Plainfield police spoiled all their calculations by arresting the trio and locking them up.

Patrolmen Watson and McCarty raided a train of freight cars at the North avenue station at an early hour Wednesday and aroused three sleepy forms, which were stretched out in the bottom of an empty car. The sorrowful young men were marched over to the city lock-up, where they spent the night.

Wednesday, the three were arraigned before the City Judge on the charge of trespassing on the cars of the Jersey Central Railroad. They gave their names as Washington Harman, twenty years, Leon Luenthal, seventeen years and James Stevens, nineteen years. They were fairly well-dressed and a glance at them showed that they were not of the ordinary class of "coal commuters."

Harman acted as spokesman of the party and told their story. They had all been living in New York, but the times had been hard and they had all lost their jobs. They had searched for others in vain and then decided to make a pilgrimage to Philadelphia to look for a position there. They had gone by the Pennsylvania and had ridden on freight trains to save their money. At Norristown, they had fallen in with a party of "Knights of the Road" who threatened to put them off the train and had robbed Luenthal of his hat. After a skirmish, the trio had retreated in good order and finally reached Philadelphia.

Then Herman confidentially told the Judge that Thursday was his twenty-first birthday and that he had also planned that it should be his wedding day. He had hoped to get a job with salary sufficient to support himself and wife in Philadelphia, but as he could not they hurried home to be there on time, anyway. Then they had been arrested.

The Judge could not help sympathizing with the unfortunate prisoner, and so he suspended sentence on the trio and wished the would-be groom good luck.

With smiling faces the three departed toward the depot and waved a farewell to the Judge and Chief Grant.

WET FOR EXCURSIONISTS

ASBURY PARK WAS NOT A PLEASANT PLACE TUESDAY.

The Most Enjoyable Attraction Was Bathing in the Surf—On the Return a Number of Boys Were Soaked by Water.

Tuesday was not a remarkably successful day for the 300 excursionists that went to Asbury Park on the excursion of the First M. E church of this city and the Dunellen M. E church. The rain threatened when the train started from this city at 8 o'clock, but the clouds broke away and a nice day was promised. Soon after 10 o'clock, however, the rain began to fall at Asbury Park and continued most of the afternoon. Late in the afternoon, the sun came out again and the excursionists reached the train without a wetting, but another shower started as soon as the train left and continued until the excursionists reached Plainfield when it held off long enough to allow them to reach their homes without another wetting.

There were comparatively few people at the shore, but the water was delightful and many of the excursionists spent most of the day in the surf. The rain prevented many of the usual pleasures and many of the visitors spent the day sitting about the pavilions.

Several young men from this city road down on their wheels and returned on the excursion train. They found the roads in a terrible condition. Wheels and riders were covered with mud.

When the excursion train started for home, several of the young men established themselves on the front platform of the forward car. They did not know that the engine takes water near Long Branch from a tank between the rails. The water came pouring over the tender from the scoop and completely soaked the young men. They beat a hasty retreat into the car amid a general laugh from all who saw what had happened.

LET THERE BE ARC LIGHTS

STRONG ARGUMENTS MADE BY A PLAINFIELD BUSINESS MAN.

The Demands of the Business Men for the Improvement are Justified by the Heavy Proportion of Taxes Which They Pay.

The writer of this paragraph was talking with a well-known Plainfield business man, not many days since, about matters of current interest, and the conversation drifted around to the question of electric arc lights for the business portions of the city. "I am at a loss," said the business man in question, "to account for the action of our Common Council in refusing the petition of the business men for better street lighting. I think that, no matter from what standpoint you contemplate the matter or by what motives you may be moved, the advisability of giving the city arc lights ought to be plainly apparent. Looking at the matter in a purely financial sense, it can be shown that the withholding of the lights is a false sort of economy, because such improvements stimulate investments by outside capital, and thus inevitably raise the tax receipts to a figure which more than compensates for the additional expense of the improvement. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the introduction of arc lights into the business district of the city would be a good paying investment, in dollars and cents. Some people who live in the suburbs, one or two miles from the city, are asking why they cannot have the same improvements which the business district enjoys. I'll answer that question. In the business district the property valuation is possibly $50 a square foot while in the suburbs it is probably not over 10 cents. Now it stands to reason that a portion of the city which pays taxes on an amount of valuation approaching $50 a square foot is entitled to more improvements than a section paying taxes on a valuation of 10 cents a square foot.

"Now as to the cry that the introduction of the arc lights is wanted only by the business men and is intended solely for their benefit, allow me to say that the idea is a mistaken one. The better lighting of the central portion of the city would operate for the general benefit of the community. Most of the business houses close early, so that their trade is not benefited by better lights. The only benefit derived by these merchants would be in increased protection, which cities are in the habit of furnishing in sections where the property valuation is highest. Then there is the improvement which the presence of arc lights would make in the appearance of our streets. Strangers who happen to be in the city after dark will stroll about the business streets and will carry away an impression of the city from what they observe there. Most cities of the size of Plainfield have arc street lights. We don't want to give visitors the impression that this is an unprogressive city if we can avoid doing so. Such an idea might keep many enterprises away from us, and there is a great deal in first impressions, you know."

DEMOCRATS BY THE BROOKSIDE

Somerset Leaders Arranging For a Great Harmony Feast.

The Democratic leaders of the regular organization in Somerset county are in earnest in their endeavors to have a big harmony clam bake on the banks of Green brook at Sebring Mills, six miles from this city, sometime next month. The function will be arranged and carried out in every detail in the hope of uniting the two elements who split the party forces in twain in the last President ial election. In the township elections last spring neither Democratic leader was predominant as silver or gold representatives, and since then the breach caused by the Chicago platform has been lessened more than ever. The spot selected by the ones back of the harmony feast is an ideal one for an outdoor affair of a political nature, being centrally located for all sections of the county, and easy of access. To make it an assured success it is intended to get enough subscriptions from those who will attend at $2 a person to guarantee expenses. With all the party members pulling together shoulder to shoulder belie ve that they have a good chance to elect some of the county officers next fall.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement of Dr. L. G. Newman, son of H. O. Newman, of West Fifth street, to Miss Lillian May Wright, of New York, and daughter of Rev. Clark Wright, is announced. Miss Wright is a very accomplished musician and elocutionist and a graduate of Drew Seminary.

EIGHT-HOUR WORKDAY.

PLAINFIELD EMPLOYERS SAID TO BE READY TO ACCEDE.

A Concerted Effort to Secure Shorter Hours After May 1st, 1898, in the Endeavor to Solve a Labor Problem.

At the meeting of the members of Watchung Lodge, No. 167, International Order of Machinists, held last Tuesday in Red Men's Hall, George H. Warner, Business Agent of District Lodge, No. 15, made an interesting and surprising announcement when he said that the proprietors of the Plainfield machine shops were willing to give their men eight hours a day if they would ask for it. This is just what the machinists have been desirous of, and the statement coming from such a source that the employers stand ready to accede was greeted with much favor.

The chief officers of the lodge are endeavoring by a concerted action to arrange matters and organization so that on May 1st, 1898, they can demand of the employers all over the country the eight-hour day, and in connection with this they will also ask for time and a half for over-time up to 11 o'clock mianight; double time from the latter hour until morning, and double time for Sundays, holidays and Saturday half-holidays. In this way they hope to be able to break up the over-time method, which, they claim, is keeping so many thousands of machinists out of employment.

There was a large number of machinists present at the meeting and the first and most important speaker was Grand Master Machinist James O'Connell, of Chicago, who is making a tour of the country visiting all of the lodges for the purpose of agitating the matter. Mr. O'Connell is thoroughly conversant with the vital interests that are affecting the machinists throughout the country and he gave an instructive talk. He urged greater union among the machinists and stated that it was their only hope to better their condition and live like civilized men. As one man, they could do nothing, but with union they would be in a position to demand that which is due them. He mentioned a factory in Providence, R. I., where for eleven hours every day the men are not allowed to speak to each other; if they do they will lose their position. This eleven hours includes the noon hour also. The condition of affairs, he thought, was about as near to slavery as possible.

Another feature of the speaker's remarks was the selfishness shown by the machinists who have positions and are willing to run two machines, work over-time, and do everything else to get work themselves but are not willing to help their brother who is out of a job. He held that the over-time system and double machine work by one man is killing thousands of good men all over the country.

The next speaker, Mr. Warner, thoroughly aroused the men present as to what they should do. He said that he once had the opinion that the bosses and proprietors were the worst sort of men, but he had since changed his mind and come to the conclusion that it was the machinist who is to blame. He had personally interviewed the proprietors of each of the Plainfield shops and they had informed him that they are willing to abide by the eight hour law if the men would ask for it. They had told him that they thought it useless to bother with the over-time scheme, but that they thought the eight hour law would solve all difficulties.

Judging from what was seen that night it appears that the Plainfield men will strive for stronger organization and will be ready to fall in line for May 1st, 1898, in the concerted movement for the eight hour day.

MESSEROLL'S BARN BURNED.

Good Work Done by the Farmer's Wife and by Rev. George Love.

Awakened by the frantic bellowing of one of his cows yesterday morning, Peter Messeroll, who lives in Piscataway township, discovered that his big barn was in flames. The family hastened out of doors and did all they could to rescue the stock from the burning barn. Three cows and a colt and a pig were gotten out by Mrs. Messeroll, the farmer's wife, at the risk of her life.

Among the neighbors who responded to the cry of "Fire!" was Rev. George Love, of the Baptist church. He did good work in subduing the flames and in getting out the carriages and wagons of the farmer. Three horses in the barn were cut off by the flames and could not be saved.

The barn had lately been stocked with the new hay crop, which was consumed. The loss will amount to several thousand dollars, and there is not much insurance on it. The origin of the fire is unknown.

JAIL FOR BOROUGH ONLY

PERSONS CHARGED WITH STATE OFFENSES CAN'T BE PUT THERE.

Rather Than Take a Prisoner to Somerville for One Night Constable VanHorn Paroled Him—What the Officials Say of It.

A somewhat peculiar state of affairs exists in the borough were prisoners charged with a State offense are not allowed to be incarcerated in the borough lockup except in cases of necessity or where the officials desire to extend the courtesy of their office in that direction. Tuesday night there was an instance of this kind in the arrest of Yost Hortli and Frank Schafer, of Brook avenue, who were charged with assault and battery by Herbert A. Ives, of Arlington avenue. Schafer secured bail that evening, and Hortli was unable to get bail until next morning. It was desired that the latter be confined in the borough lockup over night instead of taking the prisoner to Somerville. The borough officials considered that the hour was not so late but what the prisoner could be taken to the latter place. This matter was reported to Justice Mattison and he paroled the prisoner until this morning when he called at the Justice's office and furnished the necessary $100 bail.

A Daily Press reporter called on Justice Mattison Wednesday a. m., to learn his side of the case. The latter thought that the ruling in the case was a most unusual one, and no reason had been given to him for it. He could have committed Hortli to Somerville last evening but he felt sure that he could secure bail this morning and he did not desire to go to the trouble of sending a constable with the prisoner to Somerville at a late hour, and thought that the borough could extend to him the privilege of the jail for one prisoner over night. However, he allowed the man to go and appear before him next morning, which he did.

Borough Clerk J. K. Arnold informed the reporter that the borough is not supposed to hold prisoners arrested on a state warrant, except when they wish to extend the courtesy. He said the constable had plenty of time to take the prisoner to Somerville, if Justice Mattison desired to hold him.

The arrests were made by Constables Van Horn and Hansen during the early part of the evening and Frank Scafer was able to get Thomas Rutledge as bondsman, while Hortli was obliged to wait until next morning for his bondsmen. Each are under $100 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury next month.

PRIESTS CHASE A THIEF.

WHOLESALE ATTEMPTS AT BURGLARIZING IN METUCHEN.

The Burglar Had the Start of, the Pursuing Reverend Gentlemen and Made His Escape—Six Houses Were Entered.

Two priests at the rectory of St. Francis's Roman Catholic Church at Metuchen, near here, gave a burglar an exciting chase about 2 o'clock Tuesday morning, but as he had the advantage of the start he got away from them. The priests at the rectory were the Rev. J. A. Lawrence, rector of St. Francis's Church, and the Rev. James Cantwell, of Long Branch, who was visiting in Metuchen.

Father Cantwell was awakened by the noise the burglar made in rattling the silverware in the dining room under his sleeping apartment. He called Father Lawrence. They both got up and slipped on their shoes and trousers and laid a plan to trap the burglar. They were descending the stairs cautiously when the burglar heard them and made a break out of the back window through which he had entered.

The priests followed him and saw a tall, slim man, wearing a brown shirt and derby hat, disappearing through the yard. They went after him and chased him for half a mile, but the burglar got away. When the priests returned to the house they found that Father Cantwell had lost a gold watch and chain, but little else had been taken.

Later it was learned that at least six houses had been robbed in the night at Metuchen and the adjoining village of Menlo Park. At the home of Dr. A. C. Hunt a pocketbook containing valuable papers and railroad tickets was stolen and also a sum of money. The burglar discarded the pocketbook on the road and Dr. Hunt was much relieved when he found it.

Jewelry and money were secured at the homes of Samuel Glenfield, H. O. Fowler and Frank Patterson, all of Metuchen, and Thomas Freeman at Menlo Park.

SPIED BY THE VIGILANTS

WESTFIELD CITIZENS DETECT ATTEMPTS TO BURGLARIZE.

The Depredators Said to be a Gang of Six Men—Shots Were Fired at Them But the Marauders Got Off.

The town of Westfield was again visited by burglars at an early hour Wednesday. Attempts were made to enter four houses on South avenue, but the noise made by the burglars awoke the inmates and the marauders were driven away. W. H. Ward, J. D. Glock and J. K. Dunham, whose houses are next to each other, saw the burglars attempting to enter and fired several shots. It is said there were six men in the gang. A short time afterward the home of Mrs. Amelia Randolph, nearby, was approached by the burglars. One of Mrs. Randolph's sons was on guard and shot at the men, who made a hasty retreat. The house of George B. Dickerson on Clark street also received a visit. The reception given the burglars here was warmer one, Mr. Dickerson shooting at them from an upstairs window several times.

On Monday morning two men attempted to force an entrance to a vacant house on Elm street, next to the residence of Andrew A. Smith. Mr. Smith was aroused about 1:30 o'clock by a noise and on looking out saw two men attempting to open a window in the next house. He fired four shots at the burglars, but the fellows made good their escape. It is probable they did not know that the house they were attempting to enter was unoccupied. They had succeeded in prying open the shutters at one of the windows when the noise awoke Mr. Smith.

Tuesday a number of the young men of the town met and organized a vigilance committee to patrol the streets after dark and run the burglars to earth. They met last night to the number of about fifteen and dispersed to different sections of the town where a watch was kept for burglars. It is probably due to the efforts of this vigilance committee that the town was not looted last night, as its members shadowed the burglars and fired at them in several instances when they approached residences. After leaving the houses on South avenue the men started toward another section of the town, evidently intending to renew their operations, but before going far they were challenged by two of the vigilants.

The burglars ran and the young men gave hot chase, but without effecting a capture. Others of the committee saw the gang and in every case gave chase. The burglars evidently found the town too hot a place for them and gave up for the night. The vigilants will be out in extra force tonight. Every part of the town will be patrolled by armed men, and every stranger on the street after 10 o'clock will be required to give an account of himself. Excitement in the town is running very high.

The Township Committee has been inclined of late to take some steps toward protection, and it is possible that this last series of robberies will lead them to take some effective action at their meeting Friday night.

There is also some talk among the citizens of raising funds by subscription and offering a liberal reward for the arrest and conviction of the outlaws.

Wheel of a Truck Gave Way.

A large truck belonging to H. Ferguson, of Newark, and heavily loaded with merchandise, was crossing Watchung avenue at its intersection with North avenue, late Tuesday afternoon, when one of the wheels collapsed throwing the heavy load sidewise into the street. The horses were unhitched and the wagon remained in the street an impediment to travel until a wheelwright was secured to repair the damage.

Justice Neill Dead.

Police Justice George Neill, of Elizabeth, died early Tuesday morning in his sixty-first year. Justice Neill was born in Ireland and came to Elizabeth more than thirty-five years ago. For many years he was a Justice of the Peace. Three years ago he was appointed Judge of the Police Court.

Painful Bee Sting.

Garrett Eick, of East Third street, is suffering with a painful bee sting which happens to be on one of his knees. The bee made a hasty trip inside of the trouser leg and remained just long enough to get in his good work. The knee is very sore and causes much pain.

Quarantine Removed.

Health Inspector Addis Tuesday fumigated the house at 327 West Front street where two cases of scarlet fever existed, after which the yellow card was removed and the quarantine declared to be over.

RODE UNDER MOONLIGHT

PLEASURABLE RUN TAKEN BY THE Y. M. C. A CYCLING CLUB.

New Brunswick Association Was the Destination and Their Members Extended a Welcome That Was Very Hospitable.

If the officers of the Y. M. C. A. Cycling League of Northern New Jersey had had the making of the weather, Thursday, they could not have had a better night for the run of the league associations to New Brunswick. The New Brunswick association has a reputation for hospitality that is well deserved. Last Thursday, it was heightened, if possible, for the New Brunswick boys gave their guest a delightful evening and provided food for the inner and outer man in large quantities.

The Plainfield association had the best representation as regards numbers of any of the visiting associations. There were twenty-two in line from this city under the leadership of C. E. A. Haywood and Walter Long. Among the number was Curtis M. Thorpe, one of the members of the Board of Directors and three of the members of the business men's class.

The party started promptly at 8 o'clock and arrived in New Brunswick a few minutes after 9 o'clock. The Passaic association had the next largest representation. There were about a hundred wheelmen altogether.

A bountiful supply of sandwiches, crackers and cake was provided with plenty of lemonade and ice cream. A string orchestra rendered a number of selections during the evening.

The return was made at 10 o'clock, under the command of Captain T. A. Cuming, who rode over after the rest. No accidents happened to mar the pleasure of the occasion. The run was to be held two weeks ago but has been twice postponed on account of rain.

NO RIGHT TO SELL THE WHEEL.

Sigmund Frucht Must Pay Pauline Sadler $25 Damages.

The trouble between the young colored woman, Miss Pauline Sadler, and Sigmund Frucht, or rather his wife, who conducts the bicycle store at the corner of Park avenue and West Second street, came to an issue in Justice Nash's court. A jury was called to try the case and brought in a verdict for the plaintiff to the amount of $25.

Miss Sadler was represented by City Judge DeMeza and S. S. Swackhamer represented Frucht. The story told by the plaintiff was that she had taken her wheel to Frucht's store one night and looked at his display. Being pleased with one, she left her wheel there while she went home to consult her employer as to the advisability of buying it. He advised her not to and she went after her wheel, which Frucht refused to give up.

He claimed that she had agreed to buy the wheel and had traded her wheel in, so he had sold the latter. He showed a receipt that had been drawn up by M. F. Elderton, of the News staff, at his dictation.

The jury believed the story of the colored woman and granted her $25 damages. The case will be appealed.

Legacy For Soldiers' Monument.

There promises to be a revival of interest in the soldiers' moment that was planted for this city several years ago. A legacy of $200 has been left toward paying for that monument. There is some talk of turning the money over to the local Grand Army post and let that organization take charge of the erection of the monument and the collection of the necessary funds with which to do it.

Judgment Against Wheelmen.

A judgment for $10 and costs was given in favor of the Midmer Glee Club against the Crescent Wheelmen, Thursday afternoon, in a case that came before Justice Nash. The Midmer Club sued to recover money alleged to be due for the services at the Crescent's minstrel show last February. No defence was made by the defendant, and the judge gave a verdict for the full amount.

CUPID'S CLEVER TRICK.

A PLUCKAMIN BOY'S ABSENCE EXPLAINED BY HIS MARRIAGE.

The Event Was Consummated With the Utmost Secrecy, Even the Groom's Family Not Knowing of the Affair.

It was a very clever trick that Cupid played July 13th when Miss Augusta Poulson, of Bedminster, and Theodore Harrison, of Pluckamin, were married at the home of Rev. H. J. Johnston, of Craig place. The bride has been stopping for several weeks at the home of a relative in the borough, and of course the marriage was planned with the utmost secrecy. The groom is a produce dealer, and he comes to Plainfield every day to supply his customers.

July 13th Mr. Harrison came to Plainfield, as usual, and supplied his customers. It will be remembered it rained quite hard that day and Mr. Harrison wore a long rubber overcoat. This hid the fact that he was attired in his wedding suit, and thus all suspicion was banished. After he had made his rounds he put his horse and wagon up and then engaged a coach and called on his wife-to-be. The two, accompanied by Miss Lottie Huff, a relative, went to the home of Rev. Mr. Johnston, where the marriage was performed. Following this the bride and groom left on a train for New York and other points to spend their honeymoon.

The affair was so cleverly managed that not even the relatives in the country knew of it. Mr. Harrison did not return home that night and his continued absence caused anxiety among his relatives and folks at home. After an absence of several days a letter was sent to Plainfield addressed to Mr. Harrison, and the letter still remains in Plainfield unopened. It is supposed that the happy couple are still on the wedding trip.

PASSED FROM THIS LIFE

SEVERAL SAD DEATHS IN PLAINFIELD FAMILIES.

Mrs. Joseph A. Hubbard Succumbed to Several Weeks Illness—Moses Carney Died Suddenly-Twin Babies Passed Away

After an illness covering a period of several weeks, Mrs. Charlotte Eliza beth Robertson, wife of Joseph A Hubbard, died at her home on West Fifth Street, last evening.

She was born at Peterbo, N. Y., in 1834, and had just passed her sixty-third birthday, July 10th. She was married to Mr. Hubbard, September 22, 1858, and came from her home in Nile, N. Y., on the same day to Plainfield where she has resided ever since.

She was a woman whose life exemplified deep sympathy, broad charity and unostentatious Christianity She was a devoted member of the Seventh Day Baptist church, one who was most loved by those who knew her best. The Press extends to her bereaved husband and sons that sincere sympathy in which we are sure all our readers will join.

AN OLD CITIZEN DEAD.

Moses Carney Passed Away After a Brief Illness.

The friends and acquaintances of Moses Carney, of Central avenue, will be surprised to learn of his sudden death which occurred yesterday morning from bowel trouble. Mr. Carney had not been ill long and was not considered serious.

Mr. Carney was born in New Brunswick and came to Plainfield when a young man, and he has lived in this city ever since. He was a good citizen, a faithful husband and a loving father. He was closely identified with St. Mary's church. For years he has been employed by the city on the streets, and was always considered to be one of the best workmen. He leaves a wife, a son and five daughters.

A RARE DISEASE.

Acute Ascending Paralysis Causes a Young Woman's Death.

The death of Miss Bertha A. Snyder, daughter of Mrs. Hannan M. Snyder, of West Front street, occurred yesterday after an illness lasting five days with what is known to the medical profession as acute ascending paralysis. The disease is a particularly rare one and so far as is known the only case ever treated in this city. It is a fatal disease and sometimes causes death within a few hours. Miss Snyder was at first taken with a weakness of the legs and finally was deprived of their use. The disease then spread rapidly to the upper part of the body until every portion was paralyzed.

TWINS DEAD.

Children of Theodore Smith and Child of Louis Feiring Die in Babyhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Smith, of Allen place, have the sympathy of a large circle of acquaintances and friends in the loss of their infant twins. Theodore and Daniel, which occurred yesterday after a brief illness.

Ethel Feiring, aged eight months, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Feiring, of West Third street, died Monday from convulsions. The little one had been ill for some time.

Mrs. Doughty, of Netherwood, is visiting friends in Chicago for a time.

SILAS D. DRAKE, MAYOR OF LINCOLN.

MISS EMMA EGEL, President of Lincoln Common Council.

MRS. OLIVA HAZARD, Member of Lincoln Common Council.

NOT LIKE NEW WOMEN.

LINCOLN COUNCILWOMEN PURSUING THE EVEN TENOR OF THEIR WAY.

Miss Egel and Mrs. Hazard Do Not Neglect Their Household Duties Over Elation Because of the Councilmanic Honor

Though distinguished and made famous in almost a day, Miss Emma Egel and Mrs. Oliva Hazard, the newly-elected women members of the Lincoln Common Council, are still pursuing the even tenor of their way by attending strictly to their house hold affairs the same as they did before the councilmanic mantle fell on their shoulders.

Miss Egel's parents live about a quarter of a mile from the Lincoln town hall wherein she will preside as President of the Council when Mayor Silas D. Drake is unable to be present. Most of her time each day is taken up in looking after the domestic duties that fall to her lot as the helpmeet of her mother. Miss Egel is not only a successful politician in that she has accomplished something that no other New Jersey woman has yet been able to, but she is a neat housekeeper as well. Every afternoon she dresses in a light summer gown and under the spreading maples in her father's door yard studiously peruses a copy of parliamentary laws to acquaint herself the better with her official duties.

Mrs. Hazard, the matronly member of the Council, is of a quiet and retired disposition and her official duties insofar as the public proceedings of the Council are concerned will be to look wise and say nothing principally, except about matters concerning the marshals, and license committee of which she is a member. But as Lincoln people are a peace loving community, it is not likely that the constabulary affairs of the town will occupy much of her attention. In her husband, who has traveled considerable and butted up against the harshness of the world as all men have, she has a confidential adviser as to her public duties that is ever a consolation to her.

The fact of his selection as chief executive of the town has not served to lessen the all-around hustling qualities of S. D. Drake in the business of booming Lincoln, but on the contrary seems to add fresh impetus to the energies remarkable for the fact that they exceed those of a dozen ordinary men.

The pictures of Miss Egel, Mrs Hazard and Mayor Drake, printed in this paper, are good likenesses.

Prospects of a Big Peach Crop.

The peach crop in the vicinity of Washington will be the largest ever gathered, from present indications. James Shields, the owner of one of the largest orchards in the State, estimates his crop at over 10,000 baskets He has offered the entire crop at twenty-five cents per basket, delivered at the Washington depot.

Miss Agnes Morse, of Jackson avenue, left Saturday for Bayonne, where she will be the guest of her sister, Mrs. W. Allen Schutt, for several weeks.

COUNTY TROLLEY LINE.

APPLICATION FOR A FRANCHISE IN ELIZABETH IS REFERRED.

The Board of Freeholders Will Be Called Upon to Act—It is Said That the Majority of Consents Have Been Secured.

The Elizabeth Council has referred action on the application of the Westfield Electric Railway Company for a franchise to construct its road on Westfield avenue to the committee on streets and parks, which will make a report at the next meeting.

The opinion seems to prevail that the City Council will really have little to say in this matter, and that it properly belongs to the Board of Freeholders, as only about half a mile of the road is to be laid in Elizabeth. It is said the company, outside of Elizabeth, has secured the necessary consents from the landowners along the line of Westfield avenue for the construction of the railroad, one of the largest property-owners being ex-Senator McPherson.

The time limit for the operation of the road is July 1, 1898, and if after the commencement the company shall fail to run the road every day for the space of thirty days the franchise shall be null and void, and City Council may sell it at auction.

The cars to be used are to be well lighted and properly heated; they are to be kept clean, and to have bells or gongs, to run at a speed not to exceed ten miles an hour, and to be provided with necessary fenders, of approved pattern. The cars are to run at 15-minute headway, from 6 a. m. till 10 p. m., and until midnight, as travel may warrant

After the provisions concerning the privilege to erect poles, string wires, etc., the ordinance provides that for every mile of street occupied in the Elizabeth city limits the company will pay the following sums as license fees:

For 1898, $50 per mile; for 1899 and 1900, $75 per mile; 1901 and 1902, $100 per mile; 1903, $125 a mile, and for the succeeding years the company to pay at the rate for 1903, provided that when the gross receipts in one year from the entire system in the city shall equal $25,000, then for that year and annually thereafter the company shall pay 5 per cent. of the gross earnings.

The proposed fares are to be as follows: The company to sell 33 school tickets for $1, good between 8 a. m. and 5 p. m. on school days.

Charged With Bicycle Theft.

A warrant has been issued by Justice Nash at the request of F. L. C. Martin, president of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company, for the arrest of Winslow Carson, of North Plainfield. Mr. Martin claims that Carson bought a wheel on the installment plan and then disposed of it before completing the payments.

Mrs. Walter Walker, of the borough, leaves tomorrow for Atlantic City, where she goes in the interest of the Woman's Relief Corps, of which she is secretary. Mrs. Walker will be absent a few days.

DIED UNDER THE WATER

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT IN GREEN BROOK LAST FRIDAY.

Herbert Beetham Stricken With Cramps and Sank Before He Could Be Rescued—Only 19 Years Old and Leaves a Widow.

It was, indeed, a sad drowning accident that occurred last Friday near Sebring's mills, when Herbert Beetham, a young man nineteen years of age, lost his life while in swimming. Young Beetham while in the water was seized with cramps and before his companions could get near enough to rescue him, he sank.

A search was at once instituted for the body and it was found a considerable distance from where it went down. The companions had some difficulty in finding the body, and after it was discovered they experienced further trouble in getting it out of the water. When the body was laid on the bank it was quickly learned that there was no hope of saving life.

The young men were sorrow-stricken and they hastily went to the home of the young man to tell his young wife of the terrible accident. When the circumstances were related the young woman was stricken with grief. She and her departed husband were married last September. The parents of the young man were also told of the accident and they are prostrated with grief. The home is not a great distance from the scene of the accident and the companions carried the body to the house. The body was in a cramped condition and showed that Beetham must have suffered intense pain for a few seconds while he was conscious.

BAN ON THE FAIR SEX.

BASEBALL UNPOPULAR IN SOMERVILLE AS WOMEN MUST PAY.

The Club's Treasurer Has Issued an Edict That the Feminine Cranks Must Pay to See a Game the Same as the Men Do.

Judging from the attendance at the baseball game Saturday afternoon between the Plainfield Crescents and the Somersets, baseball is not as popular in Somerville as of old. In the days of the famous West Ends, the grounds used to be crowded to their utmost. At present, baseball does not stand very high among the young women of Somerville who used to be the most enthusiastic supporters of the game. The cause is a new rule that has been inaugurated by the Somerset Baseball Club, for which the fair ones hold Fred Disbrow, the new treasurer of the club, responsible.

It has always been the custom to allow the ladies to enter the grounds free of charge. That custom has been continued for so long that the members of the gentler sex in Somerville have come to look upon it as their natural privilege, so when the old custom was revoked at the beginning of this season, there were some indignant young women in Somerville and the poor treasurer had to suffer in consequence, for on him was laid the blame.

While there was no organized determination not to attend the games, there are many who will not go and so the number of fair faces on the grand stand to encourage the home team has been perceptibly smaller.

While the Somersets have the advantage of good grounds completely inclosed and a covered grand stand, the crowd that attended the game Saturday was not more than half as large as the attendance at the last game that the Crescents played in this city.

SETTLED FOR THE BUGGY.

Thought the Demands Too Exorbitant at First, But Came To Terms.

A wrecked buggy, an angry liveryman and the man who caused it all, were the three prominent figures in a scene that was to take place in the court of Justice Storms, of New Market. It didn't, however, as the man finally agreed to settle and the complaint was withdrawn.

Fred Nelson has a livery stable in Dunellen. He has some nice rigs and he is careful of them. On the morning of July 8th, he hired a horse and buggy to Charles Johnson, of Plainfield avenue. Johnson lives just across the county line in Middlesex county. Like other buggies, it was built for two, but they managed to get three young men in it. While driving near Westfield, they attempted to turn around. They turned too short and with serious results. The wheel was wrecked and so was the side of the carriage. The remains of the rig was left in Westfield and Mr. Nelson was notified.

Nelson sent in a bill which Johnson thought exorbitant and refused to pay. He did not return the remains of the rig. Then Nelson retained Lawyer Warfield S. Ingleman, of this city, and had a warrant sworn out before Justice Storms for Johnson's arrest on the charge of damaging the rig and not returning it. Johnson secured Murphy & Blatz as his attorneys. There was a conference and the liveryman finally agreed to withdraw the complaint if Johnson would settle on terms arranged by the lawyers. The case was to come before Justice Storms last week for a hearing.

FIVE UNLUCKY MINUTES

DURING WHICH TIME THE CRESCENTS LOST A BALL GAME.

A Good Game Played at Somerville But McLarty Got Rattled and His Wild Pitches Made the Home Team Win.

McLarty is all right as long as he stays on the earth, but when he goes up in the air there is no telling what will happen. For five unlucky minutes, Jack McLarty, pitcher for the Plainfield Crescents, went up in the air, and now the Somervillians have long years to tell of how they defeated the Crescents.

The Crescents journeyed up the road to Somerville, Saturday afternoon, to play a return game with the Somersets of that place. The Somersets came here early in the season and won by a score of 13 to 8, but everybody felt that the fight Saturday would be a lively one. And so it was. The Somersets won by a score of 6 to 5, but it took twelve innings to decide the game.

Did we say that the Somersets won? It should have been that the Crescents lost. The Crescents were ahead in the ninth inning when McLarty got to bat in the beginning.

The start was rather discouraging for the visitors from this city for Francis, the Somerset catcher, hammered the ball over the centre field fence with one man on base. That scored two runs. Costly errors by the home infield gave the visitors one run in the first inning while two singles and a double scored one more for them in the third. Several hits and two men hit by pitched balls filled the bases for the Somersets in the fourth inning and two men crossed the plate but McLarty eneed the excitement by striking out Francis.

Two runs for the Crescents in the sixth and one in the eighth inning were the result of several hits and infield errors. The score then stood 5 to 4 in favor of the visitors when the Somersets came to bat in the ninth inning. An error, a two base hit and then McLarty went up into the air. He filled the bases by giving Cox his base on balls and then forced Milligan home by giving McLoughlin his base in the same way.

Then McLoughlin decended from the clouds, struck out the next man and put the third man out by catching a ball. It tied the score, however. Mac had a chance to redeem himself in the eleventh inning when he came to bat with two men on bases and two men out. His hot grounder was successfully fielded and the chance was lost.

It was not until the twelth inning that Somerville could score. The bases were filled by a bat, an error and a base on balls. Cooney delayed the agony by nipping a runner at the plate but a slow grounder to Lederer brought in Davenport and the game was over.

It was a good game, however, and the Plainfield contingent have nothing to be ashamed of in the showing they made. The game was witnessed by a small crowd, many of whom came from Plainfield.

The detailed score was as follows:

DANCED AT THE HUNTERSTON.

A Time of Jollity Among Young People Saturday Night.

The dance at the Hotel Hunterston last Saturday evening was one of the best yet held. There was a large attendance of young people from Plainfield, Fanwood and Westfield, and together with the large number of guests at the hotel they made the event an auspicious one. The music by Rogers was all to be desired and everything that would make the affair a pleasurable one was attended to by the management. These dances have become very popular and the class of people that avail themselves of them is of the best. At present life at this hotel is very lively. Yesterday there were nearly one hundred and fifty guests at the hotel and it reminds one of old times when that part of Netherwood was so gay and lively.

SAID TO BE 121 YEARS OLD

A NOTED LOCAL CHARACTER FATALLY HURT ON THE TRACKS.

Reuben Keith, Born a Slave in Virginia, Was Killed By Accident — A Short Sketch of His Long Career in This Life.

Reuben Keith, a well-known colored character, of this city, who claimed to be 121 years old, was struck by freight engine No. 88, on the Central Railroad tracks near the Madison avenue bridge at 3:30 o'clock Friday morning, receiving injuries from which he died.

Keith was in the habit of picking coal on the railroad, and started out for that purpose at 3 o'clock Friday morning. It is supposed that in order to avoid a fast express train, he stepped upon the other track and was struck by the freight engine. Keith was thrown some distance, but was not badly mangled. The ambulance was summoned and he was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital, where he died at 5 o'clock.

Keith has lived for the past six years with a daughter, Mrs. Mary Coleman, on Cottage place. When seen by a Press reporter today Mrs. Coleman talked freely of her father's history. He was born a slave upon the plantation of Capt. James Payne in Fauquier county, Virginia. Capt. Payne was a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and Keith had a distinct memory of him and of the stories he used to relate of the fight for independence. Keith's mother was the nurse of Capt. Payne's children, and the whole family were treated as favorites by their master and mistress. Of the War of 1812 and the Mexican War Keith had distinct recollections.

When the Rebellion came and the slaves were emancipated, the old man still clung to the plantation where a new generation of Paynes were in control. He worked at his trade of blacksmith and lived comfortably in the house with which his old master had presented him in his last will. He married and there were ten children, four of whom are now living.

There is no record of Keith's birth and it is doubted if he was as old as he claimed. He was a very old man, however.

DOINGS OF THE Y. M. C. A.

Improvements Authorized in the Physical Department.

The Board of Directors of the Y. M. C. A. has given the physical department committee of the association the authority to make the necessary repairs at the building that come under the government of that committee. The locker room will be repainted, as will also the lavatory. Then the pins on the bowling alleys will be repaired. It was proposed some time ago that new bowling alleys of the regulation length should be constructed on the Watchung avenue side of the building and the old and small alleys be removed. The Board does not feel that they can stand the expense of such a change this year and nothing will be done in that direction at present.

The junior members now meet three times a week for an hour. Most of the time is spent in the swimming tank.

The last meeting of the business men's class in the gymnasium was held Thursday afternoon. The class has now adjourned its meetings until fall on account of the warm weather.

The runway to the wheel room at the building has been improved by the addition of slats across the side so that riders will not slip when taking their wheels up or down the incline.

THEATRICAL.

Shows may come, and shows may go, but Proctor's show at the cool and cheery Twenty-third Street House goes on all the year round, regardless of weather variations. This establishment, by the way, is the only amusement resort in New York with a record of never closing for a single day within the past five years. It appeals distinctively to the stay-at-home classes, particularly the family element, and its cooling devices are so thorough and ingenious that it is a restful and refreshing resort on the deadliest of dog-days. Its new midsummer bill would be considered a colossal one at the height of the winter season. Hope Booth, upon the eve of her departure in quest of European conquests, begins a farewell week of classic art posings, including Macmonnies' much-discussed "Bacchante," "Greater New York," "The Circus Girl," and "The Polar Star," which is particularly refreshing to look at just now.

ALL JERSEY SMILES.

Such a Hay Crop Has Never Been Seen—The Same as to Fruit.

The New Jersey farmers are gleeful, and well they may be. Nature smiled on them and on their fields and orchards. The rain of early spring delighted the grass, and the result is the largest hay crop in the history of the State. And there is prosperity in store for the fruit growers also. The season will prove one of the best for Jersey fruit in size and richness.

TRINITY'S ALTERATIONS.

BUILDING COMMITTEE FINALLY DECIDE ON THE PLANS.

The Estimated Cost of the Improvements is $6,000, Over Half of Which Has Already Been Pledged by the Supporters.

The building committee, Messrs. Gayle, Meeker, Laire, Clark, Hegeman, MacDonald, Anthony and Rev. Cornelius Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church, met in the church edifice Tuesday, and made a final examination of the plans and specifications for making important alterations in the present building. As now planned, it is proposed to raise the structure to a height sufficient to allow a Sunday-school room, with floor space the size of the present dimensions of the auditorium—60 by 90 feet. The floor of the Sunday-school room will only be two feet below the surface of the earth, and will be divided into a lecture room, eleven class rooms, parlor, kitchen, committee rooms, toilet, and last, but not least, a large and well-arranged department for the primary class.

Estimates will be made as to the cost of the improvements by several contractors and builders and the contract awarded to the lowest responsible bidder just as soon as possible.

During the time the church proper is being elevated the auditorium will be thoroughly renovated and redecorated. New carpets will also be laid and other furnishings secured.

The question of where the congregation will worship during the period of alterations, which will require at least three months to accomplish, will be settled at an early date, as well as providing for a meeting place for the large Sunday-school of the church.

The estimated cost of the alterations is $6,000 and the subscription committee has already secured pledges for half this amount.

ATE CLAMS; WERE HAPPY.

Friends of W. S. Emery Made Merry at Scotch Plains Last Week.

The clambake and flag-raising at Emery's Hotel, Scotch Plains, last week was one of the most successful affairs of the sort ever held in the town. Between 300 and 400 invited guests were present, including delegations of Elks from Elizabeth, New Brunswick, Newark and Jersey City. Fine music was discovered throughout the evening by Gutmann's band of 14 pieces.

At 5 o'clock a flag pole, 67 feet in height, was raised, and a large American flag was swung to the breeze. As the flag unfurled the guests sang patriotic songs and cheered.

The bake was drawn between 6 and 7 o'clock, and was served to the guests upon the lawn in the rear of the hotel. The night was a pleasant one, and the lawn was made brilliant by incandescent electric lamps.

George Thatcher and Ed. Marble acted as master of ceremonies. Mr. Thatcher was in his best vein and kept the guests laughing with his witticisms.

Speeches were delivered by W. S. Emery, George Thatcher, Abe Nelson, of Newark, John H Adleman, of this city, and Ed. Marble.

THE LIFE OF JUDSON.

Special Missionary Meeting at Park Avenue Baptist Church.

A special missionary meeting was held in the chapel of the Park Avenue Baptist church, last Friday, by the members of the Christian Endeavor Society. The meeting was led by Miss Florence G. Hawkins. It has been the custom of the society to have ten minutes after their regular meetings devoted to the reading of "The Life of Judson," the famous Baptist missionary. Last evening half an hour was spent in reading it. The last part of the meeting was given to the reading of short items from the missionary field. Hymns and selections by a quartette were sung during the meeting. The quartette was composed of Miss Adelaide Runyon, Miss Adelia Runyon, Wesley Brokaw and Thomas A. Cuming. A collection was taken up for the benefit of the Westfield Fresh Air Camp.

ESCAPED BY A FEW INCHES.

A Plainfielder Nearly Run Over by a Careless Truckman.

James Taylor, of West Seventh street, was nearly run over by a heavily loaded truck on the ferry boat "Elizabeth," Friday morning.

Mr. Taylor went down on the 7:26 train from Plainfield yesterday morning. He was walking leisurely up the driveway when a truck started to come on board. The bell had rung for the closing of the gates but the driver was anxious to catch the boat and so he urged his horses onward. They came down the gang-way at break neck speed. Mr. Taylor was directly in the path and all who saw the team were sure that he was about to be run over. Everybody shouted and he jumped to one side, the pole of the wagon just touching his coat as he sprang out of the way. The driver of the wagon was severely censured by the officials of the boat for attempting to come on board after the bell had rung.

A SENSATIONAL HEARING

JAMES E. MARTINE RELATES HIS GRIEVANCE AGAINST THE CITY

He Asks as a Matter of Equity and Justice That His Claims Be Used as an Offset Against His Delinquent Taxes.

Rather sensational was the adjourned hearing Thursday afternoon, before the adjustment commissioners, appointed under the Martin Act. There was only two property owners who personally appeared before the Commissioners, while several were heard from by letter. The sensational part was the testimony of James E. Martine, who made a claim that is known only to the old residents of the city.

According to the sketch of the situation given by Mr. Martine to the Commissioners, yesterday afternoon, he once came to the aid of the city to the amount of $3,000, which was never paid, and the city still owes him for the macadamizing of three thousand feet of Park avenue, which he did in compliance with an ordinance that was declared of no effect by the courts.

The Commissioners held their regular meeting, last week, and adjourned until Thursday afternoon, when the hearing was continued. All the Commissioners, Frank Bergen and Albert B. Carlton, of Elizabeth, and Joseph A. Hubbard, of Plainfield, were present. Frank J. Hubbard acted as secretary and George Wean as stenographer.

Communications were received from William Rockwell, Mrs. T. J. Gilles, A. J. Gavett and J. O. Campbell, regarding the back taxes, explaining that they had been paid or that they had no knowledge that there were any taxes due on their property.

Jacob Tingley appeared before the Commissioners regarding a bill he had received for back taxes on the property, 405 West Fourth street. All the taxes, he said, had been paid at least once and some of them twice. The reason for the payment of them twice was that he had lost certain receipts. Now he really objected to paying them the third time. He presented a receipt in full up to 1893, and many other receipts for a portion of the amount. The Commissioners told Mr. Tingley that he would be called upon later to explain his case when they considered it, and asked him to retain the receipts until that time.

Mr. Martine then came forward. He told something of the history of Plainfield over a quarter of a century ago. Park avenue formerly ran to Seventh street, but the progressive people wished to extend it to Metuchen and make a direct thoroughfare to that place. The house of Mrs. V. L. Spencer was directly in the path of the proposed extension and it was necessary to remove it. The city assessed the property owners who would be benefited by the opening, among whom was J. E. Martine. All the assessments were not paid and the city needed about $2,000 to remove the house. Mr. Martine was particularly interested and wished the improvement to go forward without delay. He loaned the city the $2,000, expecting to get it back from the rest of the assessments, but they were never paid. He presented the claim and appeared before the Council at a committee meeting and stated his case, but a final understanding was never reached.

Immediately after the cutting through of the road an ordinance was passed providing for the grading and macadamizing of Park avenue. The ordinance stated that if the property owners did not have the work done themselves, the city would take the matter in hand and have it done at their expense. Mr. Martine was the only one taking his share of the work, macadamizing about 3,000 feet at a cost of over $3,000. The other owners refused. The ordinance was brought into court and finally declared void. The remainder of the work was done by the city. Mr. Martine claimed the city should reimburse him for the expense that had been forced upon him. The city did not and he did not care to bring suit against the city.

Mr. Martine asked the commissioners to look upon these debts of the city as off sets for the taxes he had not paid, as a matter of equity and justice. Mayor Fisk was an interested listener to the story, asking questions at intervals.

The Commissioners seemed impressed by Mr. Martine's remarks and asked him to bring the necessary papers to the meeting of the Commission when his case should be considered. When asked if he had anything else to say by Chairman Bergen, of the Commission, he replied:

"Nothing, unless it is to endorse your trolley scheme," at which a general smile went around.

Fred C. Lounsbury asked the Commissioners if they wanted any more names to the petition that was presented to give it strength. Mr. Bergen said that it would not need anyone. It was a remarkably well expressed statement, he said. He also remarked that it did not seem fair to make the innocent property-owners pay for the neglect of the former owners, which encouraged those who heard him to believe that the Commission do not intend to enforce the Martin Act in an arbitrary manner.

After the book containing the list of delinquents under the Martin Act was examined, the Commissioners adjourned until this afternoon at 2:15 o'clock.

The following letter was sent to the Commissioners by the Mayor:

It has been the general opinion for some time by all parties interested that the uncollected taxes prior to and including the year 1881 could not be collected, as the city had not effected its lien by selling the property, and it was not until the application for the appointment of commissioners under the act commonly known as the Martin Act was contemplated that this erroneous opinion was corrected. For this reason, the former tax collector in making searches for taxes against real estate, did not, as I understand, examine the record back of the year 1881, and either verbally, or in writing, informed the purchasers that there were no outstanding taxes on the property, when, in reality, it was found, on examination in certain cases, that the taxes were outstanding for the year 1881 and prior thereto. This being the case, certain properties, against which you will find uncollected taxes, are now in the hands of innocent purchasers, who took every precaution, and, had they known that there were taxes against the property, would have seen that they were paid at the time they took the title. In cases of this kind, I think it would only be just and for the best interests of the city that such tax liens should be cancelled. This would also hold true in regard to properties sold under foreclosure, where the city had been made a party to the suit and the officials had not taken the precaution to protect their claim. However, it would not do for you to take for granted that all property that has changed hands is now held by innocent purchasers, for, upon investigation, you will find that, in certain cases, the purchasers did know of the uncollected taxes, and thinking that they could not be collected, took no steps to have the same taken off the record. In such cases, as this, I think they should be considered in the same light as original holders. There is no doubt in my mind that where property has not changed hands, and where the owners know that they have not paid these taxes in equity and justice to the other citizens, the property should pay the full amount outstanding whether assessed prior to or subsequent to the year 1881.

Very truly yours,
Charles H. Fisk,
Mayor.

SUSPENDED IN MIDAIR

YOUNG SWEENEY GRASPED A LIVE ELECTRIC LIGHT WIRE.

He Was Unable to Let Go and the Electricity Coursed Through His Body and Caused Him to Scream With the Pain.

It was a close call that Joseph Sweeney, of West Fourth street, had last Thursday. Joseph is about ten years of age and was playing on Liberty street when a desire seized him to climb a large tree, near the corner of Fourth street. At the time there was scarcely any one around in the locality. Joseph succeeded in reaching the top of the tree and was casting about for a suitable branch for a whip. In his attempt he accidentally grasped a live electric light wire hidden behind the leaves and was unable to let go. He became frightened and began to scream. His heart-rending cries were heard several blocks away. People came running from all directions, thinking that someone was being killed. Soon there was a crowd of several hundred people assembled around the tree. There they saw the boy suspended in mid-air with the one hand fastened to the live wire.

In an instant the crowd took in the situation and people began to run for ladders. One was secured at Westphal's grocery store and Mr. Sharkey, the butcher, secured a pair of rubber gloves. He ascended the ladder to where the boy was hanging. While attempting to rescue the boy the crowd stood breathless, for they expected that the lad would not be able to withstand the charge of electricity which was passing through his body.

It seemed like hours to those who stood around the tree for Mr. Sharkey to reach the boy, although it only took a very few minutes. When Mr. Sharkey got near young Sweeney he caught him about the arms and carried the boy to the ground. The crowd flocked about the youngster and it was almost impossible to get him out of the crowd so that he could be taken to Dr. Simpson. The latter examined the boy and found that his right hand and forearm was severely burned, as well as his left hand, but he decided that the lad was not seriously injured. Mrs. Sweeney, mother of the boy, was almost frantic with grief, but when she learned that her son was out of danger she seemed to be reconciled.

CAME LIKE ENOCH ARDEN

ROMANTIC REALISM OF A DEMENTED FARMER'S WANDERINGS.

Emil Funger Had Been Missing and Returned in a Demented Condition to Work as His Own Hired Man.

Emil Funger, a farmer living between Scotch Plains and Westfield, has had a most unenviable experience during the past three weeks, in which time he has been a wanderer from his home, living like a wild animal in the woods and fields and eating berries and herbs, and now he is doing the work of a hired man upon his own farm.

Funger has of late been the victim of a malady that has affected his reason. The farm which he and his wife have occupied for the past three years belongs to the Ackerman estate. The couple are hard-working Germans, and were reasonably prosperous in their management of the farm until Funger's mind began to weaken. Trouble of various sorts then began. During the summer season, when the crops must be looked after, two or three hired men are needed on the farm. Funger, who was a peaceable man, quarreled with his workmen when his mind became effected, and several of the hands left after a short stay, declaring that they were afraid to stay on the farm.

As his affliction grew worse, Funger began to ill treat his wife, and to throw out hints of self destruction.

On the morning of June 20th, the demented man ate a hasty breakfast, and taking his hat and a heavy walking stick, started off through the fields. At night he did not return. At first his wife did not feel any great anxiety, thinking that when the whim passed off, Funger would come home. But as day after day passed and no news came of the missing man, she grew uncomfortable with fear.

The crops were standing in the fields, and the cattle needed attention, and in addition to these troubles there was a blacker cloud which arose when she recalled her husband's dark threats of suicide. She wondered every morning if on that day the lifeless body would be brought home to her, and in this terrible suspense the days dragged on, until three weeks had passed by.

On Tuesday July 14 about sundown, Mrs. Funger heard the door upon the place barking furiously, and on going out of doors she saw a queer looking creature with tattered clothing, bare-footed and bare-headed and leaning upon a long staff, come slowly in at the front gate. He went to the hired man and asked for work about the place, when Mrs. Funger recognized the voice and rushing out dragged the man into the house. It was her husband, but he paid no heed to her, and acted as a stranger would. He called for food, and when his hunger was gone he appeared content.

The demented man has since been working about his own place under the impression that he is merely a hired man there. He takes his orders from the hired man, and seems to have no knowledge of the fact that he is upon his own farm. Most of the time he maintains a stolid silence.

When a Press reporter visited the farm, Funger was driving some cows through the field. He would not talk when spoken to. The question of the man's whereabouts during his long absence remains a mystery, with the exception of the news received from a friend of his in Washingtonville to the effect that Funger appeared in that place on the day after his disappearance from his home. Since that date no trace of his movements can be found, except his wanderings were evidently in Somerset county; and the fact lies the probable solution of the mystery surrounding the identity of the Somerset county wild man, whose antics have kept the simple people in that vicinity in a state of panic for the past few weeks. He was seen at various times and places in the vicinity of Washingtonville, Coontown and Warrenville, and at night he did not hesitate to attack anyone he happened to meet.

Ever since the first appearance of the wild man on the night of June 21st, when he attacked Morris Ballentine and his wife and mother-in-law on the road from Basking Ridge to this city and ran behind the carriage brandishing a club and threatening to kill the occupants, various theories as to his identity have been advanced.

The most plausible of these was the suggestion that he might have escaped from the Morris Plains Asylum. This theory was strengthened at one time by the knowledge that one of the patients at the asylum had become violent and made his escape after felling two keepers to the ground.

No confirmation of this story has been secured from the officers in charge of the asylum, however, and people in the terrorized district have been seeking some other explanation of the strange creature's identity.

That explanation now seems to be complete in the story of the disappearance of Peter Funger, as here related.

RAID BY SLICK BURGLARS

FOUR HOUSES ENTERED AND $600 IN BOOTY CARRIED AWAY.

The Depredators Worked With Such Precaution That in Two Houses the Inmates Were Not Awaked by the Ransacking.

Burglars made a raid upon Westfield last Thursday, and entered four houses, carrying off booty to the value of about $600.

In the house of C. D. Losee, corner of Cumberland street and South avenue, the burglars made their biggest haul. They entered through a dining room window by shoving back the catch. The entrance of the intruders was made after one o'clock, as at that time, R. M. Baily, Mrs. Losee's brother, who is visiting at the house, was up and about and found everything safe. None of the family were awakened by the entrance of the burglars, who leisurely ransacked every corner of the house.

From the sleeping room of Mr. and Mrs. Bailey they took a silver watch and chain, some gold studs, a gold watch and chain and a diamond brooch, belonging to Mrs. Bailey. Mr. Bailey's trousers pockets were ransacked and $2.35 in change was taken. The burglars in their haste overlooked some diamond rings in a small basket upon the mantle. From the room of Mr. and Mrs. Losee a gold hunting case watch and a chain, a pair of gold link cuff buttons, a number of gold rings and trinkets were taken. Mr. Losee's clothes were carried down stairs and left in the hall after being ransacked. A small amount of money was taken from his trousers ponkets. Some silver knives and forks were also taken from the dining room.

The burglary was not discovered until 6 o'clock Thursady morning when the housekeeper came down stairs.

The residence of A. L. Lightfoot was also entered at the same time through a kitchen window. None of the family was awakened and the burglars secured $2.50 in cash from Mr. Lightfoot's clothes. In the parlor they opened a jewel casket and secured three gold Royal Arcanum jewels, the property of Mr. Lightfoot, who is past grand regent of the State for this order.

The burglars also paid a visit to the house of Mrs. Amelia Randolph, on South avenue. So far as is known nothing was taken, though a thorough search of closets and drawers throughout the house was made and things were tossed about generally. The cracksmen seemed unable to find anything which they cared to take away. They entered through a kitchen window, and on taking leave left the dining room door open.

An attempt was also made to enter the house of Major Gaines, a colored man, living on South Broad street, but the burglars were frightened off.

THE ROADS UNFINISHED.

New Brunswick Folks Most Complete Government Jobs.

Residents of College avenue, New Brunswick, between Somerset and Hamilton streets, which the Government started to pave as an object lesson in road building, have learned that they will very probably be called upon to bear the expense of finishing the road. The original plan provided that the Government was to pay for the materials and supply the machinery, while the property owners along the avenue were to pay for the labor. All of the work has not yet been done, and in order to complete it several hundred tons of fine stone will be required. During the week the Government, in order to go on with another experiment at Geneva, N. Y., has been removing the stone crusher and other machinery from the city. This has left City Engineer Atkinson, who has been superintending the work, without any means to break up the rest of the stone needed. The cost of transportation alone will be considerable.

The other road in New Brunswick at the farm of the New Jersey State Agricultural College, has not yet been completed.

Former Mayor VanWinkle's Many.

The marriage is announced of Miss Isabell M. Stout, the youngest daughter of Former Mayor and Mrs. Jacob T. Stout, of Atlantic Highlands, to Former Mayor John H. VanWinkle, of Duer street, to take place in the Methodist Episcopal church at Atlantic Highlands, Thursday afternoon, July 29th, at 3 o'clock. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at the spacious residence of Former Mayor Stout, in Atlantic Highlands. On the return from their wedding trip, they will reside at Mr. VanWinkle's present residence on Duer street.

Former Jim Invited to Talk.

James E. Martine, of this city, has been invited to address the "Vantage Grange," on August 17, at Deckertown, N. J. This will be the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the formation of the Grange. A large attendance is expected. Last year it was estimated that fully six thousand people were present.

—Last Saturday afternoon several good games of tennis were played on the Grace M. E. church courts. Those participating were Miss Marguerite Shuck, Rev. H. J. Johnston, Miss Snodgrass and Mr. Snodgrass.

SABBATH AND THE WHEEL.

More and more is the bicycle coming into use on Sunday and in many places ministers of the gospel are endeavoring to stay the inroads on church attendance by urging those who are enthusiastically inclined towards riding to bring their wheels to church. It is interesting, then, to read the following opinion of a Seventh-Day Baptist correspondent in the Sabbath Recorder of this week as to the practice of members of that denomination riding a bicycle on their Sabbath:

The subject of wheel riding on Sabbath-day is one that calls for immediate consideration by Seventh-Day Baptists. It does this for two main reasons. First, because this is against the Scriptures, and when we compromise ourselves and our actions with the busy world around us, we are losing sight of a principle based entirely on the Bible, for which we ought to firmly stand. Secondly, from a position as a denominational see us, there is much need of great care on our part, for we are representatives of this creed; so the world will judge our carnestness, not by what we say, but by what we do. So before we ride our wheels again on Sabbath-day, let us ask ourselves whether or not we could ask Christ to go with us on that ride. B. T.

NEW BRUNSWICK'S GLEE.

Poor, thirsty Plainfield! The Water Supply Company of that town is becoming aggressive in enforcing the rules governing the use of lawn sprinklers and hand hose. The Plainfield Press predicts many spats between the corporation and its patrons. One of the company's rules is that any person wishing to use a hose must first obtain a permit. Water will not be granted except between the hours of 6 and 9 a. m. and 4 and 7 p. m. Of course, if the company has only a limited water supply, this is but reasonable. Still, the enthusiastic townsman who desires to transform his share of Plainfield into a pretty garden spot will probably find his endeavors hampered. Suppose his gladiolus bed needs spraying at 8 p. m. when he returns from the metropolis, what then? New Brunswick grumbles over many things, but not a growl do we hear over our abundant and most potable water supply, as excellent as any in New Jersey.—New Brunswick Home News.

MOSQUITO EXTERMINATION.

While a great many Jerseymen are intensely interested in the proposition to exterminate the mosquito known as the Jersey species, the Plainfielder only looks on in a serene and curious manner as to the outcome, because in this immediate vicinity the iniquitous and itch-inoculating insect is only represented now and then by some tramp of the family who has escaped from Elizabeth and hied himself here without the knowledge that he is doomed to the executing scokdolager of the victim whom he selects for blood food. It is a notorious fact that the Elizabeth mosquito is a fat, sleek article, whose fangs are as sharp as needles and as strong as steel, but by the time the stray ones find their stamping grounds in Plainfield the trip has so exhausted them there is but little aggressiveness in their bodies.

HARMONY.

Referring to the editorial in these columns a few days ago concerning the Democratic intentions of harmony in all parts of the State, the New Brunswick Fredonian has this to say of the Middlesex situation, but the comment is that of a Republican and must be taken with a grain of salt:

The question of harmony is not worrying the Middlesex Democrats in the least. They are at present enjoying a period in which harmony is as far away from their thoughts as the North Pole is from the South Pole. The gold and silver wings of the party cannot seem to coalesce, and each faction wants to be the controlling element in the party.

SEEN NO MORE.

"Stole to Play Races" read a newspaper heading this morning. Once upon a time this caption was not an infrequent sight to readers of New Jersey newspapers, but it is seen no more. And it is not likely to be observed again as applying to New Jersey as the place wherein the gambling temptation is offered.

AS TO WATERED STOCK.

TRAMPS TAKE A BATH

A GENERALLY ACCEPTED THEORR DISPOSED OF IN A NOVEL WAY.

Bath Room in an Empty House in Roselle Used by Hoboes to Such an Exent That Water Connections Have to Be Cut Off.

Thomas Doud, a representative of the Plainfield Water Supply Company, was called to Roselle on a peculiar mission Tuesday that disposes of the generally accepted theory that tramps are as reluctant to come in contact with water for cleansing purposes as they are to come face to face with work.

For several weeks the residents of the pretty suburban town of Roselle have been wondering why it was that so many tramps invaded their precincts. Roselleites were not so hospitable and gracious to the fraternity that they would come under the professional designation of a "graft," in fact since the inflow of the "coal train commuters" on the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey became so great its people have refused rather than appeased with a few cold morsels the appetite of the shiftless wanderers. But the "cold hand" and "marble heart" did not stem the tide of the Weary Willies. On the contrary, they seemed to be coming in greater numbers with each succeeding day. Just why Roselle should become the Mecca, or at least the stopping off place, of this floating population peculiar to the American soil was an enigma that no Roselleite could offer a solution for.

One thing was noticeable, however, about the tramps, and that was the rather startling and unusual fact that they were clean. According to tradition, the tramp must have the dirt accumulated in his wanderings imbedded so deep in his flesh that its extermination could only be accomplished by a Turkish bath or some other process equally as far away from the pecuniary possibilities of the hobo.

Even in trampdom there are reasons for all things, and the cause of the presence of members of the fraternity was produced Monday when the officials of the water company found that, though a house had been vacant since last spring, a large quantity of water was being diverted to its interior. An inspector made an investigation and what was his surprise to find a tramp leisurely bathing in the bathroom of the house. He vouched the information that the "profession" had been tipped off all through this section of the country concerning the admirable facilities for taking a bath, and that a great many had wended their way to Roselle and indulged in a wash.

Inspector Doud cut off the water connections, and Roselle will once more become the peaceful borough that its denizens hope and long for.

WONT TAKE TO THE WOODS.

Instead of a Clambake, Union County Republicans Will Have an Excursion.

The Union County Republicans are going to have a harmony excursion, so as to be up to date with the Democrats, who will have an outing to Whitestone, L. I., on August 25th or 26th.

The Republican leaders intended at first to have a clambake in the woods, but County Chairman Charles N. Codding put his foot down on this arrangement. He emphatically declared this was no year for Republicans to be taking to the woods, but they should come right out in the open like their opponents. His advice prevailed and he has been in Elizabeth making the preliminary arrangements.

The steamer Isabel has been engaged for the outing, and it is the intention to limit the tickets to about 400. Only the active workers in the party will receive invitations, as it is the programme to get together and fully discuss on the trip the prospects for the fall campaign and what steps should be taken to hold Union county firmly in the Republican camp. If it is possible, the excursion will be held on Labor Day. The destination of the harmonizers has not yet been settled upon.

DELUGE WITH WATER

TWO THOUSAND GALLONS OF WATER FLOWED INTO FLATS.

Reservoir on the Roof Caved in and the Contents Escaped With Damaging and Frightening Results to the Tenants.

The residents in the Thorn block on Somerset street had an experience Sunday morning that was far from being pleasant. On the roof of the building there is a large tank holding about two thousand gallons of water. From this reservoir the people in the flats draw water used for washing purposes. It stands on a low platform stayed with props at each corner. Sunday morning one of the props gave way. This allowed the weight on one end to fall considerable, and the pipe which is used to fill the tank was not able to stand the pressure. Consequently something had to give and it proved to be the pipe. As soon as the connection was broken there was a deluge of water. The elevator shaft is not far away and the whole volume of water rushed out in torrents down the shaft. On its way down it found a channel into the rooms of several flats and caused considerable damage. In the flat occupied by Mr. Mason and wife the damage was perhaps the greatest. It thoroughly soaked the furniture and other things in the several rooms.

Mr. Thorn started at once going on the people throughout the building were frightened, for they were unable to account for the strange proceedings. Some thought the roof had caved in and the house was being flooded, while others thought that the building had been struck by lightning. They were in a state of excitement until Alex Thorn, the owner of the building, arrived and quieted them. All of the water left the tank. Most of it escaped through the elevator shaft.

Mr. Thorn fixed the tank temporarily and today his men are repairing the break. The tank will be in use again in a short time.

CHASED WITH A KNIFE

A Fight That Came Near Ending Fatally in Westfield.

A fight which came near ending fatally occurred in Burtis' Hotel, corner of Elm street and North avenue, Westfield, on Sunday morning. Robert Moore, Jr., went into the hotel and quarreled with Louis Johnston, a colored waiter. Moore is an expert pugilist, and started to punish Johnston with his fists, when the latter ran into the kitchen and returned with a large carving knife. The negro had Moore cornered and would have injured him badly but for the interference of several men about the place. No arrests were made, and an attempt was made to hush the matter up.

You may hunt the world over and you will not find another medicine equal to Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for bowel complaints. It is pleasant, safe and reliable. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, Park & North Aves.

Troublesome Boys.

Silas Yerkes, of East Sixth street, is among the residents in that section of the city who are troubled with a class of boys who are considered about the worst in Plainfield. Mr. Yerkes, in speaking to a Daily Press reporter this morning, said that while he is away from home these boys come to his home and do all sorts of contemptible, mean things. They annoy Mrs. Yerkes, and when she tells them to go away, they use the most indecent and obscene language. They are destructive in nature, and will not stay away from the place. Mr. Yerkes says that the boys are known by sight, but not by name.

HIS WATERLOO A POX CAR

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE CONQUERED BY SERGEANT KIELY.

A Tramp of Famous Name Could Not Give a Satisfactory Account of Himself and he Had to go Down to the County Jail.

City Judge DeMeza had a novel experience Monday morning. Napoleon Bonaparte appeared before him with folded arms and watched the Judge with his masterful eye as that official meted out judgement to the offender possessing the once famous general's name. It was evident that this Napoleon had met his Waterloo, for his once dignified Prince Albert coat was sadly frayed at the edges and showed the results of a wandering life.

Napoleon Bonaparte, or rather Napoleon Bonaparte La Mountaon, was one of a crowd of weary wanderers that Sergeant Kiely happened upon at 5 o'clock Monday a. m. They were trying to make themselves comfortable in a box car when the Sergeant landed in the centre of the party. There was a scattering, but the Sergeant managed to capture Napoleon and one faithful colored retrainer. The man of famous name stalked over to the city jail and spent the rest of the morning amid the creeping and crawling things that haunt the cells by day or night, thinking of the contrast between his present situation and the good old days in the Tuilleries in Paris. He told Patrolman McCue, when that worthy brought him from the cell to the court room, that even Corsica was better than the Plainfield jail.

A thirty-two calibre revolver was found in the possession of the distinguished prisoner, and Judge asked him his reason for carrying it.

"To protect myself," sternly replied the prisoner as he cast a glance at the Judge that should have struck terror to his heart, and he folded his arms over his ragged coat and waited.

Being something of a student of history, the Judge wished to learn the recent history of Napoleon. Of late, the latter explained, he had been employed on a canal boat on the D. and H. Canal. The boat was now stalled at Reading and he had wandered about in search of another job. He also admitted that as far as protecting his possessions went, the revolver was the most important of them all.

His solitary follower gave his name as John Johnson. His weapon of defence consisted of a long-bladed knife which he had carefully reconceled in his clothing. He had no cash and so preferred to go to jail for 20 days.

The Judge did not like Napoleon's revolver nor his reasons for carrying it. Altogether the general did not make a favorable impression. As he had not the money to pay his fine of $25 he went down the road for 60 days.

"Last summer one of our grandchildren was sick with a severe bowel trouble," says Mrs. E. G. Gregory, of Fredericktown, Mo. "Our doctor's remedy had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave very speedy relief." For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Apothecary, Park & North Aves.

Your Idea

is that oatmeal is oatmeal—there can't be much difference.

But there can!

Even in ordinary oatmeals there can be a difference—good oats and good milling are better than lean and shrivelled oats and poor milling.

But oatmeal may be something more than a matter of fat groats and smart millers.

The oat in its natural state is the most nutritious of grains, but it must be adapted to man's physical needs. The starch cells—the indigestibility—must be broken.

Steam cooking will break the cells, change starch into sugar, make the indigestible digestible.

THROWN OUT OF A WAGON.

Wheel Collapsed and a Little Girl Painfully Hurt.

An accident occurred Monday a. m. on Somerset street in front of the residence of P. M. French, when the two-year-old daughter of Mrs. Moore, of Smalleytown, was painfully injured Mrs. Moore and her daughter and father-in-law, John Stiles, were on their way home with a load of lumber. When in front of the residence, one of the rear wheels caught in a car track and collapsed. Mrs. Moore and her little one were hurled out of the wagon with force, the latter striking on her head and inflicting a wound which caused a large swelling. Mr. Stiles was not injured at all. The women from Mr. French's residence hastened to the scene and helped Mrs. Moore and her little one. Mrs. Moore was able to gain her feet in a few minutes. She was frightened concerning the condition of her daughter, who has been ill with whooping cough, and grasped the little girl and carried her to Rowley's drug store. Dr. Zeglio was sent for, and when he arrived he examined the child and learned that the injuries were not serious. At the solicitation of Mr. Harned, of Craig place, Mrs. Moore and her child went to his home where everything was done for their ease and comfort. Mr. Stiles secured another wagon and later in the day the party returned home.

THE MOSQUITO MUST GO

STATE GOVERNMENT DECLARES WAR UPON THE PEST.

Report of Engineer Vermeule, Abolishing to a Large Extent the Mosquito, Depends on the Possibility of Reclaiming Marshes.

The famous Jersey mosquito has got to go. It has been so decreed by the Legislature of the State. Laws are on the statute books empowering the State Geologists to engage assistants and present a plan that will dispose of the mosquito, and a plan has been devised to annihilate him.

State Geologist Smock employed Consulting Engineer C. C. Vermeule to devise a plan to carry out a plot against the insect that has made New Jersey famous and he has done it. The engineer has devoted the summer to the work, and he estimates the cost of carrying out the plans at something like $1,500,000. Mr. Vermeule's plan is submitted in detail in the annual report of the State Geologist, which has just been issued at the State's expense.

The engineer states that in his judgment it would pay the cities of Newark, Elizabeth, Hackensack and several towns in Vice-President Hobart's county to bear the expense of putting his plan's in operation "if only to get rid of that notorious pest that infects these towns—the New Jersey mosquito."

This is the first time in the history of the State that the peculiar species inhabiting this clime has been officially declared in public documents to be "the New Jersey mosquito."

Of course the annihilation of the mosquito was not the whole of the job for which Engineer Vermuele was engaged by the State Geologist. It was only incidental to the real work, but it gets a prominent place in his report. His real work was to submit a plan to reclaim the tide marshes near Newark, Hackensack and other cities of Northern New Jersey, and the reclaiming of these lands, the engineer contends, will forever dispose of the New Jersey mosquito. The marshes are mosquito breeders, he says.

The residents in the northern part of the State are deeply interested in the report made by Mr. Vermeule on the reclamation of the meadow lands. He says: "The tide-marshes commonly known as the Hackensack and Newark meadows extend in a continuous belt about eighteen miles long and with a general width of four miles, from Elizabeth northward to Hackensack and Englewood. The Newark meadows, lying between Elizabeth, Newark and Newark Bay, have an area of 7,289 acres, mostly within the limits of these two cities. The Hackensack marshes have a total area of 20,045 acres, of which 1,465 acres, lying between Hackensack and Wood Ridge, is not tide-marsh but fresh meadow. With this exception, the total of 27,334 acres is tide-marsh, lying at, or slightly above, the level of the high tide. Occasionally an unusually high tide submerges the whole area, and it is always in a saturated condition. It is a breeding place for mosquitoes and other insects. Owing to its trifling value this marshy area is gradually becoming, and is likely to become in the future, more and more a site for offensive manufacturing industries, manure pits, and other nuisances.

FELL OFF A BRIDGE.

Somerville Man Broke His Leg—Brought to the Hospital.

James O'Neil, aged 33 years, a resident of Somerville, was brought to Plainfield Sunday afternoon suffering with a fracture of the femur. The accident happened last Saturday night at Somerville, when Mr. O'Neil fell off a bridge a distance of forty feet. He was picked up by friends and made as comfortable as possible for the night and as he did not seem to be in a serious condition his friends were not in any particular hurry about bringing him to the hospital in this city. Sunday noon it was decided that it would be best to bring the man to Plainfield, and he arrived here about 2 o'clock. He is now confined at the hospital where he will probably remain for the next six weeks.

CLOUDBURST REPORTED.

CLOUDS POUR DOWN A DELUGE ON UNION COUNTY.

The Streets Were Flooded and the Stone Roads Cut Up by Water—The Conditions at Elizabeth and Elsewhere.

While Newark, Orange and Elizabeth were visited by a cloudburst Sunday, Plainfield experienced showers of extreme severity. The streets were flooded, particularly on the outskirts, and the low places under the railroad bridges were transformed into small lakes.

The rain fell steadily almost all the morning and greatly lessened the attendance at the different Sunday-schools and churches. In the afternoon the rain fell lightly at intervals, but finally the clouds cleared away and the sun came out for a few moments.

The rain of the morning was very heavy but there was no wind accompanying it. The storm sewers soon carried away the superfluous water in the streets in the business section but elsewhere it remained most of the day in immense puddles. Under the Clinton avenue railroad bridge, there was a lake that did not disappear until this morning.

Along the trolley on West Front street, and on West Fourth street, there were large puddles, that, in places, covered half of the road. The county road toward Elizabeth was nearly flooded in several places.

The rain prevented the wheelmen from riding and so this city did not see the usual number of visitors awheel. Many little outings were spoiled for the roads were deep seas of mud.

Some cellars were flooded in the low portions of the city but the water was only to the depth of several inches. Very few cases were reported of the kind.

Elizabeth was visited by a cloudburst Sunday morning and the greatest rainfall ever known there in the same space of time is reported. The storm began at 7:30 o'clock, and by 9:30 o'clock nearly three inches of rain had fallen, while the total fall when the storm ceased was 3.67 inches. It ceased at 10:30 o'clock. The water came down for an hour in blinding sheets against which umbrellas were no protection.

The cloudburst caused the Elizabeth river to swell rapidly, and swept away outhouses, barns, fences and large quantities of lumber stored along its banks. For a time the dam at Salem Mills and the Elizabeth reservoir were threatened. The flood rose thirty inches above the reservoir dam even with all the gates opened.

GOT SHOT INSTEAD OF CHICKEN

Farmer Martine Retaliates on a Dog of Murderous Intent.

"Farmer Grator" James E. Martine has not had good luck with chickens this year. There have been dogs that visited his poultry yard and chewed up chickens, old and young. Mr. Martine has chased these canines and so has his hired man, until now the mere sight of a dog recalls to both the slaughter of the innocents that has been going on for the last six months.

George Coes, of Third place, has a favorite dog by the name of "Barty." "Barty" is a nice dog and everybody likes him, except chickens. "Barty" likes chickens, which accounts for the fact that he is now under the treatment of Dr. Pocock.

Monday morning 'Barty" was ordered over to Mr. Martine's and was having lots of fun with the chickens. The hired man appeared. He had something with him. It was a shotgun, loaded with bird shot. The load struck the dog in the side and badly tore the flesh. The dog ran home and Dr. Pocock was called to attend to the animal's wounds.

TRAMPS ROB A CRIPPLE.

A New Brunswickian Fell in With Thieves Returning From Plainfield.

Charles Shepard, of 88 Railroad avenue, New Brunswick, is a cripple. His arms are strong and he wheels himself all around in a tricycle. Saturday night, while returning from Plainfield, and within three miles of home, he was held up in a lonely patch of woods by three tramps, who stole some small change. They overlooked $50 which he had come to Plainfield to collect and which was in his inside pocket.

—Zephyr Hook and Ladder truck has been returned to fire headquarters with the new ball-bearing fifth wheel and the change is a marked improvement over the former method.

—Gazelle Engine Company will be called out for a practice drill this evening, and the members have been instructed to meet at the engine house promptly at 7:30 o'clock for this purpose.

ASLEEP IN THE CHURCH.

AWOKE TO FIND HERSELF ON THE WAY TO THE ROOKERY.

Bridget McCloskey Drank Too Much and Wooed Morpheus Where Minerva is Soon to Preside—Now in the County Jail.

Bridget McCloskey drank too much Mrnday afternoon, and in her befuddled state of mind she imagined it was Sunday and that she must go to church. Being in the vicinity of the old Seventh day Baptist church, corner of West Fifth street and Madison avenue, she walked into the building. The fact that a force of workmen was busy remodeling the interior did not trouble Bridget. She sat down in a pew, and was sound asleep when the workmen discovered her. Policeman McCue was called, and arrested the woman.

Judge DeMeza, in the city court Tuesday, questioned her sharply as to her previous record. It was learned that she had been arrested several times before on the same charge and the Judge sentenced her to pay a fine of $10 or spend thirty days in jail. Bridget went to jail. She is employed as a domestic by a family in Netherwood.

Louis Daufinan, a peddler from Newark, was also arraigned in the city court, charged with selling matches and fly-paper on West Front street without a license. Policeman McCue saw the peddler this morning and, after a warning, arrested him. His Honor imposed a fine of $1, and on failing to pay the prisoner was sent to jail for five days.

CHILDREN'S LAWN FETE.

A Pleasant Party Given at a Fanwood Cottage.

No pleasanter sight has been seen in Fanwood within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, than was seen in front of the pleasant cottage of Mr. Wm. E. Collins, on Park avenue, on Saturday afternoon, the occasion being a children's lawn party on the ninth birthday of Miss Marjorie Morse Collins. About thirty children, probably from four to twelve years old, were there assembled. The piano had been moved out upon the veranda and Miss Edith Randolph, of Scotch Plains, was untiring in her efforts to please both children and the older people. A crowd of happy becomingly-dressed children moving over the green lawn in playing games, their movements unconsciously keeping time to the sound of the music, made a scene long to be remembered. Mr. and Mrs. Collins, ever quiet and hostess, devoting every effort for the amusement of their little guests. There were all kinds of games played and some really fine singing by the little ones. Long tables were spread on the green and shady lawn and refreshments in the shape of cake, lemonade, ice cream, candies, and everything that children love, provided in abundance. Miss Marjorie was the happy recipient of very many beautiful presents. Mr. Geo. E. Hall, from across the street, kindly came over with his camera and greatly to the delight of the children, took several pictures of the group.

There was a peanut hunt, in which Master Duke Crockett, of Bridgeport, Conn., took the boy's prize, a miniature ship, and Miss Madeline Robinson, of Fanwood, the girl's prize, a beautiful bottle of perfumery. There was a little dog belonging to Mr. Wm. R. Stanberry that we think would certainly have taken one of the prizes, only they could not count his on account of the place to put them.

As the sun sank behind the western hills, the little guests departed to their homes, wishing as one little Miss expressed it, "That Marjorie would have a birthday every week."

Nervous

People often wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they start at every slight but sudden sound; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and nervous

Dyspepsia

The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood which is continually feeding the nerves upon refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. In such condition opiate and nerve compounds simply deaden and do not cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich, red blood; gives natural sleep, perfect digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

THOMAS MINFORD SURPRISED.

His Wife Arranged a Pleasant Affair in Honor of His Birthday.

Thomas Minford, of Watchung avenue, celebrated his fortieth birthday on Sunday, and Monday his wife arranged a little social affair in honor of the event that was a pleasant surprise to Mr. Minford. Mr. Minford was not expecting to be honored, especially since his wife had already presented him with several gifts, but this only added to the surprise.

Mr. Minford returned from his duties in New York a little after 6 o'clock and went to his home intending to spend a quiet evening in the company of his family. Shortly afterwards he was confronted with a number of his neighbors who had come in one by one until Mr. Minford realized the moment of the occasion. He did the honors in a gracious manner.

Mrs. Minford had prepared a course dinner, after which sociability by the guests and musical numbers by Misses Liven and Dickey Minford, Miss Agnes Minford and Mrs. Baerd, as well as dancing, passed the evening away.

The guests who were present were: Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. William Wilcox, Collies T. Pond, Mrs. Baerd, Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Rodman and Miss May Rodman.

Mrs. Minford presented her husband with a handsome and costly hand-painted table.

—Mrs. L. Adams, 114 East Front street, is offering the remainder of her spring and summer millinery at less than cost, in order to clear it out, as she needs the room for her fall goods soon to be purchased.

NEW YORK LETTER.

The regular inhabitant does not appreciate the changes which take place in his city; they follow each other so gradually and naturally. It is the occasional visitor viewing the town after long intervals of absence who is most impressed with the evidences of growth and change. But even the busy everyday inhabitants of New York are waking up to the fact that they are practically living in a new city, that the New York as it was and looked two years ago has undergone a remarkable metamorphosis. The consolidation with Brooklyn and Staten Island the creation of a new municipality under an entirely new charter, is not the only change in the condition of the city. The wonderful development of Chicago after the great fire was not more wonderful than the recent development of New York. With the enormous expenditures authorized to precede and follow the consolidation the changes to come will be even more striking. The architecture of the city, its streets, its means of transportation, its artistic and social life, its centres of trade and amusement, its churches and colleges all have undergone, are undergoing, its political transformation. The old landmarks are either in giving way to something new. At the rapid rate this is going on there will soon be left but a few reminders of the old New York. Recently was witnessed the demolition of the Tombs prison, where has existed the criminal history of the city for sixty years. The old reservoir at Forty-second street will soon give way to an immense public library building. The Hall of Records, which is older than the Astor Library, is destined before long. Doubtless the City Hall will follow. The section of the city below the Post-office has changed in the last fifteen years almost beyond recognition. The historic and scenic district on Morningside Park is undergoing a like transformation. Fifth avenue has radically changed. In Brooklyn the development has been slower, although there has been a marked increase in population, but consolidation will undoubtedly work many and quick changes there also.

A Remembrance of Bill Tweed Days.

What are the qualities which bring men to the front in public life? The question is suggested by the personality of two men who have been somewhat prominently in evidence recently, but whose natural qualifications for conspicuous eminence are held to be debatable. The one is A. Oakey Hall and the other Lemuel Ely Quigg. Hall is at the close of an extremely varied career, and Quigg at the beginning of one which promises to be only less picturesque. Hall made his start in public life by the aid of a party boss: Quigg comes to the front under similar auspices. Both may therefore be supposed to possess the kind of endowment which a boss finds serviceable and to be described as that for the chance they have enjoyed in the world of politics. Hall once described a Police Commissioner as being remarkable for his "ancillary" qualities. That perhaps has been his own case. One of his achievements which has passed into history was the sending out, in 1868, when District Attorney and Secretary of the Democratic Executive Committee of instructions to all Democratic canvassers in the city to "produce the count as large as possible." That was ancillary to the secret circular issued from the rooms of the Democratic State Committee requesting telegraphic estimates of the majorities in the several towns and cities in the state, so that the Tammany Ring Tweed at Tammany Hall at the minge closing the polls. The one set of instructions enabled the leaders to know the estimated majorities against them above the Harlem and the other placed it within their power to overcome as of fraudulent canvassing, altered returns, and ballot-box stuffing, to override and defeat the popular will. Another historic achevement of Hall's was also in the ancillary line. The resolution was the handiwork, it is presumably he who drafted it, as it was he who moved it, which provided that the Board of Audit appointed under Section 4 of the County Tax Levy of 1870 should content itself by accepting as valid all claims certified by William M. Tweed and Joseph B. Young, the President and Secretary of the old Board of Supervisors of infamous memory. That little transaction cost the City of New York some $6,000,000 and was one of the things which moved those "angry, hungry reformers" to try to invest Hall with that particular stripe of uniform to which he so felicitously referred the other day. It was, however, as next a piece of ancillary work as it ever fell to the lot of a co-worker with a boss to perform. But that was twenty-seven years ago, and the people of New York have short memories, which is a pity, were it for no other reason than they miss the virulent humor of seeing Oakey Hall at last on the side of the angels—that is, pleading in the Court of General Sessions the cause of Commander Booth-Tucker and the Salvation Army. CYRUS THROP.

"May I ask what is going on in the village?" inquired the observant stranger.

"We're celebratin' the birthday of the oldest inhabitant, sir," replied the native. "She's a hundred an' one to day, sir."

"And tell me, pray, who is that little man with the dreadfully sad countenance who walks by the old lady's side?"

"That's her son-in-law, sir. He's been keepin' up her life insurance for th' last thirty years."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

A PRIVATE SOLDIER.

BY JOHN R. MUSICK.

A dreary plain, a vast waste, with only a green oasis like grove of trees, in which had hastily been thrown up a rude breastwork of sand and stone.

A cloud of howling savages surrounding the earthwork, in which was the great overland stage. It was a scene calculated to excite fear and sympathy. There were women in that beleaguered fort as well as men, and their pale faces, parched lips and dry, tearless eyes evinced the stony terror caused by the prospect of certain death.

A dozen troopers under command of Lieutenant Marks had been sent to guard the stagecoach; when they found themselves confronted by such overwhelming odds that they hastened to the grove as a place of shelter and hastily threw up the earthworks behind which the soldiers and passengers were defending themselves. The face of Lieutenant Marks was almost as pale as marble, and he had long since ceased to speak, for it was now a pitched battle in which every man was his own commander.

Prominent among the troopers was a tall young man in the uniform of a private soldier. There was a look of calm determination on his face, and whatever others may have done, he wasted no shots that day. Every time his rifle cracked a redskin fell. Though he exposed himself more to Indian bullets than any of the others, he seemed to bear a charmed life, for not a shot touched him.

This private was about twenty-four years of age, with a handsome face, dark eyes and black moustache. His name was George Stone, and it was whispered that he was a graduate of Princeton. How he came to be a private soldier in the regular army is a story of sufficient interest to tell even in the midst of battle, especially as it has some bearing on the conflict. He and Lieutenant Marks had been at school together, and both were competitors for the appointment at West Point. Marks, though inferior to Stone in every respect, having the strongest political pull, succeeded, and George went into private life.

George graduated about the same time that his successful rival came from West Point with a commission as second lieutenant of cavalry. He happened to be near the town in which the regiment of which he was quartered. This renewed the jealousy of his companion. Then Miss Mary Sommers came to the city. She was going to her sister in Montana, the coming summer, and as Marks' regiment had been ordered to that part of the country, he hoped he would meet her again, especially as he had fallen desperately in love with her. For the second time his rival was his schoolboy friend, George Stone, who seemed to be more successful than he had been before. Marks had no political pull in love matters, so began to look about for some means to conquer again.

The plan he fell upon was the most nefarious that can be conceived. One day he and some officers and friends quitted Gerguson's saloon, and during the afternoon induced him to drink so much champagne that he became utterly unconscious of his acts and surroundings.

While he was in that state, a recruiting officer was present and induced him to enlist in the regular army as a private, and he was assigned to the company to which Lieutenant Marks belonged.

When Stone recovered consciousness and realized what he had done, he resolved never to drink another drop of intoxicating liquors.

Marks, who had been his constant associate, of course cut his acquaintance, and George was compelled to mess and associate with the common soldier. He was strict and prompt to orders, and studied military tactics as he had never studied any subject in his life. He became the favorite of all save his second lieutenant, who lost no opportunity to humiliate him.

In due time the regiment was ordered to the plains, and he was with the squad sent to guard the stage. It was the first time Lieutenant Marks had ever been under fire; nevertheless it was natural to suppose he would show some courage on this occasion, for Mary Sommers, the girl who had won his heart, was in the stage.

It was galling to poor George Stone to meet the woman whom he loved under such circumstances, and to know that he dared not speak to her. He bore himself erect with a proud soldierly dignity, but was silent. When the attack came he was first in the fight, and it was then that the lieutenant, who shook as a leaf, fled, leaving to show the white feather. He failed to rally to the front with his men, and kept as much out of range of bullets and arrows as possible.

It was George, his stony silence broken only by the exigency of the moment, who suggested the grove as the proper place to make the stand. It was he who proposed that the breastwork be thrown up from the stones and sand.

All day while the cowardly lieutenant, with pale lips and trembling form was crouched under the stagecoach, not uttering a word or taking any part in the conflict.

"Lieutenant Marks," said a sweet musical voice at his side during a lull in the conflict, "why do you not go to the front with your men?"

"I am ill, Miss Sommers; indeed, I am very ill. I can hardly stand upon my feet," answered the lieutenant. And to prove that he was correct, he lay at full length on the ground.

"You were not ill two hours ago."

"No, this has been very sudden and very unfortunate indeed. If I were well I could drive off those rascally Indians; but really I am not able to hold up my head." And it seemed as if he would burrow his head in the sand.

"Lieutenant Marks, you are a coward!" cried the brave girl, indignantly. "You are a disgrace to the service."

He began to lament in a pitiable manner, and she turned away and ran to the side of George Stone, who stood boldly erect by the imperfect breastwork, firing at the savages, who were pouring a storm of bullets about him. Laying one little hand on his shoulder, she said:

"Mr. Stone, it is not right that you should endanger your life."

He turned his pale, stern face upon her, and spoke to her for the first time since he had worn the uniform of a soldier.

"Miss Sommers, this is no place for you."

"Nor is it any place for you," she answered.

"I am a soldier, and it is my duty to die."

"And I am one whom you are defending, and it is my duty to remain at your side."

"Miss Sommers—" he began.

"No, no, George! I will never leave this breastwork while you expose your life—more precious than that of any other in the party."

He was touched by her words. They appealed to his heart. A moisture came into the eyes which had been so long parched, and his frame trembled.

"Miss Sommers—"

"George, you used to call me Mary; won't you do so now? Remember, death is a great leveler, and we are facing death."

"Mary—I must defend you," he said. "I would defend you even if I were not a soldier, and I must inspire these others by my example."

"Better let any of them expose their lives than you!" she answered in a voice of melting tenderness.

"It would be fatal to shirk duty now —the sight of a coward is not better that we take the only chance we have of defending our lives than to die a coward's death!"

"Then let me stand by your side and fall when you do. I shall not care to live if you are gone."

"No, no! Don't insist on endangering your life, Mary. You unman me. I am a coward when you are exposed to danger—I am brave in the thought that I can defend you."

His reason and entreaty prevailed, and she was induced to seek the most sheltered place in the enclosure when the Indians made their next charge on the rude earthwork.

"They are coming again, boys!" cried the brave private. "Now remember that it is better to die a brave man than a coward. Don't waste a shot. Our only hope lies in making a bold, stubborn resistance."

The soldiers, who looked upon him as their natural leader, silently nodded assent.

"Steady all!" cried George Stone. "Now take careful aim. Don't any of you waste lead on the big chief with red feathers."

Every rifle was aimed.

"Steady! Let them come a little nearer before you fire."

Up they came until they were even within long pistol range, and then George gave the command:

"Fire!"

There was a rattling crash of fire-arms, and the foremost saddles were emptied. The big chief with red feathers went down with the others. The riderless horses plunged back among the mounted savages, making the panic more general.

"Load!" cried the young soldier.

Before the Indians had recovered from the confusion the volley had thrown them into, a second volley was poured into them. Then some of the passengers having Winchesters began to fire independently.

The savages drew off again, but they had no intention of giving up the fight. Other chiefs came to take the place of those fallen, and they appealed to their courage for revenge. They had only to point to the many plain, reddened with their blood, and with deafening yells they charged the breastwork.

One by one the soldiers went down. As if by a miracle Stone was still unhurt, and gathering the arms of his fallen comrades about him, he continued to fire with such rapidity that the Indians little dreamed there was but one man left.

"George, let me help you," entreated Mary. "I can load the guns."

"God help you!" he murmured.

At this moment there was a sudden and for some time unexplainable stampede on the part of the enemy. Hastily leaving their wounded and part of their dead they flew across the plain as rapidly as their ponies could carry them. The cause of their flight was the arrival of two hundred mounted soldiers, Major Mercer. George was the only man unhurt save the cowardly lieutenant, who was still under the stagecoach, and who never recovered from his sudden malady until he and the major assured him the enemy was gone.

Miss Mary Sommers went to the city, where her brother, a wealthy miner, lived. Tom Sommers was not only wealthy but influential, and he was soon ready to offer George Stone either a discharge or a commission. He refused to be discharged, and shortly after married the lady whom he had so gallantly defended. He removed to a Western State, from which he was sent to Congress, and subsequently became an official in the war department.

In another engagement Marks had proved to be a coward, and was tried by a court-martial and dismissed from the service. He went to Washington to be reinstated, and while at the war department met the man whom he had injured.

"Well, I suppose you will do all you can against me," said the lieutenant. "You will keep me out of the army if you can."

"No." George Stone answered, "I may be doing wrong in befriending a man whom I do not believe fitted for the position, but my influence shall be given to have you restored, providing you will resign."

Marks died in having the officer dismissed, and then the lieutenant resigned, which removed the stigma of disgrace from him.

It was at the President's reception that Lieutenant Marks met Mr. Stone and his beautiful wife.

"I am proud to meet such a distinguished person as Colonel Stone!" said the lieutenant, decisively.

The fair wife quickly interrupted him with:

"Not a colonel, lieutenant. Private Stone. I am proud to own that I am the wife of a private soldier, a private who is brave in battle is to be preferred to a commissioned officer who becomes deathly sick at a sign of danger."

Lieutenant Marks, very much humiliated, left the White House.

FREEING PULP WOOD OF KNOTS.

The New Machine Accomplishes Better Results Than the Old Method.

A machine has been patented for taking the knots and foreign substances out of wood for sulphite pulp. The finer the wood is from knots and foreign matter the whiter and better quality of pulp it makes. The old method was to have the knots cut by a hand axman, but many of the knots ran crosswise, and could be only be partially removed. Hand picking of the knots was also resorted to after the wood had been chipped, girls and women being mostly employed for that purpose. By the new machine we could afford the enormous expense of hand picking, but in Europe, where women and girls can be employed for a few cents a day, this laborious process was adopted. In consequence the European manufacturers have been able to furnish American markets with a much cleaner and better grade of pulp than is manufactured in this country. But the new machine will clean the chips better than 100 women and girls can pick them, at one time, and the method is simple and costs little. The wood is prepared in the usual manner by passing the blocks through the chipper. The chips are then taken up by a blower and discharged against a steel plate, which disintegrates them, after which they are passed through the machine which cleans out the knots. This is a tank or vat filled with water. After entering the water the chips are submerged by machinery and taken to a carrier. From there the wood chips, now for pulp float and are taken out, while the knots and refinous matter sink and are carried off from the bottom of the tank. The claim of the patent is for an improved method of simultaneously moistening and separating the chips of wood for cooking in the digester.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

It Is on the Finest Vellum and Is Traced Instead of Printed.

One of the curious books in the world is neither printed nor printed. Its pages are composed of the finest quality of vellum, and the letters were with infinite pains and trouble cut out of the material with a sharp-pointed knife or a pair of fine scissors, and it is interleaved with blue paper, and the letters can, therefore, be read as easily as any print. It formerly belonged to the Prince de Ligne, and is now in the library of a noble French family. The title of the book is "Liber Passionis Domini Nulla Materia Compositia," in English, "The Book of the Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ, in Characters, Without Materials of Composition." The matter is a homily probably composed by some monastic preacher of the middle ages. A remarkable circumstance connected with this book is the fact that, although it bears the royal arms of England, no mention of it can be found in any English writing. The book is believed to have been made some time in the thirteenth or fourteenth century. In 1640 the Emperor Rudolph offered for it 11,000 ducats, which in the money of our time would equal about $66,000, and the offer was refused.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Bigger Bell than Moscow's.

The biggest bell in the world, not excepting the cracked one of Moscow, is in the city of Mongoon, a little north of Mandalay, in India. It was cast about the beginning of the century by King Bodawpaya as an accompaniment to the huge brick pagoda which he never finished.

It is said to have been cast on an island and rafted across. The weight is about ninety-eight tons, circumference at the bottom 51½ feet and at the top 26 feet. It averages more than a foot in thickness. The bell itself is more than twelve feet high, and the shackle, which was intended for logs of timber, about 12 feet. The pin in the shackle has a diameter of 16 inches.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Evidence of Former Inhabitants.

If the find of a Colorado miner be taken as evidence, there is little doubt that the human race existed on this continent as long ago as the time when silver veins were in process of formation. Four hundred feet below the surface, a number of human bones, as well as an arrowhead of tempered copper, were found, actually imbedded in silver ore. The bones and arrowhead must have been lying there before the ore formed around them, and that means many thousand years ago.—Golden Days.

COLORED PEOPLE IN EUROPE.

Treated with More Consideration There Than in This Country.

"One of the objections raised against the proposed admission of a colored cadet to the Naval Academy has amused me," said a New Yorker who passes every summer abroad. "It has been said that a colored officer in the navy would subject his fellow officers to humiliation in foreign ports. As a matter of fact, the color line is not drawn in England and in France it is here. At the English inn where I stayed for a month last summer a colored man, really a black fellow, was seated beside me at the table. When the cut of beef was carved it was offered to the colored man first, and then it was served to me. Now, I am a Southerner by birth, and I went to the proprietor of the hotel and objected. He told me if I didn't like it I might go. He said that he made no distinction in color. I remained my self and remained, for the hotel was a good one. Later in Paris I went to the opera one night and saw in a box two well-dressed white women accompanied by three negroes. It was a respectable party, and during the evening several of the other occupants of the house came in to shake hands with the colored men. Such a spectacle in New York would interrupt the opera. As a matter of fact, these colored men were men of means and good social standing in Paris. I was saying that colored men should be admitted to the Naval Academy, but I do say that if they become officers they will meet with more consideration in England and France than they will in this country."—New York Sun.

Forgot to Wear Trousers.

A certain noble lord, who shall be nameless, during his journey north on a political mission changed his costume for a full Highland "rig-out," intending it as a delicate compliment to the land of the kilt. But when he looked at himself in the glass he found that the tailor had cut his kilt too short; so he made up his mind to put on a covering of that kind.

He changed his upper garments and then sat down for a few moments to study his speech. This set him to sleep. He awoke with a start, only to find himself running into the station. Now what happened, he thrust on his hat, and appeared at the window bowing, and this was how he was dressed:

He had a full Highland costume as far as his waist; above were a white shirt and swallow-tailed coat, and the entire effect was crowned with a chimney-pot hat, upon which he sat down without noticing it. His lordship's horror when he stepped upon the platform and felt the keen wind cutting his bare legs changed to speechless agony when the crowd appeared, scrambling out of the carriage with a pair of trousers in his hands, waving them wildly and exclaiming: "My lord, my lord, you've forgotten these."—London Telegraph.

A Methodical Maid.

The anecdote of the woman whose husband asked her to hide the latchkey under the door-mat, so that he might find it on his return at night, and who, to make things doubly sure, stuck a card in the bell plate, on which was written so that it could be easily seen in the lamplight, "The latch-key is under the mat," was probably a mere fabrication.

Nevertheless a lady told a story of her maid at dinner the other evening, very much like one. The mistress was stopping at a hotel, and expecting to be out late, told the maid not to wait, but to leave the key of her trunk and jewel box in the pocket of one of her gowns hanging in the closet (deeming that a safe place), and that she would put away her things herself. On her return she found a placard pinned on her cushion on which was written:

"If you are left the keys of the trunk and jewel box in the pocket of your green walking dress, which is hanging up in the closet."

The Privilege of Peers.

There is a curious case in Fortescue's Reports of the privileges of peers, in which the bailiff who arrested a lord was forced by the court to kneel down and ask his pardon, though he alleged that he had acted by mistake; for that his lordship had a dirty shirt, a worse suit of clothes and only sixpence in his pocket, so that he could not believe that he was a peer, and arrested him through inadvertance.—Green Bag.

Electricity in Mines.

Electrical signaling has been adopted in many mines for maintaining communication between the top and bottom of the shaft. The battery is placed in the engine house, which, in addition, generates in some cases enough power for the hoisting engine and pump. Single strokes of the bell are used, as they are more distinct than the trembling bell.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Called no Names.

Officer: "How is this, Murphy? The sergeant complains that you called him names."

Private Murphy: "Plaze, sir, I never called him any names at all. All I said was, 'Sergeant,' says I, 'some of us ought to be in a menagerie.'"

A Gallery Indorsement.

"I always like to see that senator get up to make a speech," said the drowsy looking man.

"He is very interesting."

"No. When he is on his feet I'm always sure that my nap will not be disturbed by an outburst of applause."—Washington Star.

SCALING WITHOUT A LADDER.

A Pyramid of Soldiers Enables Men to Surmount a 31-Foot Wall.

Corporal Leary, the limberest man at Fort Sheridan, took the chance of breaking his neck and tumbling the storming pyramids of forty-one soldiers in a bruised heap Saturday as he sprang upward from the shoulders of Private Milligan, caught with three fingers of his left hand the top of the high wooden wall behind which lurked the enemy, hung for one perilous instant, and then gallantly pulled himself to the top, seized his rifle, and sprang into the midst of the foe on the other side of the improvised parapet in the Coliseum gallery.

The human pyramid swayed, but held its sturdy place while gallant infantrymen swept up the stalwart shoulders and over the thirty-one foot wall to Corporal Leary's support, while a platoon of Leary-by-marks kept the enemy away in front of the wall.

It was at this point that the regular army officers, who were watching the fray from the Coliseum gallery, led the applause, for Corporal Leary and his command had broken the world's escalading record by three seconds.

When Corporal Leary climbed to the apex of the pyramid and stood on the shoulders of the men in the top row, the tips of his fingers lacked five inches of reaching the top of the wall. The highest wall that ever was escaladed before was twenty-eight feet, and the man who climbed over that in the military carnival at New York broke the world's record then. The wall in the Coliseum was thirty-one feet high, and it took just four minutes to scale it.

Eighteen of the heaviest and strongest men in the regiment formed the base of the pyramid, ten mounted on their shoulders and leaned against the wall, on the shoulders of the eight, ten, four on the shoulders of the six, and three on the shoulders of the four. Corporal Leary scrambled up this escalading pyramid of blue, and stood on the shoulders of the top three, bracing it against the wall.

When he stretched out his arms, and found his fingers would not reach the edge of the wall, he crouched, and then, as the human mountain swayed dizzily beneath his feet, with the mighty effort of delicate effort of a cat he actually let the living bodily five inches upward at the edge of the parapet with both hands, but only three fingers of his left hand went high enough. The pyramid under him was still swaying, and he took the hazardous edge by the three fingers for an instant, and then, with a heave and a twist, pulling his whole body up, caught with the other hand. An instant later he was on the summit side of the barricade.—Chicago Tribune.

He Stopped the Procession.

A clergyman, who was also a wit, once preached rather a long sermon from the text:

"Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting."

After his congregation had listened for about an hour some began to get weary, and went out; others soon followed, greatly to the annoyance of the minister.

Another person started, whereupon the parson stopped in his sermon and said:

"That's right, gentlemen; as fast as you are weighed pass out."

All the others waited until the sermon was ended.—Spare moments.

Havana Cigars that Cost $2 Apiece.

It may interest those who are bewailing the forthcoming scarcity of fine Havana cigars to know that one retail dealer in New York sells and has sold for years cigars of a certain brand at $2 each. He sells on an average about four of that kind every week. An old Spanish friend of mine, who for twenty years was in the cigar business here, assures me that they cost 75 cents, or $1.25 each when put in his store case, so that $2 is not too much to charge for them. The main points of their cost are the large wages paid to the expert workmen who make them, the very large leaf used for the wrappers and the duty.

VARIETIES.

A railroad superintendent in Pennsylvania has issued an order prohibiting the throwing of rice on railway premises. His act is regarded as a covert attack on matrimony.

"The Gaylord (Kan.) Herald" says that the experiment tried there a year ago of electing women to fill all the city offices has proved a complete success. the city business being conducted by them in a careful, economical and efficient manner.

Most of the men in the islands of southwest Japan lead lives of idleness and are fearfully supported by the women. The male is fond of music, some of them being excellent musicians on various instruments, but it is considered disgraceful for a woman to play.

John G. Marshall, of Baltimore, has a farm in Talbot County, Md., which he has made a refuge for birds. They seem to know that they will be safe on it, and large numbers of them have made it their home, some of them having become so tame that they feed with the chickens.

Filial regard is not extinct in South London. A young man charged with hitting a woman over the head with a beef bone, explained that the bone was fighting for a relick in the morning with his mother, and that he thought it time to stop it. A policeman testified that in the same street two women once fought all day long, stopping only for meals, till one went home and died. Her husband had looked on, calmly mending shoes, while the fight went on.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Whatever differences of opinion there may be in Congress in regard to the power exercised by the Speaker of the house, it is none the less a fact that he is chosen as final arbiter for the numerous parliamentary bills all over the country. Hardly a day passes that Mr. Reed does not receive communications requesting him to pass on some more or less intricate point on which local parliamentarians have disputed and failed to agree. Sometimes it is a far-away chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution that gets tangled up over some question, and he never hesitates to respond promptly to the request. Secret wood societies, debating societies and other deliberative bodies write to the Speaker for decisions. Sometimes the more simple questions are turned over to his private secretary, who has become an experienced parliamentarian from long association with Mr. Reed. The secretary formulates the reply in some instances, but the Speaker scrutinizes it personally before signing, and if it does not fully accord with his views the reply is torn up. Requests often come from bodies that have adopted the Speaker's manual. Last winter the Maine Legislature complimented Mr. Reed by voting a copy of his manual to each member of the Legislature.

Gen. Alger's Success in Life.

Gen. Alger is a "self-made man" if anyone ever justified such a term. He began life without a dollar, and has earned by hard work every dollar that fortune has given him. He secured a fair education by "working for his board," and earned enough money by taking care of a doctor's horse to buy clothing. Afterward he entered a law office as student, and had just been qualified for practice when the war intervened and ended his legal ambitions.

Young Alger served with distinction during the war, and at its close went into the Michigan forests to regain his health and fight for a living. He became the greatest lumberman of the Northwest, and practically revolutionized the lumber trade. He was the first man who introduced a steam railroad in the forest wilds of northern Michigan. Before that time lumbering could be carried on only a few months each year owing to the difficulty of transporting logs to the sawmills and lumber to the shipping points. The advent of the locomotive changed all this, made it possible to haul logs the year round, and Alger's sawmills never ceased their humming.

To-day Gen. Alger is a millionaire; how much more than a millionaire it is difficult to say, for his wealth is invested in busy manufactories and mills, giving employment to thousands of Americans and foreigners. He is not a plutocrat, but a business man. He has won a national reputation for his open handed philanthropy, and has always been especially popular among the sterling classes. From his youth Gen. Alger has been a deep student of and interest in political affairs, and has been honored by the voters of his state by election and re-election as Governor. He is an enthusiastic G. A. R. man, and has served as national commander of that organization.

The McKinley Way.

"I served on the ways and means committee with Blaine and Garfield and Kelley, and all of those fellows who had the most to do with the making of the tariff policy of the Republican party. This man was the best of them, without exception, in getting what he wanted. He had a way of accomplishing his ends without much friction. He could smooth the path for his purposes. He was great at fixing up things."

The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, William R. Morrison, was moved to this recent expression of his estimate of Mr. McKinley by some one asking him what kind of an administration Mr. McKinley would give the country. He went on to predict that the President would be a humiliating personality, not by virtue of apparent aggressiveness, but through a remarkable faculty of harmonizing and conciliating, while at the same time moving steadily in the direction he wanted to go. The administration is not yet three months old, but everybody close to it realizes that Mr. McKinley is in fact President. Nowhere is this realization stronger than in the Cabinet. The secretaries are commenting upon it among themselves and to intimate friends. Some of them are older than Mr. McKinley, perhaps some of them felt that they knew a little more in certain lines of information. All of them are men of strong individualities. Yet all of them feel that the President has by himself the power, and has done it in a way to strengthen their administration. There have been differences of opinion. The President encourages the greatest frankness of expression on the part of his advisers. At the same time conclusions have been reached without irritation or friction. The strength of this faculty in the President prompts confidence on the part of his friends that he will be able to bring about the settlement of the Cuban question with credit to his administration and satisfaction to the country. SENATOR.

Evidence of Progressiveness.

The latest evidence of the progressive spirit is to be found in Bowling Green, Ohio, where the visitor is the handsome court house in that town finds himself confronted at every turn by a placard bearing this astounding inscription:

Please do not spit on the floor, Spittoons are placed througout the building.
For that purpose.

INSPIRATION.

God's Spirit brings what most man's spirit asks—
The eternal motive to the finite day,
The highest purpose to the smallest tasks,
The stars themselves to light us on our way.

FINDING A NURSE.

"It is a tremendous worry," said Vansittart, feebly, rubbing his hair the wrong way and laughing.

Dr. Musgrave laughed.

"I wish I could help you," he returned. "I know a young woman who would have suited you in every respect. I can vouch for her character. She has been with some friends of mine as nurse, and is highly qualified. Unfortunately she has a situation."

"London teems," groaned Vansittart, "with nurses who would have suited me in every respect, but have just got a situation. Any one else?"

"No one else at the moment, I'm sorry to say. Have you advertised?"

"I sent two advertisements to the Post, and had seven applicants in reply. Seven! And of those three were spectacles and one had apparently had a paralytic stroke. It is most inconsiderate of Robbins, upon my word."

"Robbins is the nurse who is leaving you, is she?"

"She is; but she is more—she is a treasure. I do not think I ever valued Robbins as she deserved till she gave me notice. She has been with the child ever since my wife died—three years—and I have never had a moment's anxiety or trouble. The responsibility of being a widower with a helpless baby to take care of is simply keeping one awake nights. The interviews, too, are rapidly giving me grey hairs. I betray my deplorable ignorance at every question. There ought to be a book published on the subject, 'Hints to Widowers and Others on Nurse.' The wretches see my nervousness, and attempt to bully me when I say they won't do. One girl does seem all right, however. She came from the registry office this morning."

The respectable practitioner rubbed his hands and smiled.

"Well," he said, complacently, "then your worries are over, after all. You mustn't look for too much, you know. You mustn't expect perfection. You have got a suitable girl—the bother is over."

The widower glared.

"Over!" he echoed. "Why, I've got to go and inquire about her references. I must journey down to Twickenham, or Surbiton, or somewhere, intrude on a woman who has never heard of me, and catechise her till I shall be positively ashamed of myself! Never lose your wife, doctor. You're a medical man—take every precaution. To be the father of a delicate child without a woman to engage a nurse for her is the most awful position possible for the human mind to conceive."

He was of the same opinion next day when he found himself giving a nervous rap at the door of the trim little villa that proved to be his destination. Vaguely also he was conscious that his own house compared badly with this maisonette. The geraniums in the flower boxes bloomed more freshly here, the arrangement of the window curtains was more graceful. There was a spotlessness about the doorstep itself which he missed at home.

"Is Mrs. Hillary in?"

She was in. He was requested to walk into the drawing room. He contemplated its screens, china, photographs and ferns with augmented jealousy. Verily, a woman was indispensable to a house, and this one he imagined, must be a nice woman. The things about seemed to attest it. Perhaps, therefore, she would be the more likely to help him through the interview with kindness. He had the massive sense of humor to ridicule, and the thought that he would look absurd inquiring whether a servant was honest, sober, truthful and competent was awful to him. He turned as the door opened.

"I have taken the liberty of calling," he began, and then he broke off with an exclamation, "Madge!"

"Frank—Mr. Vansittart! Is it possible?"

"More—it's a fact. But—how extraordinary! And you haven't changed a bit!"

She laughed.

"And you didn't know it was I you were coming to see?"

"I hadn't any idea of it," he explained. "After all these weary years —and I didn't even suppose you were in England. I came—it sounds very silly—I came about a nurse's character."

"A nurse? You are married, then?" said Mrs. Hillary.

"I married four years ago. I have been a widower for three. I have one child—a girl."

There was a little pause between them. He fingered his gloves, and his boots looked with a paper knife.

"Your husband is well, I trust?" asked the visitor at last, with an effort.

She gave a palpable start. They had once been so much to each other, and now he did not even know she was a widow.

"I lost him," she murmured, "soon after our marriage."

"I—I beg your pardon. Poor Frank! We used to be very good friends before—at one time, I should say. You have a child?"

"Bertie—a fine little fellow he is! You must see him before you leave. Of course you will stay to luncheon."

"I shall be very pleased to. How strange it is to see you again, Madge. You have forgotten my hasty words when we parted, I hope?"

"I am afraid I deserved them," she confessed humbly. "We were both young and hot-headed. I am glad no harm was done. You were happy in your married life?"

"Y-es," he said, "oh, yes, I was happy. And you?"

Frank was very kind and indulgent," she murmured. "Oh, I don't suppose I merit any pity. But tell me —did not understand—you have really chosen a servant's character? Who is she?"

"She is, I think, a 'Sarah Brown.'" He consulted his letter case. "Yes, her name is Sarah Brown. I want her for the child, if she is capable. Please recommend her if you can. Another disappointment will kill me."

"You want her so badly?"

"I want some one very badly—Sarah Brown or otherwise. You can form no idea of what it is to be a father, Mrs. Hillary—Madge. The responsibility of engaging a nurse is rapidly shortening my life."

"Poor fellow!" said Mrs. Hillary with compassion. "Well, I should think Brown would suit you very well indeed. She is quite qualified, and in fact I am rather sorry I parted with her."

"Why did you part with her? You see I'm becoming an fait at the business. What was the cause of her leaving you?"

"Temper," she replied. "But to be quite candid, I'm not sure the temper was not on my own side. Anyhow, I can give her a good character to you or to any one else."

He heaved a great sigh of relief.

"Then that's settled. How glad I am it is so easily! I think I have dreaded this interview with an unknown 'Mrs. Hillary,' but somehow with you it wasn't difficult at all; even the domestic part of it. You were always reliable, Madge—always with one exception, that is to say. That is a reference of you on the mantelpiece. May I look at it?"

He took it down and scrutinized it attentively.

"Good," he said, "distinctively good. They've caught your expression. When can I see Brown? Presently? Indeed! It might be the girl I took down to supper at the Richmond's ball seven years ago." He put the frame back and turned his gaze to the original. "So might you," he added. "I'm a middle-aged man, and you are just the same. Do you remember that night? You treated me very badly, Madge."

"You were very ungenerous, you mean," she retorted gently.

"Ungenerous? Nonsense! Three times—three waltzes running you gave me the slip at my express request. Well, well, poor Hillary's gone, and here are you and I, two lonely folks, meeting again by the merest chance. Are you lonely?"

"Sometimes a little lonely," said Mrs. Hillary. "But I have my child, you know, and you have yours. She must be a great comfort to you. I should love to see her."

"If I might bring her to you one day," he said, "it would please me awfully. She never sees a woman except the servants, from one month's end to the other. Nor do I. We vegetate in that big gaunt house, the child and I, in a manner that is positively pathetic.

"You would now announced that luncheon was served, and they went into the dining room together.

"If," continued Vansittart, when he had drunk a glass of sherry and was turning his attention to salmon cutlet, "if you would look us up occasionally when in town, and spend the time, it would be real charity on your part, it would, indeed. Not close to the baby, but to me. You—you make me younger, Madge; you make me forget seven whole years?" echoed the lady.

"Actually. In imagination I wear a rose in my buttonhole again and am particular about the fit of my gloves. What an enchantress is a woman! You call this in an hour with a few kind words."

"I would be very startling," said Mrs. Hillary, "if you really wore a rose. Come, let me find you one. And —yes—I must certainly make time to look you up one day. Your condition, as you describe it, sounds simply dreadful."

She selected a rosebud from a glass on the table, and taking advantage of the servant's absence pinned it in his coat.

"That is better already," she said contemplating him critically, her head on one side.

"Do you know I think it was a very fortunate thing for you, my poor old hermit, that Fate threw you in my way again? A few years more by yourself, and you would have been beyond repair. Now you may still be done up."

"With care," agreed Vansittart, "with great care and skill I incline to think it is possible. There is one thing though, that continues to trouble me. Supposing Sarah Brown should leave? You have given me a nurse, and I can view Robbins' retirement with equanimity; but supposing Sarah should want to leave me too?"

There must have been more significance in his tone than in his words, for Mrs. Hillary blushed, and for a moment trifled with her strawberries nervously.

"Sufficient for the day," she murmured.

"Is the good it has given me," he concluded. "Well, perhaps so. It has certainly been a very generous day indeed. But you won't forbid me to look forward to the morrow, will you? A day like this without a to-morrow would be as bad as an hors d'oeuvre without a dinner."

"In some ways," said Mrs. Hillary "look forward for to-morrow by al means—if it should be fine, you may pay me another visit, with the child.'

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE IN COLORADO

She Gives Her Position a Dignity which It Sometimes Lacking in the East.

The report that comes from Colorado of the good work done by the women of the state during the three years they have been enfranchised may give a boom to woman suffrage in the East. One of the difficulties upon which great stress has been laid by the anti-woman suffragists here seems have been answered in Colorado. This is in regard to the unpleasant nature of primary meetings and polling places. This decidedly minor matter was one which, as in other small things of other large matters, has had great stress laid upon it by the controvertionalists. "Woman's presence has made a great improvement in primary meetings and polling places," says the Colorado statement, "and women have found it merly held in stables or drinking saloons, in many precincts, primaries are now held in home parlors and polling booths are arranged in respectable buildings, and voting is invariably conducted with decorum." The decorum in the Representative Hall, where there are women members, is also said to outrank that in the Senate, where there are no women. The general influence exerted by women upon politics is said to have been excellent, and there has been a general study of political economy by both men and women during the last three years than ever before in the history of the State.

It may be that a greater number of women in the newer States are brought into closer connection with questions of government than in older parts of the country, and this has given them an added dignity of thought and action. The conduct of some of the members of some of the women's organizations may be certainly several of the patriotic societies, has been in several instances sufficiently disgraceful to kill any inclination for women suffrage in the minds of those generally well disposed to the cause. And this over small matters. Nothing is more charming and cultivated young matron, who belongs, as she would explain, to the Vere de Veres, who stands in a doorway of a hall and shrieks at a body of voting women where her side is in the minority, "You can't vote; you are illegal; you haven't a quorum!" is not dignified, and her paroxysms of rage afterward not pleasant to see. It savors of personal malignity. This was one example. Many of the so-called conservative women belong to these patriotic organizations. If they took these hysterical methods to defeat woman suffragists they did well. They were certainly effective. It is further stated in Colorado that, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding, woman will not be called upon for military duty.

TAX ON BACHELORS.

An Endeavor in a South America State to Force Young People to Marry.

New women and old women, young maids and old ones, are always and everywhere discussing the question of matrimony, says an exchange. At conventions the subject is brought forward and discussed; and yet statistics from all quarters of the globe present annually a steady decline in the number of marriages. Nowhere, however, has the matrimonial percentage reached so low a point as in the Argentine Republic. The existing state of affairs in that young South American state has attracted attention as a grave social evil, and her lawmakers have men have recently passed the following law:

On and after January 1, 1897, every male from the age of twenty to eighty shall pay a tax until he marries, and shall pay it for two months. Young celibates of either sex who shall, without legitimate motives, reject the addresses of him or her who may aspire to her or his hand, and who may continue contumaciously unmarried, shall pay the same sum of taxation for the benefit of the young person who has been so refused.

Climate of New Zealand.

New Zeland enjoys one of the finest climates in the world. Snow is present, as well as herbage, a never-failing verdure. The small portion of cultivated land yields in great abundance all the fruits and grains of Europe. In New Zealand it is quite practicable to have two crops of the same soil within the year; and in the garden not an inch of ground need remain idle for any length of time.

A Costly Tiny Boat.

A jeweller in Paris has made a tiny boat of a single pearl. The hull is finely shaped, and might serve as a model for a great sloop. The sail is of beaten gold, studded with diamonds, and the binnacle light is a perfect ruby. An emerald serves as its rudder and its stand is a slab of ivory. Its weight is less than an ounce, and it is said to have cost £1,000.— Tid-Bits.

A Cheerless Invitation.

Youngbach—Hello, old man. Glad to see you. Come in and make yourself at home.

Henpeck—Humph! If you can't make me any more comfortable than that I guess I won't stay.—New York Journal.

Profound Ignorance.

"Pa, who was Shylock?"

"Great Scott, boy! You attend church and Sunday school every week and don't know who Shylock was?" cried his father, with a look of surprise and horror. "Go and read your Bible, sir."

Tatters (cheerfully)—Good mornin'!

Since the accomplishment can make a plain gown appear elegant. Change, too, is a vital thing in the fashionable world, particularly in summer, and the more variety we can give to the outfit the more successfully it will fulfil its mission. The coat and skirt gowns of piqué, linen duck, and various wool materials help out this scheme to an unlimited extent, for no end of changes can be made with a variety of vests. Checked taffeta silks, striped across in the form of a yoke, with narrow velvet ribbon, make pretty and serviceable vests, but this little accessory of dress is constructed out of any old bit of lace, silk, or chiffon which may be at hand.

For light weight wool costumes there is a new style of coat with a blouse back and close fitting front, well covered with a large collar, rather narrow in the back, but wide and extending to the bottom in front. Wide collars of some sort are a special feature of the new coats, and many of the very latest gowns, whether they are made with a coat or round waist, quite regardless of the kind of material. Very pretty collars are of taffeta silk, finely tucked in groups or closely all over, and to be correct the tucks must be in the narrowest possible width, with a finish on the end of tiny side plaitings.
